Now I wish to turn to another matter. You have taken the position that, in short, "Christianity is bondage"; and Mr. Savage as a Unitarian is replying to you that "Freedom and Christianity are consistent." Now I am an old-school Orthodox minister, I am a "brimstone corner" Orthodox; and as such I wish to add a word. All my observation and experience unite in saying that Christianity is freedom; and I mean by freedom in part what you mean, but in part your meaning must be modified, for I believe in authority.

Freedom consists in the thinking, teaching, and doing whatever one will that does not tend to destroy the organism of which one is a member. This is all the freedom that is possible in society; and this is all the freedom there is in the Free Religious Association, as a historic fact will show.

At the May meeting for 1869, I, then an utter stranger in Boston, appeared on their platform and spoke freely what I believed to be true as a representative of Orthodoxy. I also regularly joined the Association, if I remember rightly, and was recognized as a member. But the following year a vital change was made in the organization for the express purpose of cutting me off, and the correspondent of the Independent was imprudent enough to tell them right out in so many words, and mention my name. When I read the account, I saw at once how free that Association is. It is free to those who agree with it, but closed to those who differ. Now that is just the freedom of the Christian Church.

But I do not hesitate to assert from personal experience that there is a far greater real freedom in the church to which I belong than there is in the Free Religious Association. How radically I differ from the churches in certain vital matters is well known, and yet I receive an amount of personal kindness which under the circumstances is large.

So, then, I return to my first statement, that freedom never grants more than what is consistent with the life of the organism. And I would add that the Free Religious Association has certain definite aims; it has as real conditions of membership as any church; its chief is to fight Orthodoxy; and its basis and scope are far narrower than that of the Christian churches with which I am connected.

Now I do not write this for the sake of contention, but for the sake of the facts. I love and certainly need freedom as much as most men. I have traversed considerable fields of thought; and have never turned away from any field because the Church or any branch of it had set up a sign warning people away or forbidding entrance. I have set my face with my eyes wide open resolutely towards every field of investigation that promised any points. And the above is my deliberate and carefully reached conviction. And yet to-day, or any other day, I will receive any light which Mr. Abbot or any other man can bring; and I think I have given the evidence by past conduct that I will follow that light wherever it leads and at whatever cost. If now Mr. Abbot is any freer than I am, or the Association of which he is a member is any freer than that vast one in which I am a mere speck, I still wait for the evidence that it is so, having never yet seen it.

JESSE H. JONES.

FREE RELIGION AT THE WEST.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I am just returned from an eight months' course of lectures and labors in Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois. It may interest some of your Western readers to know how my mission was appreciated; and what are present, or prospective, results.

I encountered your faithful and efficient agent, Mr. Green, in Chicago, and understood from him that the work of procuring subscribers to THE INDEX was rather discouraging. It must be so for a variety of reasons. The country teems with cheap literature, mostly sensational and pictorial, and cheap besides. Then in every large city there are Sunday journals, some of them very large and ably conducted of their kind; and these keep multitudes from the churches, and generally in better and wholesomer business than they would be in attending them.

And I think our more liberal congregations are also affected in similar manner. But there is this also to be said: Many of these journals are tuned to most of our advanced ideas and sentiments as to modern theologies, creeds, and worship. Every one, so far as I have seen, opposes the "God in the Constitution" conspiracy, the Bible in the public schools, and all exemption of religious property from taxation. Generally my congregations have been as large as others in proportion to populations and church attendance.

Truth compels me to say that organizations once existing, and vigorously working, are declining or have disappeared altogether; and many of the membership are now found in other associations of most irreputably sectarian and superstitious character.

The Spiritualists are badly scared and divided; in many places, have ceased all operations beyond home circles and séances, or a children's lyceum. These last are continued in some places with commendable zeal.

Half the Sundays of the autumn and winter months I spent in Battle Creek, Michigan. The liberal elements united there, and a good congregation was always in attendance, though many Sundays were sunless, and most inhospitably cold.

My services are already bespoken there for another season. In Toledo, I achieved no such success; though not, I trust, for want of my best effort, continued while hope remained.

The churches are reaping golden harvest all over the West. The modern revival machinery is in full and triumphant operation. Dissensions and discords are getting healed in churches; sectarianism is less violent than formerly; warlike and warring sects are burying the hatchet. All Methodist subdivisions are seeking restoration and union; the many-headed Presbyterian Church is proposing to fuse and weld all into one general assembly; and a mighty effort is already making to mould all evangelical religious faiths into one vast omnipotence, to tread down all opposition, and carry the world by storm.

To do this, there is of course much seeming charity and liberality among sects heretofore as rigid and unyielding as adamant.

All this the Free Religionists, Spiritualists, and other Liberalists of that type, with a most mysterious kindness and infatuation, construe into a gain to their side and their sentiment; and so excuse or justify an indifference towards their own mission of life in this world such have any mission more than dashrooms which die in sunshine), as disreputable to themselves as it must be destructive and ruinous to their cause.

Let all such beware of such softening and surrendering on religious dogma and doctrine. The Church and clergy know well what they are about.

PARKER PILLSBURY.

CONCORD, N. H.

THE UNTENABLE ASSUMPTION OF "REVELATION."

There can be no peace between science and theology until the latter abandon all dogmas founded upon the assumption of "revelation." Without this abandonment their reconciliation is forever impossible. The main trouble does not arise from the antagonism of their statements, but from the assumption that science, as an interpreter of the Supreme Will, can have a rival. As we hear very often from the pulpits, there is no quarrel between religion and science, and can be none; but religion is one thing and a theology based upon the Bible as a revelation from God entirely another thing, with which science can never affiliate. There is an "irrepressible conflict" between science and "revelation." The conflict is not between science and what is claimed to be revealed, but between science and the principle of revelation. It is a waste of time for ministers to attempt to reconcile their dogmas with the facts of science. The trouble is far deeper. We know science to be "God's word"; but revelation is hearsay, a kind of evidence not allowed against a chicken thief. Many free-thinkers are being misled by the attitude science has driven the Church into of modifying its interpretation of the Bible, so as to make it conform to demonstrated scientific facts. They would keep in mind that, so long as the foundation is false, the superstructure is unsafe; which false foundation is the assumption that God's laws are revealed through any other medium than the works of nature.

Any candid mind sufficiently intelligent to be interested on this subject will need no explanation as to what is meant here by the term revelation as contradistinguished from "the works of Nature." It is not incumbent on the free-thinker to show that the Bible to this age is mainly incredible. He should plant himself on easier ground. Indulge the sentimental veneration that claims for the Bible

"the embodiment of all wisdom"; but when "God spake" is quoted, "object" that it is not scientific.

The theology of science is within the comprehension of the most simple. The faith of its devotees is strengthened by every new discovery of truth. Contrary to the history of all other systems, scepticism in regard to it recedes as enlightenment advances. If men having a turn for religion (whatever it may mean to them) desire a reliable groundwork for their faith expressed in form of dogma, the great book of Nature, whose truths no new system of theology can invalidate, is ever within reach. Literally, there are no other truths than scientific truths. The Bible contains no other. A religious truth is scientific or nothing. Whatever truths are in the Bible were from science. God did speak, but only through science. I see in THE INDEX of May 13, now before me, an essay by James Freeman Clarke, in which he sanctions the dogma of Christ's supernaturalism. The severest strain my faith receives in the final triumph of free religion comes from the fact that men I know to be sincere, whose abilities I marvel at and admire, and whose very presence is a magnet to even a stranger's love, can give their support to dogmas founded on conceptions of Deity for which I can give no adequate indications of my contempt and abhorrence. How can men ever agree as to what is right whose differences spring from such a depth? But, Mr. Editor, do not let me discourage you. Z.

"TOO MUCH GOVERNMENT."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

If the writer of the article in THE INDEX of May 13, headed "Too Much Government," had meant by the phrase that the masses of the community are suffering from "too much government" in the sense that they are too much governed, I could readily agree with him. But if, as the article itself reveals, he meant that the people in their collective capacity have too much power, and in their individual capacity too little, I must dissent; and I ask the privilege of stating the reasons for my dissent.

The writer starts with the proposition, attributed to Jefferson, that "that country is governed best which is governed least." The statement appears to me to be a fallacy,—at all events when applied to a government that is the collective will of the people expressed through their representatives.

The theory of the American government is that it is "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people"; and I do not think that the writer of the article will dispute the principle of that theory.

The necessity for government at all lies in the fact that the community needs to be protected, not only from persons outside of the community, but from some of its individual members. Experience has shown, as every one will admit, that human nature possesses faculties and propensities necessary to be developed within certain limits, but injurious to the rest of the community when not directed or restricted by some authority.

In a democracy, that authority is public opinion which we call government. It is the first duty of government to secure to every member of the community the full possession of all his rights, and it involves the prevention of the encroachment of any member upon the rights of others.

This duty can only be performed by placing the power to govern within the hands of the government.

Now, in order to ascertain whether the evils of society are owing to too much power having been placed in the hands of the collective authority, we ought to decide what the ultimate governing power really is, and by whom it is possessed; because, if it should appear that the powers that govern society are not subject to collective authority, collective authority is not responsible for evils that it is too weak to prevent or to cure.

Can any one doubt that the supreme power in this community to-day is wealth—the national wealth? If it can be shown that the control of this wealth is exercised by the government, I will admit that we have "too much government"; but, if it can be shown that the ownership and control of the national wealth is in the hands of individuals and large corporations, then the responsibility for the evils complained of does not rest upon the government, but upon the community that has placed, or has allowed to remain, such vast powers in the hands of a few of its members.

In a nation where the control of the national wealth is subject to one man, the government is subservient to his will and pleasure, and is good or bad according to the character or ability of the despot.

In a nation where the control of such wealth is entirely in the hands of a landed aristocracy, the government is subservient to the interests and will of such aristocracy.

In a nation where the control of such wealth is in the hands of a small class of its citizens, that class possesses the governing power of such nation, and really controls all its public interests.

Is not the latter case that of the United States to-day?

Is it not patent to all observers that the power that controls elections, legislation, and public official appointments, is wealth in the hands of influential corporations and various private interests of comparatively few persons?

Is it not also evident that they use the power accompanying the possession and control of the national wealth to further their own interests, not those of the public, and to encroach still further, as opportunity offers, upon the rights and independence of their fellow-citizens?

But I fear that I have already occupied too much of your space in endeavoring to establish only one point. Still it is an important one, and I think you will admit that, if the power that really governs is outside of the government and controls it, then the remedy may be, not in taking from, but in adding to, the government of the collective authority of the whole people. W. G. H. S.

WINE AND LAGER BEER vs. INTEMPERANCE AND CRIME.

The Santa Barbara (Cal.) Weekly Press says that there are a large number of breweries in that city, and that the American population have largely adopted the German habit of using lager beer and light wines in place of whiskey, "greatly to their advantage."

The same issue of the Press (April 17) contains the message of Mayor Richards, from which we learn that the city is remarkably free "from vice and crime of all kinds"—that "the Police Court has literally nothing to occupy it, and the city jail is almost continuously without a tenant. . . . Especially is the vice of drunkenness of small proportions, and seems likely to grow less in our midst."

These statements are respectfully commended to the attention of Dr. Miner and the editor of the National Temperance Advocate. Let them compare this state of things with those in another new city, in New England, where under Prohibitory law strong and bad liquors have been surreptitiously consumed instead of wine and beer, which the law has equally prohibited. Rev. Mr. Higgins, of Gloucester Mass., in a recent discourse in that city, published in the Gloucester Advertiser (March 19) represents that there are "two hundred dram-shops" in operation there, and that "gambling-dens and brothels abound," while vice, and crime, and poverty are correspondingly prevalent.

Let our teetotal and prohibition champions look on this picture, and then on that.

J. L. HATCH.

SANTA CLARA, Cal., April 25.

P. S.—Another new city is San José, Cal., of about the same population as Gloucester (15,000), where regulation instead of prohibition has ruled, and where, as in Santa Barbara, native wines and lager beer are largely used instead of whiskey; there are but eighty dram-shops (instead of two hundred); gambling-dens and brothels are very few; and drunkenness, poverty, and crime comparatively rare.

J. L. H.

BEFORE A MAN can be a king of business or a king of men, he must be monarch of himself. A great part of the secret of being able to control others is self-control. There is a great deal in merely being able to feel money in your pocket and not spend it. I must own that it is a very rare gift with the literary class. I have known a young writer on receiving $30 for an article invite a friend to drive with him and order two bottles of $6 wine. Such men, whatever their talents, usually remain drudges all their lives. The simple reason, in fact, why property, always and everywhere, gets into such enormous masses, is that it is the nature of the strong to husband their resources and themselves, and it is the nature of the weak to squander both. If you want to test a young man and see whether Nature made him for a king or a subject, give him a thousand dollars and see what he will do with it. If he is born to conquer and command, he will put it quietly away till he is ready to use it as opportunity offers. If he is born to serve, he will immediately begin to spend it in gratifying his ruling propensity. That propensity may be, usually is, perfectly innocent. In my youth, for example, books were my temptation, and many a fierce tussle I have had with myself, while standing before the window of a bookseller. The first time in my life that I ever had $2 all at once, I instantly bought a Shakespeare with it. Knowing my weakness, I used to leave my money at home when I had any, in order not to be surprised into buying a book; but feeling that this was base cowardice, a contemptible avoidance of the enemy, I afterwards made it a point always to have money in my pocket. Often I have courted temptation, standing long before a window gazing upon some particular book that I had been longing to possess for many months, and then stalking away with a proud consciousness that I might have bought it, and didn't. But in my case this was not strength, but mere vulgar necessity. The strong are they who really might lawfully and properly indulge an expensive taste, and yet can wait till they can indulge it with absolute safety.—James Parton.

THE Advance, alluding to the objection of the Catholics, that the schools are "godless" because they do not give religious instruction, says:—

"There might be some force in this objection, if it were true that all the education which our children receive must be given during the school hours. But this is not so. The secular studies and methodical discipline of the school-room do not interfere in the slightest degree with appropriate religious instruction at home—nor yet with special religious instruction out of school hours by the priest or any other religious instructor. We are glad to see the necessity of religious culture urged, by whomsoever it is done; but our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens must not expect others to be influenced by the sophistry of the 'Godless schools' argument until, at least, we see the Romish priesthood telling parents they must not, under any circumstances, send their child to the meat-market, unless the butcher before delivering the package of sirloin or chop will see to it that the little fellow first recites a bit from the catechism, and an Ave or two to the Virgin Mary.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen.—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents; singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.50
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old. of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Paraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court, or Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Relationship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and other Pieces.....	2.00
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. ("George Eliot's" translation. 3 vols.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
A Man of Letters.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of, Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronomics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Philosophy of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.00
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D.C.) What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
8.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Science of Language. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. each.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The South, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism. Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLIV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays; Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pennidens.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in the Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.0
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.60
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Eltingwood Abbott.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbott, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10 A.M., 2, and 7 P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn., —AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY 335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance. Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested. The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance. On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbott, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

JUST PUBLISHED.

National Hymn and Tune Book.

Now ready. Adapted for Opening and Closing Exercises in Schools and Seminaries, for Congregational, Social, and Home Singing, 128 pages, 200 choice tunes, 340 hymns. Price but 40 cents. $35.00 per Hundred.

Clarke's Organ Voluntaries, $1.50. Batiste's Organ Voluntaries, $2.50.

CLARKE'S REED ORGAN COMPANION.

A valuable, useful, and brilliant collection of Exercises, Airs, Songs, and Pieces for Reed Organs. Price $2.00.

Strauss Dance Music, Violin and Piano, $1.00. Winner's Party Dances, Violin and Piano, .75. Winner's Violin and Flute Duets 1.00

CLARKE'S DOLLAR INSTRUCTORS

For Reed Organs. For Piano. For Violin. Useful, cheap, instructive Books with Exercises and numerous Attractive Airs for practice.

Sold by all the principal music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO., 711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPEL. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN, WEST NEWTON, MASS.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of Price.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor. A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers, P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREE

SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fredk Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,

256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1875.

WHOLE No. 284

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in:—

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures should be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

INDIGESTION being defined as the "remorse of the stomach," remorse is now defined as the "indigestion of the conscience."

KING GEORGE was got rid of by the Revolutionary War, King Cotton by the Civil War; but King Caucus still remains. Can we not break his sceptre without a war?

THE "Friends of Human Progress" hold their twenty-seventh Annual Meeting at Waterloo, N. Y., on the twelfth and thirteenth of June. Giles B. Stebbins, George W. Taylor, H. L. Green, C. D. B. Mills, and others, are expected to address the meeting.

REV. JAMES MCGLEW, a Catholic priest of Chelsea, Mass., has been sued for slander in the sum of $2,000 by Robert C. Fanning, one of his congregation, because the reverend father denounced him as living in "mortal sin" on account of having been married by a civil magistrate, and not by himself. The priest has spoiled his own case in a Catholic point of view by admitting the validity of the marriage. If he had been pluckier, he would have denied it. The matter is not yet settled.

REV. PHILLIPS BROOKS said last week that "Christ was really at the root of all our modern commerce—its life and inspiration." It is well understood that Christ is at the root of the Church; but if he is at the root of "all our modern commerce," including the Whiskey Ring frauds, he ought to be extradited and sent to the penitentiary. In filching for Jesus all the glory of "modern commerce," Mr. Brooks is a trifle incautious; the argument he handles carries a sting in its tail, and may do him a mischief.

THE PARIS correspondent of the Nation said in a recent letter: "I could not have imagined a few years ago that the rabies theologica could have seized the men of my generation as it has done lately." And he adds that Bismarck "has so entangled the spiritual question with the ordinary rivalries of nations and races that the world may feel itself on the eve of a hundred-years war." There are finer senses of perception than are possessed by the complacent people who scout all warning words as "alarmism." The "era of good feeling" is never eternal, but precedes a storm that is sure to come.

THE BOSTON Journal of May 19 says: "The legislature has concluded that the report of the Commissioners on Taxation involved so many important principles, and affected so nearly many vital interests, that it would be wiser not to attempt any change in the law, but to allow the next legislature to consider the subject. It is doubtful whether that body will be any better qualified than the present to discuss this important question, and so we shall drift along. The mass of information collected by the Commissioners will always prove of the highest value, however, and something has been gained in this respect, as we have a starting point secured."

THE CATHOLIC Bishop McQuaid made this menacing declaration in a recent address at Cincinnati: "I stand here and say that, unless we bring this thing of the school taxes to the ballot box, we do not deserve the name of Catholics. It may not be necessary to bring it to the ballot-box; we may, by making a demand, effect a compromise; we may obtain a platform on which we can stand. Politicians will come to us. Irish, German and American Catholics will not be so patient as their fathers have been. The platform of the schools is not now for us. It is for Jews, for Infidels, for Protestants, but we are under it. Suppose we get strong enough to rise up. Remember, the platform is on us; where will the platform be then? Men will learn that we have something more to do than praying; we must vote, and the laymen must work."

REV. WILLIAM G. ELIOT, D. D., of St. Louis, has proved himself to be the Disraeli of American Unitarianism. Although one of the most determined of conservatives, he has by a sudden leap placed himself at the head of the radicals. At the recent meeting of the Western Unitarian Conference at Chicago, he introduced resolutions "deprecating and deploring the action of the American Unitarian Association in its effort to limit the fellowship of the Unitarian body," and demanding the "restoration" of Mr. Potter's name to the Year Book list of Unitarian ministers! The Conference passed these resolutions unanimously by a rising vote!!! The rupture between the two wings of the Unitarian denomination is fairly initiated by this action. The Western Conference now declares that the refusal of a Unitarian minister to accept the Christian name does not interfere with his right to be regarded as a Unitarian minister; and its vote is tantamount to throwing Christianity overboard—though it does not intend or perceive this result. But the Eastern Unitarians perceive it plainly enough, and will never accept it. A split is inevitable.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON read his lecture on "Eloquence" to an invited company at Mrs. Sargent's last Wednesday. It was a privilege indeed to listen once more to this venerated prophet of the new age, whose commanding character lends to every word he utters such weight as nothing else can give. Mr. Weiss well said that some young man will arise in the future to quote Mr. Emerson's own words as the best illustration of the subject of his present paper; and he instanced, with rare felicitousness, Mr. Emerson's characterization of the grand principles of the Declaration of Independence, which Rufus Choate had called "glittering generalities," as being on the contrary "blazing ubiquities." There is no other man living in America who so extorts the reverence of the forward-looking minds of the century,—not only by the majesty of his thought and spirit, but equally by the supreme purity and nobleness of his personality. At the recent Centennial at Concord on the nineteenth of April, which we attended chiefly to hear Emerson once more in public, the only word of his brief address which we caught in the confusion of that vast assembly was the one word—"Nature." How fitting, how characteristic! This is indeed a great priest of Nature, and the world that once derided now delights to do him honor.

HOW FAR OFF now seems the vast convulsion of the Civil War, which remorselessly swallowed up so many of the precious young lives of this people! Ten years of peace, bought by their blood, have rolled over the land; and once more the mighty nation pauses to lay a few quick-fading flowers on their graves. This is the sacred Communion Service of the Church of the Republic—a holy memorial hour of Freedom's martyrdoms, a hushed remembrance of great agony of spirit, a reverential cherishing of gratitude and love to the heroic dead, a tribute of the universal heart to the sanctity of a grief that is now subdued to tender melancholy, yet still is swift to tremble into tears. Look, O ye blind clamorers against the destructiveness of Free Religion, at this new "Lord's Supper,"—this exquisitely beautiful institution of DECORATION DAY, sprung fresh from the innermost soul of the Great Republic, as a new creation of that religiousness which abides eternally in the human heart, and now pours itself out in spontaneous worship and homage to the divine majesty of natural Humanity. By the green graves of their many saviors, the people celebrate the great rite of Free Religion with boundless and unutterable reverence for the high virtues begotten by the love of liberty in common men; they have found their church in the Republic, their Messiahs in the heroes that died for them, their Holy Eucharist in the new Sacrament of Flowers.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 MAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEG, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

Public Morals and Public Reforms.

WESTON SUPER MARE, April 12, 1875.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Mr. Abbot.—The time which must intervene, when I read anything in THE INDEX, before any remarks on it which I can make appear in the paper acts more powerfully than I could have expected against my impulse to write. I find it prevents my taking a natural place in the circle of debates. More immediate calls for utterance in many directions draw me off. Moreover, when I see the amplitude of the communications which press in and fill your columns, this also seems to cry aloud that I am not wanted.

Not but that, I confess, I am very often put into a pugnacious spirit by what I read in THE INDEX, alike from your pen and that of your co-editor, Mr. Stevens. Of Atheism I say nothing, nor of Spiritualism. If you will accept a few remarks as from a very friendly spirit, without imposing on me the duty of looking out in the back numbers and verifying as yours or his the judgments which I oppose, I have something to write on two topics.

I. Politically, the very weakest point of J. Stuart Mill's doctrine was his wish to disown or bring to a minimum the moral action of the State. This is precisely to play the game of popery. [I now say popery, not Catholicism.] The "Catholics," as they wish to be called, have no longer a shadow of right to complain if we never call them anything but papists. The English non-conformists have at last found this out. In my younger days the leading spirits among them went beyond J. S. Mill; for they deprecated national education, saying that it was only in harmony with a military monarchy like Prussia, which desired to indoctrinate a nation and keep it in leading strings. Education should be left to the discretion of private citizens and to the voluntary zeal of churches. The State should do nothing, but, according to Joseph Hume's favorite phrase, "protect persons and property." In short, the State was to set in action the policeman, the judge, the hangman, and the soldier; but not to train the intellect or care for the morals of a nation. When pressed with the argument, "Do you desire lotteries again to be made legal? Would you legalize gambling-houses?" they had a shabby reply, that clerks and shopmen were tempted by such opportunities to embezzle their employers' money, in foolish hope of being able to replace it by success; and that, where others would be ruined by a man's vice, the State was justified in interfering. I call this shabby, because it was only a money question which opened the eyes of the disputant; who ought to have known that not the vice of gambling only, but every great vice, ruins others besides the vicious man. When another topic was urged (if one had a quiet opportunity); namely, "Do you desire the laws against brothels and procurers to be repealed?" this, as far as I can attest, made religious persons aware that they were going too far in saying that the State had no moral duties.

I do not know, but I think, that J. S. Mill desired to have no marriage laws, and no restriction on the sale of a woman's person, by herself or by her agents, privately or publicly. The broad principle which he avowed, that "society" has no right even to stigmatize "immorality" by opinion, by exclusion from intimacy, by pulpit preachings, seems to carry with it à fortiori an intense disapproval of all State-action for morality as such. He resented it as a great impertinence of "society" that people were scandalized, when he travelled and lodged in hotels with another man's wife, who at pleasure left her husband and stayed for days at his house. The admirers and disciples of such teaching are sure to carry out to its logical but worst extreme its weakest sides. But J. S. Mill himself, if he had been a despotic ruler (so deep a fund of real goodness was in him), I make no doubt, would have raised barriers of defence for minor girls against the league of avarice and lust, and have enacted such wise regulations for the equal reward of women's work to men's for the same service, as to remove the causes of our basest vices and direst evils. He had a wonderful reserve of exceptions and pleas for common sense, unforeseen by most who studied only his generalities. But to me his general statements are emphatically erroneous. Not only is "society" right in concerning itself with the moral conduct and moral principles of its members, but the right is one of self-defence, and vital to its existence. We of necessity are concerned to know whether our neighbors are sharpers and robbers, or honest and kindly men; whether, if allowed access to our families, they are safe companions for our children; whether they are admissible as suitors to our daughters; in short, what sort of intercourse between them and us is permitted by prudence. And if we find our neighbors to be (according to our standard) immoral, self-defence impels us to one or other course; either to migrate into some more congenial society, or labor as we best may to reform those around us,—thus indulging in what J. S. Mill calls impertinent criticism. Inaction will sink us towards the level of their immorality.

The considerations which induce each family privately to concern itself with the morals of its neighbors are equally efficacious on the State collectively. To understand the motives and the necessities, we must look to a small community,—say, in an island of the Pacific, in single tribes of American Indians, or in an ancient Greek city. The first business of such a State may be to defend the public crops from marauders, and the persons of the community from kidnappers. To defend the crops is beyond the power of individuals, and is almost identical with maintaining the frontiers unchanged. An aggressive neighbor pushes his own frontier forward by first plundering and desolating, making a margin of cultivation unsafe and useless, until he can seize it for himself. In this stage of things domestic police is of less importance than public defence: each head of a household must protect his family and its goods.

Does, then, Joseph Hume's maxim that the State must only care to defend persons and property really make the interference of the State in morals an impertinence? Nay, but in this stage its intrusion into morals is apt to be carried to its maximum. What is its measure of morals—mos majorum, "the custom of ancestors"? For eccentricity of opinion there can be little tolerance. Every grown man is counted on as a warrior liable to serve the public at call. He must submit to juvenile training in the use of weapons: he must learn obedience: he must keep his body in a fit military condition. His dress, or his no-dress and paint, are matters regulated for him. Liberty, when in actual involuntary service, there is none; and at other times less liberty than we now enjoy; for, in a little community to which every man is important, all are concerned to watch all. To the collective society, i. e., to its supreme council, which guides the whole, it is highly important to know the moral qualities of individuals,—whether they are faithful, brave, just, steady, capable of exercising command beneficially; or on the contrary passionate, avaricious, volatile, fickle, and false. Even from a military point of view it is of intense interest to the State to have its citizens virtuous, taking the word virtue as men in that stage understand it: and, unless it embraces a large range, and more than we now succeed in securing, weak communities cannot hold together. Sensual vices, at which powerful States wink, are unendurable in the earlier stage. As drunkenness in a soldier, or gluttony which makes him sleepy, may endanger an army, such vice is not treated leniently. Habitual over-eating in time of peace, which makes the body unwieldy and unfit for war, is accounted to be a public offence, liable to be corrected by forcing the person to run races under the whip of bystanders, and thus thin down his fat. A little State is apt to be overwhelmed by its neighbors, if its population decay; hence it cannot but look earnestly to the growth of families and be displeased at bachelorhood, and at vices which lessen the number of its stout defenders. Laws of marriage and laws to promote marriage within suitable years, laws to forbid the birth of children without responsible and able parents, were regarded, and rightly regarded, as of prime necessity. Thus, even when the end proposed is simply the defence of a small community from pressing enemies, the nature of things forces the State to concern itself with the morals of the citizens.

When conquest has consolidated political communities into larger masses, the State, attaining robust existence, is no longer so obviously endangered by private vice; and it often happens that notorious vice indulged in by princes or high officers makes their punishment of the same in lower persons invidious. But this does not alter three facts, which remain immovable: (1.) that the comfort, safety, physical and moral welfare of each household, depends more on the morals of the surrounding community than on anything else: (2.) that laws and institutions, fundamentally bad, promote immorality too emphatically for anything to counteract, and, when good, lay the best and surest foundation for the ennoblement and general welfare of the nation: (3.) that private vices sap the strength of the strongest nation, and prepare its humiliation or destruction. Thus at every time, in every stage of national existence, the private citizen has an urgent interest in the morals of those who surround him, and a direct just motive to claim from the State a solicitude for the public morals; and the State, whether in self-defence, or in wise concern for the people of whom it is the organ and representative, is bound to exercise such solicitude.

Why should such men as Joseph Hume or J. Stuart Mill ever have been jealous of this? Did they not know that freedom without morality is impossible? Did they fancy that virtue was slavery? No: but they unjustly took for granted, that a State which was anxious for virtue would set up a sectarian idea of virtue, perhaps dictated by some traditional church; and, under pretence of caring for virtue, would promote sacerdotal ambition. Under this fear they advanced a theory which practically aggrandizes the priest, and debases the statesman. English non-conformists have a century back applauded the idea, that to educate the people was the business of the churches, not of the State. "Moral teaching" (said many a Baptist or Independent minister to himself) "belongs to us: what can statesmen know about it? Let them keep to their own domain, to see that we are well paved, well drained, well lighted, and well guarded: let them arrest pickpockets, ride down highway robbery, and beat off foreign enemies: but let them not try to indoctrinate our people: leave that to us." So soon as Lord Grey's Reform of Parliament admitted Dissenters in mass to share the central organ of power, the new theory (soon called Puseyism) sprang up in the clergy, which regarded the State with alarm, desired the separate independence of the Church, and claimed the public education for the Church, as distinct from the State. Thenceforward for near forty years Church and Dissent struggled, which of the two should have the educating of the people. Each was very liberal, each taxed its own members by moral pressure. New schools arose on every side; new training-schools for masters were established by the State, which was ever increasingly lavish in its grants to voluntary schools of either side. But meanwhile the same State promoted drunkenness by a perpetual increase of drinking-shops, and experience has proved that the worst part of the population (the children of drinking parents) cannot be got into the schools. The non-conformists have at last been driven to confess that the State, as such, must conduct national education; but the Anglican Church, vehemently reinforced by the Catholics, calls this "godless," and contends for the principle that only a priest can or may teach morals. To hold Joseph Hume's maxim, I say, is to play the sacerdotal game. The papacy has regained its hold on France in seventy years, solely through the ambition of two Napoleons. The first Napoleon, to make himself an emperor, crowned by the Pope and marriageable to the old European dynasties, gave over the moral teaching of France to the Catholic priesthood, who (their French independence being confiscated) leaned on the Pope for support, and quickly became Ultramontane. Charles X. tried to commit the public instruction to the Jesuit Order, but was expelled from the throne for other offences before his schemes could bear fruit. The second Napoleon (who called himself the third) bought his election to the presidency by promises to the priesthood; and, when by his perfidy to his oath of office he had made the Republicans incapable, was constrained by his fears always to play for priestly support. Hence in his twenty years of power the papal party, in fact the Jesuits, educated France; and on France, Belgium, and Ireland now base their hopes for the future.

The cardinal idea of priesthood now is to indoctrinate the people with its own sectarian morals. Catholics who condescend to open to me their grievances complain of it bitterly as persecution, that Catholic children should pass many hours of the day in a school which has no pictures of the saints hung up on the walls. "Without this," they say, "tender minds cannot imbibe the peculiar reverence for saints which we regard as essential." But we need not appeal to extreme fantasies. If you want breadth of moral view, you must not appeal to any particular church as arbiter in morals. Each is apt to superadd specialties of its own; either by over-estimating some virtues and depressing others, or inventing fictitious virtue. Sometimes by the very force of its history, a church wholly omits one portion of moral teaching. The contest just now between Popery and governments is distinctly on this: "To whom do the children of a country belong?" The Pope says, "They are mine." "Nay," replies every statesman, in the name of his government, "They are ours;" ours to "educate, morally as well as industriously." If the papal policy prevail, England, the American Union, and Germany will be rent into churches as Turkey is; patriotism will take the form of zeal for one or other church; intermarriage will be confined within the limits of each ecclesiastical body; the community, reared in isolated repulsion, will have no cohesiveness; and, even if not otherwise immoral, will be essentially weak against the foreigner, since it will have no politics but ecclesiasticism.

I am aware that many persons in the American Union, who are decided and downright on the necessity of national education, are jealous, nevertheless, of legislation based on moral views. In part, this may arise from a perception how many ambitious persons, scarcely affecting to be virtuous, worm themselves into high places. Such men are not likely to originate beneficial law; yet in public debate of a moral question they are not at all likely to be influential. In vice which enslaves its victim it is often observed that the vicious man pleads on the side of virtue. In Maine, I understand, the votes of drunkards carried the original Maine Law, to the surprise of public men; so in England our hard-drinkers prevalently take side against the drink-shops. Indeed, so far as a vague survey of history can guide us, it does not appear that either princes in secret council, or Parliaments which debate publicly, ever pass laws with the avowed object of favoring the vices to which individuals among them are attached; the worst attributed to them is neglect to punish such vice, or efforts to screen it, when others would drag it into light and destroy it. This increases the difficulty of attaining good and wise laws, but certainly cannot tend to prove that laws to promote morality are not good and wise.

If any one limit national education to industrial training, he may consistently maintain its rightfulness, while denying that the State ought to concern itself for the public morals. But in no great nation of Christendom is so limited a view taken of education; nor could it be justified. In proportion as law and constitutions become complex, a citizen's duties need to be taught. To attain the skill which can earn an honest livelihood is highly important,—perhaps is the first matter of all; but it does not supersede the necessity of learning what the law exacts of him, or what are the duties of each citizen. The State is concerned in making each proud of his native institutions, in order that he may patriotically uphold them, and, by industry attaining homely welfare, may become conservative of the public weal. Thus moral interest and moral training recur, as the necessary duty and claim of the State. It need hardly be added that herein the great historical philosophers of the East and of the West are agreed.

II. There are those who fancy they are philosophic by deprecating zeal for REFORMS IN DETAIL. A ready stone to fling at every reformer, moral or political, is to call him "a man of one idea." The imputation is always plausible, and, true or false, is readily believed. Sometimes it is emphatically false, yet apparently true. In the hard work of a campaign, the general and the responsible officers, the surgeons and the nurses, have little time for anything but the work immediately to be done; and, however much their brains may abound with thought, all must lay aside or sacrifice other ideas to the one idea of the campaign. Indeed, the one idea may be so full of meaning that to maintain and develop it against the surrounding enmities is the task of a life full of various and noblest virtue. Such was eminently the case with the struggle against slavery. If we now see that through the half-heartedness of politicians and the obstinacy of old oppressors the work of liberation is but half completed, is that a reason for treating the zeal of freedom as "a glittering illusion," and warning us against one-sidedness? To deprecate action against concrete evil, and teach us to be satisfied with "science," i. e., with mere talk of generalities, is to do exactly what the upholders of every injustice wish.

The mass of a nation cannot learn morals, nor justice, nor science of any kind in the abstract. A book on the "Whole Duty of Man" is generally dull, and seldom of practical avail. The science of morals, in modern acceptance, chiefly consists in its metaphysical basis; practical morals are developments out of a few broad precepts or principles. The majority of men and women pass through life, entirely unaware that this or that conduct in detail is virtually commanded or forbidden by some general principle with which they are familiar. Or again, some conduct which they know to be a violation of morality is so common that they suppose it is somehow inevitable, and cannot be severely blamed. It is very hard to unteach them by any argument, any parade of science. Until some practical crisis arrive, that shows in how downhill a course they are going, an angel from heaven might preach in vain. But when the crisis arrives, which a wise man sees to be the great opportunity, he must despise the outcry which would disparage him as a man of one idea. Whatever is the deadly national vice, or sin, or crime, at any moment, that is the fit subject of attack, if there be enough of political freedom to make the attack possible. In France at this moment good men and women avow that they must somehow conquer the right of free public meeting and free press, before it is physically possible for them to contend against the vice which they know and see to be eating out the heart and strength of the nation. It may be so. A more irregular form of preaching, reminding one of John the Baptist, Jesus, and the apostles,—which perhaps our men of science would call fanatical,—may be the only one now possible to France. Men who boast of calm and comprehensive views have seldom any taste for martyrdom. Their praise of quietly expecting gradual improvement is more selfish than heroic; nor is it in that way that injustice and immoralities or sacerdotal usurpations are subdued. To be patient under other people's misery is not a very difficult virtue. To begin by professing admiration of reformers, to proceed to disparage them, and presently to entitle them (or at least insinuate that they are) benevolent busy bodies, manipulators, tinkers, and hobby-riders, moves my indignation. Forsooth, like the Deity, we are to look, not to partial and immediate results, but to a comprehensive and gradual fulfilment, and thus are to become philosophic coöperators with one another and with him. As if we were gods! As if we were capable of anything but aiding the principal struggles of our own day! As if one great contest, such as that against a persecuting church, or that against lawless royalty, or that against female degradation, or that against the use and free traffic in intoxicating drinks or drugs, were not sufficient for the intellect and spare energies of nine hundred and ninety-nine persons out of a thousand! It was an axiom with Mr. Cobden that "a nation can only have one agitation at a time." This is not true to the letter; for a nation has more than one circle of publicity; but, if interpreted that the agitation cannot become truly national, the statement is probably correct. A movement which is to be carried into politics, and effected by State power, must be sharply limited, must not affect to do more than its own work; nay, its friends must be highly delighted, if they can succeed in making the measure as large and complete as it ought to be. This is the real difficulty. Timid friends, and false friends, and avowed opponents always conspire to make every measure of reform too narrow, and complicate it with wanton mischievous exceptions. The true reformers by their utmost effort seldom or never can hinder this. Is then the self-styled philosopher to moralize over their failure, and censure their narrowness? If it be replied: "Such failure is incident to all State-action, and is a reason for not fleeing to politics at all, but trusting to science and moral suasion," this is precisely, as I said above, to do what the upholders of every injustice desire. We have inherited, or they have managed to enact, oppressive or pernicious laws, under which the innocent are crushed; and now we are forbidden by a student of philosophy to contend for the repeal of such laws! He calls it "violence," if we do; and says we are "likely to become bigots and scolds." He tells us that "God himself is still alive, and able to do a little something on his own account"! Does this philosopher believe that God sends down angels with flaming swords to kill unjust men, and redress the wrongs of the innocent? or does he advise us to expect that, if we are inactive and long-suffering under public iniquity, help from heaven will come miraculously? It seems, we are to open our mouths and shut our eyes, and God will give us sugar-plums; only we must not be so naughty as to scold, or so bigoted as to hate oppression? What other bigotry is intended I cannot conjecture.

Let all who are pretenders to philanthropy, all who are not utterly selfish, open their eyes to the existing facts. We inherit laws eight hundred or a thousand years old, which are all called sacred, and are enforced by the vast and irresistible energy of a national executive. These laws were made in barbarous times by rude men, often illiterate, generally accustomed to measure their rights by the sword. The laws have been overthrown at pleasure in one country by princes and their ministers, in another tampered with and tinkered for better or worse by the interests of each class as it has become powerful. A prodigious mass of new legislation has been added by like influences, not least while continuous public wars distracted the nations from home affairs, if any influence over legislation remained to an impartial public. In Europe violent revolution or high-handed acts of discerning despots have changed for the better the tenure of the soil; but England inherits in her laws of land a terrible disease. You in America by your revolution cut the chain binding you to the past, but you proceeded to exasperate and glorify your worst mischief by local codes in the South concerning slaves and the colored race. You have had recent bitter experience that the domineering, aggressive slave-holders could not be restrained by philosophy and fine talk. Greatly delighted they would have been, if you had refused even to "scold" wickedness, and waited till evolution should liberate the slaves. The gospel of evolution means that we are to surrender ourselves philosophically to FATE; like a Turk, who, when burnt out of his house, sits down at the opposite side of the road and finishes his pipe. Evolution, if your North had held this form of philosophy, would have evolved slavery over Pennsylvania, New York, and the entire basin of the Mississippi; and New England would have had a perpetual life-struggle against an overwhelming Slave Confederacy. I do not deny or doubt that in time, if you had been patient, calm, and philosophical, the whole system would have exploded in a series of interminable local wars, and after fifty years more you might have attained the place of a South American republic with a military dictator. To talk of evolution in politics as superseding good men's activity, is simply to say, "Let the most unscrupulous and violent have their own way."

Undoubtedly the number of reforms called for, and the number of societies, is a grave inconvenience and difficulty. Discuss them one by one, and perhaps five out of six make out an adequate case. It is not ancient and barbarous law alone, or chiefly, under which we suffer. While we are contending to repeal one evil law or systematic practice of the Executive, three more bad laws are passed before we are aware. To acquiesce under them is easy for individuals whom they do not touch, or touch sensibly; but such conduct seems to me selfish. Perhaps I may be thought "a scold" for saying so. But if we are to oppose them, we have no choice but to take them one by one; we must systematically display their evil; we must be willing to be disparaged as narrow-minded, and bigoted, and ascetics, and a great deal more, and to suffer evil report among good people through plentiful slander (for slander is one of the tools familiar to the advocates of oppression), and to be snubbed by philosophers as wanting in comprehensiveness. Only by perseverance and by "pegging away" in details is obstinate injustice anywhere subdued.

F. W. NEWMAN.

AFTER HAVING read all that is to be found in the language I am mistress of, and having decayed my eyesight by midnight studies, I envy the peace of mind of the ruddy milkmaid who, undisturbed by doubt, hears the sermon with humility every Sunday morning, having not confused the sentiments of natural duty in her head by the vain inquiries of the schools, who may be more learned, yet after all must remain as ignorant as she.—Lady Mary Wortley to the Abbé Conti: 1718.

WE OFTEN flatter ourselves that we swim, when it is only the current that carries us along.—Lady Mary Montagu.

SERVETUS.

BY D. G. PORTER.

On the 28th of August the examination seems to have been concluded, and the judgment of the Council declared him worthy of death. "Servetus," says Henry, "had gained in fortitude and prudence. Though he still sought some subterfuge by which to escape, it was now that the grace of God began to move his heart and to prepare him for death. It is probable that he found support in prayer. At this examination, in which sentence was pronounced upon him, he no longer asked for mercy, but declared that he would abide by his convictions." He continued, however, to express himself violently against Calvin, and this fact Stähelin regards as evidence of the incorrectness of Henry's opinion, above quoted, as to the prevalence of God's grace in his heart.

But it seems probable that about this time the leaders of the Libertines, the party opposed to Calvin, found means to communicate with Servetus, and to represent to him that if his case could be brought before the Council of the Two Hundred he might be acquitted, and that his chances might be improved by making a counter attack upon Calvin. He could certainly make such an attack with a good will, perhaps also with a good conscience. He accordingly petitioned to have his case referred to the Two Hundred, declaring himself willing to abide their decision. At the same time he denounced Calvin in the most violent terms, declaring him a heretic as well as a false accuser; and demanding that as such he should be held for trial, and if found guilty that he should be put to death or otherwise punished, and that his property should be given to himself in place of that which he had lost through his means.

This was a great mistake. He had nothing to gain by such a course. If the matter could really have been brought before the Two Hundred he might have escaped; and an attack upon Calvin there might have operated in his favor, as the opposition party were at this time a majority in this Council. But the Two Hundred could convene only at the call of the lesser council; and this body no more than Calvin was disposed to make such a disposition of their prisoner. To attack Calvin, therefore, before this Council, was only to beard the lion in his den; and the result could only be to render the members the more disinclined to regard the appeal. The opposition leaders probably intended in some way to assist him, but they had overrated their strength, or underrated that of the reformer. Servetus had taken the risk, and his destruction was, if possible, more certain than before.

Unfortunately, too, for the heretic, he had but a short time before objected to any civil tribunal; and the Council, willing to relieve itself of the responsibility of deciding theological questions, had consented that a statement of the case should be made in writing and referred to the ecclesiastical authorities of the four cantons, Berne, Zurich, Schaffhausen, and Basle. But the hopes of Servetus were now in another quarter. When, therefore, the accusation with extracts from his writings prepared by Calvin to be referred to the churches of the four cantons was sent to him, he made but a brief reply, defending his positions at some points, and at others declaring that Calvin had misunderstood or wilfully perverted his meaning.

The Council, however, for some reason, deemed it expedient to give Calvin the opportunity of reply to this rejoinder of Servetus, which he proceeded to do in a long and carefully-prepared document concluding with the following characteristic assertion: "Whoever thinks justly and wisely will acknowledge that the aim of Michael Servetus was the subversion of all religion through extinguishing the light of sound doctrine."

But Servetus, whose expectations of outside assistance were now at the highest, did not deign to make any formal reply to this second document. He contented himself with annotating the margin, chiefly with bold assertions of his doctrine and violent denunciations of Calvin. Then the two documents, with the brief, formal reply of Servetus to the first, and his marginal notes on the second, were sent out to the churches of the four cantons.

Calvin, with a fairness and sense of honor which seems almost incredible, had already written to his brethren, the guardians of Orthodoxy in the cantons—such of them, at least, as would be likely to have the most influence—to inform them that the case was to be referred to them for their opinion, and to indicate how important a right decision would be; as the opposition party in Geneva, from whom Servetus was expecting assistance, was violent and powerful at this time. "It was well known throughout Geneva," says Guizot, "that his letters would not fail to influence the answers from the cantons."

In fact, the opposition party, apparently discouraged in view of the powerful outside influence which was thus to be levied against them, seem at this point to have substantially given up the cause of the unhappy prisoner. "From that time," continues Guizot, "the passionate excitement of Servetus gave place to dejection and anguish. He was in prison, sick, and forsaken." The condition of the unhappy man, through the neglect or cruelty of the authorities, seems indeed to have been most pitiable. He was suffering greatly from cold, from sickness, and filth. He addressed a touching appeal to the Council, who appointed a committee to visit him, with directions to supply him with additional clothing.

AN ANABAPTIST PROTEST.

Early in October it was commonly reported that the decision of the cantons was adverse to Servetus. There were some who at once raised their voices in his favor. Of these remonstrants Dr. Henry makes particular mention of David Jovis, a notable Anabaptist, and a very bad one, too, if the reports of his enemies are to be believed. He had himself been obliged to flee from his own country to avoid arrest, and, having like Calvin and Servetus changed his name for greater safety, was now living, beloved and respected, at Basle, where he was known as John of Brück. He wrote anonymously to the people of the Swiss communities, exhorting them to oppose the clergy in this terrible business.

"It is an incredible blindness," said he, "that the servants of Christ, who are sent to give life to the dead through the knowledge of the truth, should condemn the erring to death, and through temporal death expose their souls to eternal ruin. The right to pass such a sentence belongs to him alone who gave life and suffered death for our redemption. Were it lawful to put heretics to death there would be a general slaughter, for all religious parties regard their opponents as guilty of heresy. If Servetus be a heretic he ought to be admonished in a friendly manner, and then banished the State. The Lord himself will slay all false teachers with the breath of his mouth and not with the sword. The tares must be left to grow up with the wheat, and await the judgment which will take place at the end of the world."

Verily one is almost tempted to think, on reading these expressions, that the heresy of that time was more Christian than its Orthodoxy. We may remark in passing that Jovis himself remained safe during his life, under the concealment of his assumed name, and enjoyed till his death the respect and esteem of the citizens of Basle. He was, however, convicted of abominable heresies on a post mortem accusation, and his body was dug up and burned.

THE FINAL SENTENCE.

It was already the 18th of October when the answers from the cantons arrived. They were generally cautious and guarded in style and expression, but in substance they were such as Calvin desired. At the next assembling of the Council the members favorable to Servetus did not appear. At the last meeting, October 26, several were again absent; but Ami Perrin appeared, and moved, first, that the prisoner be acquitted, and, again, that his case should be referred to the Council of the Two Hundred. Both these propositions were promptly rejected. The Council then, by a decisive majority, decreed "that Michael Servetus should be led to Champel, and there burned alive and his body consumed to ashes." To this sentence were added the words, "and he shall be executed to-morrow and his books burned with him."

The jailor, accompanied by the officers of justice, entered the prison and announced to Servetus the decision of the Council. For a few moments he remained silent, as if struck dumb with astonishment and terror at the awful suddenness and certainty of his terrible doom. Then he broke forth into loud lamentations, and for a time seemed almost wild with terror and grief. It is said that he repeatedly cried, "Mercy! mercy!" in his native Spanish, as if entirely forgetful of his surroundings. Soon, however, he became quiet, and by prayer and confession commended himself to the mercy of God.

There is, we believe, an evident tendency, on the part of those who are anxious to justify Calvin, to dwell upon and perhaps to exaggerate the weakness of Servetus on this and other occasions, as going to show that he was not a true martyr. We may remark, however, that it is one thing to die for a speculation, or a belief which is reached as the result of logical processes, and another and a very different thing to die for one of the great essentials of the Christian faith which the believer may apprehend with his consciousness. Servetus seems, indeed, to have apprehended Christ in his consciousness, and to have held fast to him to the end. He never denied—nay, if the expression is permissible, he rather exaggerated—his divinity; but the idea of his eternal Sonship seemed to him, doubtless, to involve a contradiction in terms. He would call upon Christ as the Son of the eternal God, but not as the eternal Son of God. He admitted the eternal existence of the Logos—not, however, as a distinct Person of the Godhead, and believed that he became actually the Son of God when he became the Son of Man, and supposed that his eternal Sonship was to be explained by referring it to the idea of God, with whom the actual and essential, even if future, is regarded as a present reality. But this, like some of the other heresies of Servetus, was really a metaphysical speculation, such as most men would think it hard to be obliged to die for at the burning stake. We must honor Servetus for refusing at the last to deny even his intellectual convictions, even when moved by such terror of death. A comparison between his course and that of Galileo, when arraigned under similar circumstances, would not result favorably to the latter.

We are not informed how Servetus passed the night previous to his execution. We may conjecture, however, for as the morning of the terrible day dawned he was comparatively calm. The ministers of Geneva who had assisted Calvin in the prosecution could not be acceptable spiritual advisers for the unhappy man during his last hours, and Farel, who was now pastor at Neuchâtel, was sent for for the purpose. Farel seems to have confined his last labors with Servetus to a single point—his error respecting the person of Christ. But though Servetus professed himself a Christian, and acknowledged Christ as his Redeemer, he would not confess his eternal Sonship.

THE RECONCILIATION WITH CALVIN.

Farel then told him that if he would die as a

Christian he must be reconciled to Calvin. He had doubtless hated Calvin intensely, and assailed him repeatedly with reproachful epithets—though it must be admitted that his failings in this respect were not without the greatest provocation, perhaps not without excuse. He consented, however, to the reconciliation proposed. Calvin was sent for, and Servetus asked his forgiveness. Calvin's reply was characteristic of the man who was so habitually conscious of the entire correctness of his opinions and the entire rectitude of his conduct. "I protest," said he, "that I have never carried out any private animosity against you,"—a statement which Guizot takes the liberty to doubt, without, however, presuming to doubt that Calvin imagined he was telling the truth. One part of the reply we must allow Calvin to report for himself. "I reminded Servetus in prison," says he, "shortly before his death, that sixteen years before" (referring, it is supposed, to the proposed conference in Paris), "not without peril to my earthly life, I had offered to deliver him from his errors; and it would not have been my fault, had he manifested repentance, if all pious persons had not given him their hands."* Who, after reading this sentence, will presume to blame Calvin for the death of Servetus? Calvin then told him that he had neglected no duty of kindness and faithfulness towards him, but that he had received only insult and abuse in return. "And now," said he, "I have done with all that concerns myself personally. Ask pardon, not of me, but of God, whom you have blasphemed by attempting to disprove the Trinity, ridiculing it as a Cerberus, and of the Son of God, whom you have debased and denied." These words, as Guizot observes, were more likely to wound Servetus than to convince him. He remained silent. Calvin then withdrew. He did not ask forgiveness of the man whom he had deprived of position and property and liberty, and had relentlessly pursued through untold sufferings to a miserable death. He doubtless thought that he was fulfilling the eternal decrees, that his conduct was perfectly right.

THE EXECUTION.

Servetus was now led before the assembled Council, and the terrible sentence was read reminding him that he was soon to be burned alive, and his body consumed to ashes. "The unhappy prisoner cast himself at the feet of the magistrate at the very moment," says Dr. Henry, "when a martyr would have victoriously raised his eyes to heaven, and prayed that they might put him to death by the sword, lest by great pain he might be driven to despair and so lose his soul. If he had sinned, he said it had been through want of knowledge, for it had been his will and his aim to promote the glory of God." Farel also joined in the petition, which was, however, denied, perhaps in the hope that the terror of Servetus might lead him to recant.

He was now led forth to Champel, a wide elevation of ground about two miles from the city. The sun was shining brightly, and much of the most magnificent scenery of Switzerland—pleasant valleys and vine-clad hills, the forest verdure of the Jura mountains, the shining glaciers of Savoy, and the winding courses of the Arve and the Rhone—was in full view from the place of execution. Servetus prayed aloud as he went along, saying, "Jesus, thou Son of the eternal God, have mercy on me!" but he could not be induced to call upon the Savior as the eternal Son of God.

On reaching the fatal place, a stake was found firmly planted in the ground and a heap of wood lying in a circle around it. On beholding these preparations, Servetus threw himself on the ground and prayed awhile in silence. The zeal of Farel so far outran his sense of decency and propriety, that he did not hesitate to disturb the last prayer of the miserable man by improving the occasion to harangue the crowd. "You see," said he, "what power Satan has at command when he once gets possession of a man. Here is one, learned above most others, and who perhaps believed that he was acting right. He is now, however, possessed by the devil. Beware lest the same thing happen to yourselves!"

Servetus arose, and after having, at the suggestion of Farel, asked the prayers of the people, was led to execution. He was seated on a block in front of the stake, to which he was bound by a strong iron chain about his body and neck, and from which there was now no escape except through the torturing flames. His book, both the printed copy and the manuscript he had sent to Calvin for his opinion, was fastened to his body. It happened that the executioner was a bungler, and the usual contrivances to diminish the pain of the sufferer by inflicting a speedy death were so unskillfully arranged that they amounted to nothing. The wood was green oak, upon which the green leaves were still hanging.

When the fire was kindled and the first flash of the flames rose about the doomed man, he is said to have shrieked so frightfully that the people drew back in terror, and returned only to heap more wood upon the burning pile. The green wood of course burned slowly, and a strong wind is said to have prevented the free action of the fire. "For half an hour," says Stähelin, "if we may believe the report of his enemies, the mournful spectacle and the horrible torture endured, during which time the miserable man continually cried to God for mercy."

At length from the midst of the flame and smoke came the last, loud, anguishing cry: "Jesus, thou

*We have purposely chosen this cold-blooded statement of Calvin, as the most characteristic and truthful, rather than the one in which he speaks of tenderly addressing Servetus. To make Calvin speak of his tenderness towards Servetus at this crisis would be to subject him to a suspicion of insincerity which we should not care to have the task of removing.

Son of the eternal God, have mercy upon me!" Servetus had gone into the presence of God with his heresy upon his lips. It was noon on the 27th of October when his sufferings were ended. An hour later the multitude who had assembled to witness the execution, with gloom and horror still written upon their faces, turned slowly back to the city where reigned the "stern reformer" triumphant alike over heretics and Libertines. The executioners were still turning with their pikes a blackened and smoking carcass, and gathering about it the embers of the now-mouldering fire.—Christian Union.

SOME NEW THOUGHTS ABOUT THE BIBLE.

THE MAY MEETING OF THE ESSEX CONGREGATIONAL CLUB—ADAM THE FIRST AMERICAN CITIZEN—THE GARDEN OF EDEN IN CALIFORNIA—THE BUILDING OF THE ARK—THE INSPIRATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

The regular bi-monthly meeting of the Essex Congregational Club was held in Central Hall, Salem, last evening, the Hon. A. W. Dodge in the chair. Grace before supper was said by Professor Barbour, of the Bangor Seminary. After supper the essay of the evening, "Some New Ideas about the Bible," was read by Mr. F. W. Choate, of Beverly, who began his strikingly original paper with the remark that people were always hunting after new ideas, ever forgetting that there was nothing new under the sun. When any new and startling dogma of belief about the Bible was advanced, man had a right to demand from its author his reasons in detail. But when Omnipotence spoke to them whom he had created and kept in existence, and endowed with all the faculties of mind and body, another style of communication was expected; and "Thus saith the Lord" should be conclusive. The reply of God to Moses, when asked by him about his name, was, "I am that I am," and to the children of Israel, "I am sent you." The essayist for one fully believed in the inspiration of the Scriptures from the first verse in Genesis to the closing verse in Revelation, and he could not wish to any "God-speed" who denied the inspiration of the Bible or the divinity of Christ. No writer of fiction or impostor would have dared to begin the book of Genesis as it was done. What other account of creation had they except heathen mythology, which needed only to be read to be ridiculous? How simple the statement, yet how sublime! "Let there be light; and there was light." All that was ordered was accomplished. And if nine-tenths of the declarations made at that time were true beyond a doubt, why should they not take all the declarations as God's truths? Men might speculate as they pleased, they knew nothing of the creation but what the Bible told them. In that book they had a minute description of the Garden of Eden, which in the judgment of the essayist was located in this country, and as a matter of course was the home of our first parents. Learned men of all ages had been in doubt as to the situation of the Eden of the Bible, and at the present day hardly any two of them agreed as to its position. Many persons, having come to the belief without evidence, that no other country could claim the honor except Asia or Africa, forced a conclusion and located the garden in one or other of these lands. Had America been known for the last two thousand years as well as Europe, Asia, and Africa had been, less difficulty would be found in locating the Garden of Eden, or the residence of Adam and Eve and their offspring. The rivers noted in the Bible description they believed to have dried up, and they said little as to the land of Havilah where there was gold. The translation of the Hebrew did not help particularly. The Red Sea and the Mediterranean had not changed for thousands of years. The noble rivers have generally remained the same, and the essayist was assured that in this country all the requisites, boundaries, rivers, and products necessary to fix the location of the garden could be found. Utah had all the rivers answering the description, and California the same, and gold had abounded in those places from the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

The weight of all evidence that could be adduced was largely in favor of America as the Eden, and Adam in consequence was the first American citizen. And he also believed that the ark was built somewhere within this country. Savans supposed that Noah's shipyard was located either in Asia, Africa, or the part of Europe then known. But they were all wrong. He would admit the landing of the ark somewhere in Asia or Africa when the waters abated, and where he thought tablets engraved by Noah, containing extracts from his logbook, would yet be found. Now he thought it clear that it was God's design to place Noah and his family in a land far remote from his former residence, and where no monuments of their folly and wickedness might meet his descendants at every step. His reasons, therefore, for a belief in the ark having been built in this country were as follows: The proportions of the ark today make the best sea boats, that is, one-sixth of length for breadth of beam, and three-fifths of breadth for depth of hold; timber of the size and durability for the construction of the ark could be found in no other country; trees hundreds of years old can be found to-day on the Pacific slope in a perfect state of preservation, and if the ark was an hundred years in building, such wood was necessary. The cedars of Lebanon were not large. And after the ark was built it was many days drifting, and at the slow rate of two miles an hour she would have drifted many thousands of miles from the starting place, and finally did ground, no doubt, at an immense distance from where she started. The question had been asked, Did it rain before the flood?

He thought not. There were portions of the American continent where it never rained, larger than the whole of Palestine, and probably the only shower they ever had was during the flood. And how could they account for the finding of remains in this country of animals never known to have existed before, except in the theory of the general deluge? Mr. Choate then entered on a defence of the inspiration of the Bible, and closed with an allusion to the so-called "liberal Christianity" as caused by doubt and leading to destruction of belief.

A verse of Coronation was then sung, and the discussion of the essay, which produced a good deal of amusement, was taken up by the Rev. Mr. Coit, of Lawrence, the Rev. C. B. Rice, of Danvers, the Hon. A. W. Dodge, the essayist and others.—Advertiser, May 11.

SIR,—May I be permitted to observe, in answer to Mr. Allan, that although women are not able to undertake all the burthens of male citizens, still they have their own duties (quite as important) to fulfil. I remember reading of a tribe in which there was one burial-ground, called the "Field of Honor," and in this field were buried the men who had fallen in battle, and the women who had died in childbirth. If a woman cannot fight, she produces those who can; if she cannot protect property in the silent watches of night, she can soothe pain during those same silent watches. If she cannot kill her fellow-creatures with mitrailleuse or cannon, she can rear the little ones till they are fit for slaughter; if she cannot quell a riot she can bind up the wounds of those who quell it; if she cannot emulate the strength of man, she certainly does "toil the livelong day," and often far into the night.

"Man's work is from sun to sun,
But woman's work is never done."

Women writhe under injustice and ill-treatment as much as men; and when they see their interests passed over or remembered with a sneer, when the married ones see themselves absolutely deprived of legal existence, even in their maternal capacity, no wonder they ask, "Is this the outcome of masculine legislation?" and answer with a determination that no obstacle shall daunt them in their strife for freedom. Mr. Allan forgets that a kingdom is but an aggregation of families, and that there cannot be a family without at least one woman. I wish he would tell us how a community could prosper if all female pursuits were left undone; yet he maintains that women have no burthens to bear! He must be totally without imagination, or he would be able to "put himself in her place," and sympathize with such women as Miss Becker, who, through much persecution, try to carry our sorrows before the senate of our country. Yours respectfully,—"A Would-be Female Citizen," in the National Reformer.

MR. CONWAY writes: "I have just heard, with mingled surprise and regret, that one of the most majestic objects in the South Kensington Museum may not improbably disappear therefrom. This is the great Japanese Buddha, the largest bronze in Europe, being near seventeen feet in height and about as many around the lower circumference of the seated figure. The history of this figure is involved in mystery. It has for more than a year borne as its only explanation these words: 'Buddha, Japanese. Lent by the Southwark Company. Temporary Label.' The temporary label has become dingy, but not made way for any more luminous. The Southwark Company reports having received it in the way of trade with Japan; but the figure has plainly come from some important temple. It is a strong symptom of the extent to which the old religious order in Japan is breaking up, if so grand a figure as this has come hither through the indifference of that people. It represents Sakya Muni in his beauty, seated in that mystical contemplation through which he was said to have reached Buddhahood. The eyes are closed; the hands rest softly in front, one in the other; the expression is of that wondrous repose of which poor John Dorgan, of Philadelphia, dreamed when he wrote his aspiration for 'The Starry Rest of Buddh.' After gazing upon its eternal calm I cannot wonder at the horror which a Buddhist in England recently expressed, in a letter that was published, of the noisy revivalism which is going on in provincial towns. I do not wonder that he prefers Sakya Muni to Sankey and Moody." It would be an excellent opportunity for some American museum to purchase an idol.

THE LONDON Lancet pretends to know how a man feels after his head is cut off. It says: "Our readers may remember that rather less than four years ago we had to refute the theory of Dr. Pinel that Troppmann's head, having lost under the guillotine the sources of common sensation, yet retained hearing, sight, and smell, with the whole apparatus of consciousness and intellect. The trunk, he maintained, died quietly and painlessly from hemorrhage in the course of a few minutes; but the brain, shielded by atmospheric pressure, retained its blood, and consequently its life, for no fewer than three hours. It is still necessary, it seems, to reassert the fact that while the brain possesses a considerable quantity of blood after decapitation, the blood rapidly becomes venous for want of oxygen; the condition being like that in complete asphyxia, in which consciousness vanishes in ninety seconds. The physical shock sustained from the guillotine would of itself, moreover, paralyze all nervous function to completely to admit of consciousness taking place during the brief interval necessary for the thorough deoxidation of the blood in the brain. Beyond the momentary impact of the descending knife on the felon's throat, no further sensation can be felt."

Poetry.

THE RADICAL CLUB.

A POEM, RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED TO "THE INFINITE."

BY AN ATOM.

Dear friends, I crave attention to some facts that I shall mention,
About a Club called "Radical," you haven't heard before;
Got up to teach the nation, was this new-light federation,
To teach the nation how to think, to live, and to adore,
To teach it of the heights and depths that all men should explore;

Only this, and nothing more.

It is not my inclination, in this brief communication,
To produce a false impression,—which I greatly would deplore;
But a few remarks I'm makin' on some notes a chiel's been takin',
And if I'm not mistaken they'll make your soul up-soar,
As you bend your eyes with eagerness to scan these verses o'er;

Truly this,—and something more.

And first, dear friends, the fact is I'm sadly out of practice,
And may fail in doing justice to this literary bore.
But when I do begin it, I don't think 'twill take a minute
To prove there's nothing in it (as you've doubtless heard before),
But a free religious wrangling club—of this I'm very sure;

Only this, and nothing more!

'Twas a very cordial greeting, one bright morning of their meeting,
Such eager salutations were never heard before.
After due deliberation on the importance of the occasion,
To begin the organization Mr. Pompous took the floor;
With an air quite self-complacent, strutted up, and took the floor,

As he'd often done before!

With an air of condescension, he bespoke their close attention
To an essay from a Wiseman, versed in theologic lore.
He himself had had the pleasure of a short glance at the treasure,
And in no stinted measure said we had a treat in store;
Then he waved his hand to Wiseman, and resigned to him the floor;

Only this, and nothing more.

Quick and nervous, short and wiry, with a look profound,
Yet fiery,
Mr. Wiseman now stepped forward, and eyed us darkly o'er;

Then an arm-chair, quaint and olden, gay with colors green and golden,
By the pretty hostess rolled in from its place beside the door,
Was offered to the reader, in the centre of the floor,
And he took the chair, be sure.

Then with arguments elastic, and a voice and eye sarcastic,
Mr. Wiseman into flinders the Holy Bible tore;
And he proved, beyond a question, that the God of Moses' mention
Was a fraudulent invention of some Hebrews, three or four,
And the Son of God's ascension—an imaginary soar!

Only this, and nothing more.

Each member then admitted that his part was well acquitted,
For his strong impassioned reasoning had touched them to the core;
He felt sure, as he surveyed them through his specs, that he had "played" them,
And was proud that he had made them all astonished by his lore;
Not a continental cared he for the fruit such lessons bore.
So he bowed and left the floor.

Then a Colonel, cold and smiling, with a stately air beguiling,
Who punctuates his paragraphs on Newport's sounding shore,
Said his friend was wise and witty, and yet it seemed a pity
To destroy in this old city the belief it had before,
In the ancient superstitions of the blessed days of yore.
This he said and something more.

Orthodoxy he lamented, thought the Christian world demented,
Yet still he felt a reverence as he read the Bible o'er;
And he thought the modern preacher, though a poor stick for a teacher,
Or a broken reed like Beecher, ought to have his claims looked o'er;
And the "tyranny of science" was indeed, he felt quite sure,

Our danger more and more.

His remarks our pulses quicken, when a British Lion, stricken
With his wondrous self-importance,—he knew everything and more,—
Said he loathed such moderation; and he made his declaration
That in spite of all creation he found no God to adore;
And his voice was like the ocean as its surges loudly roar.
Only this, and nothing more.

Then a lady fair and faded, with a careworn look and jaded,
As though she saw the glory of the coming Lord no more,
Crushed the British Lion's roaring by a reverent outpouring
Of a faith forever soaring unto heaven's golden door;
She was listened to intently by each member on the floor,
For her genius they adore.

But the interest now grew lukewarm; for an ancient Concord bookworm
With authoritative tramping, forward came and took the floor,
And in Orphic mysticisms talked of light and life and prisms,
And the Infinite baptisms on a transcendental shore,
And the concrete metaphysic, till we yawned in anguish sore;

But still he kept the floor.

Then uprose a kindred spirit almost ready to inherit
The rare and radiant Aiden that he begged us to adore;
His smile was beaming brightly, and his soft hair floated whitely
Round a face as fair and slightly as a pious priest's of yore;
And we forgave the arguments worn out years before,
For we loved this saintly bore.

Then a matron made for kisses in the loveliest of dresses,
And with eyes that shone more brightly than the diamonds that she wore,
Spoke in tones of lute-like sweetness words of such exceeding fineness,
Phrases of such happy neatness, that we clapped our hands for more;
And we thought "Some Women's Hearts" were made for all men to adore,
As with grace she left the floor.

Then a lively little charmer, noted as a dress-reformer,
Because that mystic garment called a chemise she wore,
Said she had no "views" of Jesus, and therefore would not tease us,

But that she thought 'twould please us to look her figure o'er,
For she wore no bustles anywhere; and corsets she felt sure
Should squeeze her nevermore.

This pretty little pigeon said of course the true religion
Demanded ease of body before the mind could soar;
But that no emancipation could come unto our nation,
Until the aggregation of the clothes that women wore
Were suspended from the shoulders, and smooth with many a gore,

Plain behind, and plain before!

Her remarks were full of reason, but a little out of season,
And the proper tone of talking Mr. Fairman did restore,
When he sneered at priests and preaching, and indorsed THE INDEX teaching,
And with philanthropic screeching said he sought forevermore
The light of sense and freedom into darkened minds to pour,

Truly this,—but something more!

Then with eyes as bright as Phœbus, and hair dark as Erebus,
A maid with stunning eye-glass next appeared upon the floor;
In her aspect she looked regal, though her words were few and feeble,
But she vowed his logic legal, and as pure as golden ore,
And indorsed THE INDEX editor in every word he swore;
And then said—nothing more.

Then a tall and red-faced member, large and loose and somewhat limber,
(And though his creed was shaky he the name of Bishop bore)
Said that if he lived forever he should forget, ah! never,
The Radicals so clever in Boston by the shore.
But bore a bad gold in his 'ead bust stop his saying more.
And we all cried out encore.

The Kindergarten mother clucked an answer to this brother,
And her curls kept bobbing quaintly from the queer head-dress she wore;
And another magnus corpus, with a figure like a porpus,
In wonder did absorb us, as she viewed our numbers o'er,
And talked about the "Oversoul" and other mystic lore,
Nameless here, forevermore.

Then a rarely gifted mortal, to whom the triple portal
Of Music, Art, and Poesy had opened years before,
With a look of sombre feeling, depths within his soul revealing,
Leaving room for no appealing, he decided o'er and o'er
The old, old vexing questions, of the why and the wherefore,
And taught us—nothing more.

There are others I could mention that took part in this contention,
And at first 'twas my intention, but at present I forbear;
There's young Look-sharp, and Wriddle who would make an angel giggle,
And a young conceited Ziegel who was seated near the door;
If you could only see them, you'd laugh till you were sore,
And then you'd laugh some more.

But, dear friends, I now must close, of these Radicals dispose,
For I am sad and weary as I view their folly o'er;
In their wild Utopian dreaming and impracticable scheming
For a sinful world's redeeming, common sense flies out the door,
And their long-drawn dissertations come to—words and nothing more,
Only words and nothing more.

—Boston Times.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 29.

F. E. Abbot, $200; H. L. Green, $1; Joseph T. White, $5; J. E. Jones, $6.40; W. F. Freeman, $1.75; F. H. Guilwits, $1.80; E. Culver, 20 cents; Susan A. Tyrrell, 25 cents; George K. Withington, $40; S. M. Whistler, $1.25; Mary E. Scott, $1.60; Spencer L. Bailey, $6.40; John Range, Jr., $3; John H. Terens, $3; August Wagner, $3; Ferdinand Hegeoth, $3; Harry Kilton, $3.20; Isaac Stern, $3.20; J. Russ, Jr., $3; L. A. Foster, $3.20; John Logan, $4.04; Wm. Inott, $1.50; James Dillaway, $3; W. S. Burton, 50 cents; Josiah Guilwits, $3.20; A. J. Van Scooter, $3.20; Theo. W. Robbins, $3.20; H. V. Spooner, $5; D. S. Grandin, $3.20; Louis Bristol, $5; K. F. Smith, $3.20; N. S. Woodford, 75 cents; M. J. Wayne, 75 cents; Frank A. Flagg, 2.20; Geo. W. Brown, $3; L. S. Judd, $3.20; W. E. Coleman, $1.60; Henry Powers, $1.60; A. H. Davis, $3.20; Levi Abbot, $3.20; Abbie Ela, $8.

RECEIVED.

Books.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION. A Collection of Essays and Addresses, edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1875.

BUNKER HILL: The Story Told in Letters from the Battlefield by British Officers Engaged. With an Introduction and Sketch of the Battle. By Samuel Adams Drake. Boston: Nichols & Hall. 1875.

THE UNSEEN UNIVERSE: or, Physical Speculations on a Future State. New York: Macmillan & Co. 1875.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

A DISCUSSION before the Minneapolis Liberal League, on April 4th, between Rev. Horace Bumstead and Members of the League, Messrs. Gale, Mead, and Croft. Topic: "The Possibility and Probability of a Supernatural Revelation." Minneapolis: 1875.

SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at St. George's Hall, London.—Apr. 4: "The Reasonableness of Public Worship."—Apr. 11: "On Preaching."—Apr. 18: "Messrs. Moody and Sankey."—Apr. 25: "Is the Revivalists' Gospel True, or is it False?"

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT of the State Board of Health of Massachusetts. January, 1875. Boston: Wright & Potter. 1875.

OUR BARREN LANDS. The Interior of the United States West of the 100th Meridian and East of the Sierra Nevada. By Gen. W. B. Hazen, U.S.A. Cincinnati: Robert Clarke & Co. 1875.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW. May, 1875. London: Strahan & Co. American Agents: The Willmer & Rogers News Co., New York.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. June, 1875. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. June, 1875. Boston: L. C. Bowles.

THE WESTERN. May, 1875. St. Louis: Western Publishing Association.

THE PENN MONTHLY. June, 1875. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut St.

THE SANITARIAN. June, 1875. New York: 234 Broadway.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH. June, 1875. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 3, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

The Fourth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 35 Monroe Street, on Saturday, June 5, 1875, at 2 o'clock P. M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

DR. PETRI recently snubbed the Pope, in an Old Catholic speech in the Prussian Lower House. It is not surmised that he is a descendant of St. Peter.

THE LATEST calculation of the total population of the world, by Behm and Wagner, makes the number 1,391,030,000. India is credited with 300,000,000, and China with 400,000,000.

SOME satirical wag has been attending the Radical Club to make fun of it, as will be seen in another column. Of course his parody of "The Raven" is extravagant caricature all through; and surely no radical will be so weak as to be seriously offended by a mere jeu d'esprit of this sort. Let us all join good-humoredly in the little laugh at our own expense.

PROFESSOR NEWMAN contributes this week to THE INDEX an admirable paper on "Public Morals and Public Reforms." That the function of the State is to protect all individuals in the enjoyment of equal rights, and that this involves much action that may properly be called moral, is very clear; only let it be remembered that such morality is purely natural and scientific, not Christian in any special sense. Especially are we pleased with the latter portion of Professor Newman's letter, which we commend to the careful attention of all critics of the Liberal League.

DURING the fortnight beginning June 1, we shall be absent from Boston in order to attend the fourth annual meeting of the stockholders of the Index Association at Toledo. THE INDEX will meantime be in the sole charge of our friend and associate, Mr. Stevens. All letters requiring our personal attention will be held till our return. We take this opportunity of apologizing to our correspondents for unavoidable remissness of late in attending to their favors, in consequence of unusual demands upon our time at this busy season of reports, essays, and annual meetings.

WE SHALL regard it as a great favor if our readers will forward to us any notices of the press they may happen to meet of the new book published by the Free Religious Association, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, together with the name and date of the journals containing them. For special reasons we are desirous of collecting as many such notices as possible; and slips enclosed in envelopes to our personal address, with the inside headings of the journals from which they are cut, will be the best mode of transmission. The object of this request, if complied with, shall be communicated by-and-by to our readers.

COLONEL HIGGINSON writes to THE INDEX Office that we made "an absolutely false statement," when we said in THE INDEX of May 20 that he "opposes the anti-church-usurpation agitation;" by which, of course, as the paragraph itself shows, we meant the Liberal League movement as a whole. This is a charge to be met in only one way. If he favors that movement, he was misreported by those who spoke to us of his essay at the Radical Club (we have seen no published report of it); but if he opposes that movement, what we said is true. We ask him publicly—does he or does he not favor that movement? If he does, we owe him an apology; if

THE EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual business meeting of the Free Religious Association was held at Horticultural Hall, Boston, on the evening of Thursday, May 27, the President in the chair. Mr. Hallowell, the Treasurer, rendered his report, showing that the receipts of the year had been $2,649.54, and the expenditures $2,182.28, leaving a balance in the treasury of $467.26. The Nominating Committee reported a list of officers for the ensuing year, being the same as that of last year with the exception of the names of Hon. Nathaniel Holmes, of St. Louis, and Hon. Rowland G. Hazard, of Providence, which were substituted in the list of Vice-Presidents for the names of Hon. Gerrit Smith and Captain E. B. Ward, deceased. The list is as follows:—

President.—Octavius B. Frothingham.

Vice-Presidents.—Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Lydia Maria Child, Isaac M. Wise, George W. Curtis, Frederick Schünemann Pott, Edward L. Youmans, George Hoadly, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Nathaniel Holmes, Rowland G. Hazard.

Secretary.—William J. Potter.

Assistant Secretary.—Hannah E. Stevenson.

Treasurer.—Richard P. Hallowell.

Directors.—John Weiss, Charles K. Whipple, Ednah D. Cheney, Helen M. Ireson, John T. Sargent, Francis E. Abbot, W. C. Gannett, John C. Haynes.

The report of the Executive Committee was submitted to the Association through the Secretary, Mr. Potter. Like all his papers, it was admirably clear and to the point. He paid fitting and eloquent tributes to the memory of the deceased Vice-Presidents, referred to the publication of Freedom and Fellowship as a missionary volume which should be circulated by all the members, and offered various suggestions for the future.

Mr. Potter then read a letter from the Secretary of the Western Conference of the Unitarian churches, transmitting a formal expression of sympathy on the part of that body with the Free Religious Association. A reply to this letter on behalf of the Association was then read, and declared by the President to be adopted by the Association with only one dissenting vote. That no other member may be unjustly suspected of this seemingly atrocious want of appreciation of a catholic and friendly act, we frankly admit that the solitary recalcitrant was the editor of THE INDEX. There was not, however, the slightest failure on our part to reciprocate, and most cordially too, the genial sentiments and intentions which prompted this vote of sympathy on the part of the Western Conference. Nothing but the most fraternal and generous instincts were at the bottom of it, and we should be very sorry to have our own adherence to what we believe to be the inflexible logic of Free Religion mistaken, at least by these warm-hearted Westerners themselves, for churlishness or unfraternal feelings. Purely as an individual, we most sincerely express to them, also as individuals, our pleasure in, and cordial reciprocation of, their yearning for the catholic fellowship of all truth-lovers, out of which their present action has undoubtedly sprung. But we cannot let sympathy, even in such a case as this, tempt us to swerve a hair's breadth from the arrow-straight path of principle. When the Western Conference, as an organized Christian body, voted itself in sympathy with the Free Religious Association, it unconsciously betrayed the Christianity it professes; and when the Free Religious Association, as an organized body based on absolute liberty of thought and speech, voted itself in sympathy with a branch of that Christian Church which has always and everywhere crucified liberty, it unconsciously betrayed its own fundamental principle. Each of these two organizations now occupies an embarrassingly false position. This issue between Christianity and Free Religion has got to be met squarely; there is no use in trying to avoid it; it will extort recognition from us, or it will break us all in pieces. When the matter came up last Thursday, it was a surprise to us (as we had been for necessary reasons absent from the meeting of the Executive Committee at which it was broached), and no time was left for careful thought. Hence we could only cast our vote, without being able to marshal or express off-hand our reasons for it on the spur of the moment. This we say by way of apology to our associates for not then and there bringing up our objections for general discussion before the vote was taken. But now that the mistake has been made (and we wish to bear our full share of responsibility for making it, on account of our silence at the time), it is a painful duty to say that next year we shall be obliged to bring forward a motion of some there is a full year in which to discuss the matter at our leisure. If Christianity and Freedom are compatible, then things are all right as they are; but if not, they cannot be set right too soon. It vitally concerns the Free Religious Association to discuss this question now; for its Constitution pledges it to "absolute liberty," and we are constrained to take the ground that this acceptance and reciprocation of sympathy with a branch of the Christian Church, which denies "absolute liberty" by its Christian Confession, is unconstitutional, and therefore null and void. In THE INDEX of October 8, 1874, we stated explicitly and at length our reasons for holding that the Free Religious Association is impliedly committed by its Constitution to an anti-Christian position, in an article on "Unitarian Sympathies" which was called out by the defeat of Dr. Clarke's similar "sympathy resolution" at Saratoga; and we respectfully but earnestly refer all interested to that article. Whether the Free Religious Association, being pledged to liberty, is thereby pledged against Christianity, or not, is a question which can now no longer be postponed; for practical action of the most important character must be taken on this question at the business meeting of next year. It will be best to come to a general understanding as soon as possible.

In consequence of the proposal of the Philadelphia Liberal League to hold a Convention of similar Leagues in that city in 1876, the approval of this proposal and the appointment of delegates to a preliminary Convention by the Boston Liberal League, and the suggestion by Professor Loos (published among the "Glimpses" in last week's INDEX) that the Free Religious Association take some action in the same general direction, we then introduced the following resolution, the way for which had been made easy by a suggestion of the same nature in the Committee's report:—

"Resolved, That the Executive Committee be requested to inquire into the expediency of having this Association represented at any general Convention of the friends of free thought which may be arranged to meet at Philadelphia in 1876, and to report the result of their deliberations at the next annual business meeting of the Association."

This resolution was adopted without debate and without dissent.

An opportunity for the fullest and freest discussion on the general policy of the Association was then given by the President, who stated the wish of some that the Association should make this policy more aggressive, and said that now was the time for criticisms and recommendations. But nobody seemed inclined to offer either, and the meeting soon after adjourned. No one can complain with justice that the platform of the Association has not welcomed the widest and most spontaneous discussion, or that there is any lack of hospitality to free speech on the part of the Association or any of its officers. If any one desires a change in the Association's policy, he certainly cannot assert that he has had no opportunity to urge his favorite measures. Perhaps some may think that we are in favor of such a change; but we are not. It is the work of the Free Religious Association to hold conventions, support lecture courses, publish reports, books, etc., but not to take up special reforms in detail. The bold and positive measures (which are less "aggressive" than progressive) that we wish to see pressed vigorously by radicals require organizations specially suited for the work, such as the Liberal League; and we see no reason why the Association should undertake a public work for which it was not created and is not well adapted. The Liberal League was originally proposed as a sort of executive arm to the Free Religious Association; and the labor of promoting the complete secularization of the State should devolve upon the former, not the latter. All we really wish in this matter is to see the members of the Association recognize individually the necessity of the League movement, and take hold of it as the inevitable logical corollary of the Association's fundamental ideas. In due course of time we believe they will all favor the Liberal League; and we rely solely on patient argument and the progress of events to rally about the League its needed supporters. Meanwhile the Association is doing its own indispensable work admirably in its own way, and we cordially sympathize with and support the general policy it has hitherto pursued. Officers more disinterested or more faithful to their duties could not be found; and the Executive Committee has no friend more sincere or cordial than THE INDEX—none the less so that it seeks at all times to keep the purity and advancement of the Association's great cause as the objec-

The Annual Report of the Convention of the following day, which will be published as usual by-and-by, will contain the essays read and the speeches made at the morning and afternoon sessions; and it would be impossible to do them justice in a brief abstract. Suffice it to say that Colonel Higginson, who presided at the morning session, made the best speech we have ever heard from him on the Association's platform; that Mr. Gannett read a paper of surpassing power and beauty, full of real genius and religious feeling of the highest order; that Mrs. Mott's presence and speech was the great benediction of the day, and will be tenderly remembered by all present while memory lasts; that Mr. Ames, Mr. Frothingham, Mr. Underwood, Mr. Putnam, and Professor Morse, delivered addresses each admirable of its kind; and that the Donation Festival in the evening, at which Mr. Frothingham presided with the gracefulness that he could not shake off if he tried, was a most delightful occasion of flowers, songs, little speeches, hand-shakings, and heart-warmings. Every one seemed satisfied with the day's doings, though the audiences in Beethoven Hall were not so large as they have been in other halls on previous years. So the Eighth Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association has passed away successfully, pleasantly, and we hope profitably to all concerned; and now for another year of faithful work!

FREE-THOUGHT NOTES.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREE-THINKER.

MR. EDITOR:—

For four months or more we have had an east wind blowing; not a fitful, changing, unstable, hesitating, temporizing, time-serving, weak-minded wind, but a steady, resolute, untiring, self-directed, vicious, biting blast. Various theories have been formed to account for it. Mine is that it is owing to the conservative government. We never had such a wind in Liberal times. This is the political conjecture. The theological theory is that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have brought it. Nothing of the sort prevailed before they came. Why it is ascribed to them is that it is a wind which disposes men to wish for a "change."

I went to-day to hear the vivacious regenerators in Her Majesty's Royal Italian Opera House in the Haymarket. You will be glad to hear that we do not starve the peripatetic apostles. They are in excellent condition. They are well-fed saints. We have eminent preachers, Catholic and Protestant, so worn, and wan, and lean that no cannibal would look at them. But Moody and Sankey would gladden the hearts of heathens of peculiar appetites. From portraits of Mr. Sankey we all thought that he was an attenuated agent of conversion, whereas I found him as sleek as a carp. Both he and Brother Moody are clearly prosperous "sinners," if one may describe them by one of their own terms. They continue to advertise themselves with an ability unknown to slow-going British piety. We have never seen the grace of God put on such a business footing before.

Then the harmonium-makers advertise in imitation of their rival harmoniums, offering to the public the genuine Sankey instrument. The unconverted public who say Mr. Sankey has an interest in the sales are scandalized. No advertisement from him contradicts the rumor. I see no harm in Mr. Sankey receiving a commission on the sacred sales; but, were I he, I would pray God to stop the harmonium advertisers until I had done my praying business.

Mr. Moody delivered a saucy, well-seasoned little sermonette on Christ calling the apostles to fish for men. It was a vigorous, pleasant, semi-profane, clever discourse. He gave us an idea of the apostles loafing about the shore, doing no business, when Christ told them to go out on the sea, which they did; and they make a wonderful snatch there of the unfortunate fish. Won over by this success, Christ skillfully takes the opportunity to invite them to follow him. By paddling about the shore they caught nothing. By boldly plunging out and attempting a "big thing," they filled their nets, like the "Ring" men of New York. Mr. Moody then described the apostles as talking together like "cute 'down east' boys: 'Had we not met with this boss, we might have thought we had played out this darned old stream; but clearly there is something to be got out of it yet. However, as we have been put up to a good thing by our friend here, he may be worth following.'" And they were right," exclaimed Mr. Moody; "Christ is worth following." I am not skilled in the flippant pleasantries of American talk of Mr. Moody's class, and cannot use always his exact words; but I convey the style and spirit of his adventurous discourse.

There were sorrowing women and earnest men in the Opera House in plenty—many of whom I knew to be so. They broke into a titter with a pained expression, for Mr. Moody beguiled them with his spiritual fun before they were aware of its offensiveness. Mr. Moody, with art as well as feeling, broke up into prayer, and then Brother Sankey bounced up (it was not rising up with deliberate solemnity, but with an indecent rush), gave out a hymn, and everybody was singing before we knew what we were doing. It shows that the English people are growing more tolerant. Some time ago they would not have permitted this conduct in the pretended service of God. We have seen nothing like it since the days of the Rev. Robert Taylor, who was called the Devil's Chaplain. Mr. Moody is funnier than the Devil's Chaplain. The only differences are that Taylor was a gentleman, and Moody is not. Taylor did not believe in what he made ludicrous, and Moody does; and thereby has more influence to destroy true reverential feeling in his unfortunate auditors. But mark the difference of the times; we imprisoned the Rev. Mr. Taylor, but reverend gentlemen, Church and Dissenting alike, run after Mr. Moody in ignoble crowds.

This month I cannot write long or much, and have no one near to write for me. If a new revelation were made to man now, and it concerned me, it must be oral; for, if written, I could not read it, as reading is still pain and peril to me. Before I became ill I had organized the issue of a journal which has long been wanted here, and by aid of which THE INDEX could be made widely known in England. I may never be editor of it, as was intended; but I hope to be a frequent contributor to it when it appears. In the Reasoner I quoted at times Milton's wise lines on the value of knowing well the duties of our present state. Some time ago Mr. Bright, who never makes a bad quotation from the poets, quoted these. You know them. They are as follows:—

"To know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom."

Well, in these lines I found the title of my new paper. Its name is DAILY LIFE, and underneath it we put the above quoted lines as its motto. The explanation of the purport of the paper, though long-printed, has never yet reached the public, owing to my disablement. What we said was this (which will be read for the first time in America):—

"Certain publicists interested in the direction and organization of progressive opinion—now active on all hands—have resolved to establish a new paper, which shall attempt to represent the constructive capacity of independent thought, and advocate its application to the improvement of daily life.

"DAILY LIFE will be a journal of this world, without implying disregard or denial of another. It is intended by the title of the paper to indicate that this world is, for its own sake, worthy of study; and that human society has sacred and primary claims on attention and is capable of improvement, by the use of the means which science, common-sense, and right feeling supply; and it cannot be otherwise than consistent with a reverential sense of future existence, to strive that the populations passing into it should enter it as intelligent and morally pure as possible, whatever may be their religious aspirations and beliefs.

"The progress of national education is retarded, and the instruction of children of the working classes in the uses of this life—so essential and indispensable to their worldly welfare—is frustrated by misconceptions of the nature and limits of secular knowledge made by theologians who confound it with atheism.

"The [intended] editor of this journal having himself originated the now frequently used term 'Secularism,' it is thought that he may most usefully be the expositor of its principle as a method of instruction and otherwise as a form of opinion—always as distinct from atheism as mathematics from politics—not necessarily attacking religion any more than music attacks chemistry. In regard to this life Secularism means—attention to it, in respect to education—separateness of instruction; in theology, neutrality; in religion, reasonableness.

"DAILY LIFE will have other and not less important objects. Household life and public affairs are tolerably wide subjects. Liberalism seems, just now, not to know its own mind, and there never was a greater opportunity of a hearing than now for any party who does. Coöperation, like literature, is a fair subject of criticism as an art of life, as well as a scheme of economy; so that DAILY LIFE will not lack diversity of topics and individuality of view, out of which public purposes and unity grow. For all increase of knowledge increases the sum of practical agreement among divergent thinkers.

"DAILY LIFE proposes to look daily facts fairly in the face. Means of social and political redress greatly exceed the use made of them. The day of social despair is certainly past. Hopeless and grim, or sensational and melodramatic fervors, are become diseases of popular advocacy. Improvement is still arduous, and needs pluck and persistence to carry it; but progress need not be cheerless or disagreeable on principle; nor doubtful, since the lines of march are clear."

Yours for better or worse (mostly better, I hope),
GEO. JACOB HOLYOAKE.

{ NEWCASTLE CHAMBERS; Temple Bar,
Essex Street, London.

Communications.

EAST WISCONSIN NOTES.

Encouraging items with regard to free thought movements are, no doubt, always acceptable to THE INDEX and its friends. I have one or two of this nature to report you from Milwaukee, and will not defraud those interested of them.

On Sunday evening, May 17, the friends of free thought in this city were treated to a lecture from Mr. B. F. Underwood, the champion of freedom. The subject was, "The Triumphs of Liberal Thought." It was an able statement of the status of so-called infidelity at the present day, as contrasted with that of twenty-five or fifty years since. This lecture was the concluding one of a course of Sunday evening lectures which was commenced in November last, and given in the Grand Opera House. Four lectures have been given by Mr. Underwood, and his modest but manly eloquence, his zealous, straightforward utterances in behalf of free thought, have won him many friends and admirers in Milwaukee.

A committee on permanent organization for Sunday Lectures was appointed on this occasion, and it is now confidently expected that a coöperative movement in this direction will be arranged for the coming season, that shall include the principal cities in the West and North-west. This arrangement will secure the most talented lecturers. The subjects of these contemplated lectures are to be scientific, literary, historical, and social. Chicago has during the past winter sustained a course of Sunday afternoon lectures with remarkable success. The committee have secured the most brilliant talent possible. Immense audiences and money in the treasury are their reward. The charge for admittance was only ten cents, the committee expecting merely to cover expenses. A coöperative movement with other cities will undoubtedly ensure beneficial, pleasant, and satisfactory results to all, and it can but be hoped that the effort will be fully carried out.

A second Liberal League was also formed on Sunday evening last by American citizens,—the first comprising only German citizens. Steps will be taken immediately to place the League in working order to present the "Demands of Liberalism," as set forth in THE INDEX, in this vicinity, and to endeavor to secure a compliance with the same. So, it will be seen, we are about to try and "do our part" toward the representation of the thousand Liberal Leagues at the Philadelphia Centennial, which Mr. Abbot says is possible, and whose combined efforts he hopefully argues shall "put an end to the constant humiliations, and insults, and outrages, to which free thought is still exposed in this country in the name of Law." Late occurrences of these outrages are fresh in the thought of all lovers of mental freedom, and should stir one and all to renewed effort. Triumphant as free thought stands to-day, it is exposed to suffer an ignominious retrogression, unless the friends of freedom put their shoulders vigorously to the wheel which constitution-evangelizers and subtle jesuitical influences are bearing their whole weight upon to turn backward. Free thought has every encouragement to this effort. Theology is decaying; creeds are decomposing; dogmas are dying; superstition is stealing shamefacedly out of sight; heresy is popular; and infidelity is respectable!

True, the laborers in the field of freedom are as but a handful in comparison to the crowds which are anxiously striving to support the creaking timbers of the structure of Christianity; but behold the results of the efforts of these few! Men and women are thinking to-day for themselves. They have paid priestly influence to do the thinking for the world long enough. They see that men so paid are proving false to their own convictions. They feel assured that private opinions are concealed, and do not correspond to pulpit utterances, and that this concealment is due to a selfish bread-and-butter policy. It is Orthodoxy that is ostracised to-day,—pious cant that is covered with obloquy; while free thought is honored and infidel sentiments are quoted. Think of the North-Western Christian Advocate apologizing for the treatment of Thomas Paine at the hands of priests, and defending his honor with laudatory comments upon his career and character! Think on these things, ye free thinkers; take heart, and be up and doing!

Another item in the interest of progress is worthy of notice, and must not be passed by. Religious services are now held regularly in the Academy of Music, the largest theatre building in Milwaukee, on Sundays. This startling innovation in this city is meeting with surprising success. These services are held under the auspices of the Fourth Congregational Society of Milwaukee, Rev. Myron W. Reed, pastor (with strong radical proclivities). The large hall is crowded to its utmost capacity every Sunday evening with just such an audience as need and will be benefited by the exercises. The sense of freedom draws many a one thitherward, who has long been drawn the other way, from the fine places of worship in our city, of which Christians make special boast on account of their elegance and exclusiveness. How they reconcile the church of the period with Christ's command concerning the preaching of the gospel to the poor is a conundrum that free thinkers should persistently propound to them. It will be a puzzler. Many who still reverence religious worship rejoice at the privilege of joining in it without money and without price, at the Academy of Music. They have long since given over the luxury of church attendance per force. Only the well-to-do can afford it. In the theatre building the doors swing wide; it is conveniently located to draw in the chance pilgrims whom business or pleasure calls to the city for brief periods. Gentlemanly ushers are as attentive to the stranger as to the solid men of Milwaukee, to the maid as to the mistress, to the shabby as to the stylish. A pleasant seat is provided for all alike, and, resting there, one may follow the pleasant voice of the young speaker without the distracting thought that he is intruding upon another's seat, or that the seedy coat and winter bonnet are strikingly contrasted with fresh and seasonable garments. The vast audience join heartily in singing familiar hymns, led by the piano and cornet, which are played by paid professional celebrities. Mr. Reed is a young man, without the slightest hint of the clerical in his make-up. He avoids all ministerial mannerism. He is big-brained, genial, and spontaneously humorous. This movement of his congregation, suggested and furthered by him, is the hit of the season. It will insure his popularity, and give him grand opportunities for doing good. He is conservative enough to humor the conservative element in society to a degree, but true enough to his radical convictions to sow seeds of free thought broadcast, that will not fail to take firm root and bring forth wholesome fruits of freedom. The community is quite astir with the novel sensation. Canting, nervous croakers say it is merely a sensation, and will not last. Noticeably thin is the attendance upon the churches, and a sense of duty is apparently all that holds the few in their places. It is not quite understood by the average attendant at the Academy what is the real attraction of the place, why this method is so popular, nor why the churches are daily growing unpopular. Something is wrong—they do not know exactly what. Free Religionists, however, know all about it. They see the signs, watch the symptoms, and are cheerful at the significant indications. Although the day is still far distant when the Orthodox will understand, will see as they are seen, or drop the shackles now binding them to build costly churches and sustain them by increasing sacrifices, beholding them covered alike with elaborate ornamentation and heavy mortgages, the lovers of freedom welcome these signs and symptoms; rejoice at such hearty expressions of the religious sentiment as are now found at the Academy of Music, and augur from them substantial and satisfactory results in the direction of religious freedom.

AMELIA WILLIAMS BATE.

MILWAUKEE, May 19, 1875.

A NOTE FROM MR. LESUEUR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—As you persist in charging me with somewhat gross inconsistency, permit me to observe that I have never given you the slightest ground for assuming that I would have taken offence at any criticism whatever, fairly directed against any writing of mine. Not only so, but the language I used, when I first complained of the "Words, Words, Words!" heading, distinctly implied that I could not have objected to an equivalent criticism in the right place. What then becomes of the a fortiori argument you try to construct after the following fashion: "In our turn we are extremely surprised that, if he (i. e., myself) considers a charge of useless verbiage offensive in a mere heading, he should consider it inoffensive when pressed deliberately in a main article"? The word "offensive," let me remark, is one that you have introduced into the discussion, and for which you are solely responsible. I made no complaint of anything as "offensive"; but I inquired whether you regarded a certain thing, the prefixing of a disparaging title to a correspondent's letter, as just. And you answered with an emphatic "No," thus fully admitting the reasonableness of my implied complaint, had the circumstances been as I supposed. It seems I was mistaken; but was that a reason why you should turn round and try to show that I had myself been as unjust (for that or nothing was what you had to prove) as I wrongly imagined you had been? I greatly regret my original error; and I greatly regret also that, in vindicating yourself from one charge of injustice, you should have furnished such substantial grounds for another.

With regard to the communication of your correspondent "Z," I would just remark that it is somewhat satisfactory to me to find that he sees no way of turning my position except by offensive (the word is mine now) imputations. Whether the imputations turn it is a question I shall not discuss.

Yours very truly,

WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, 17 May, 1875.

P. S.—I have not THE INDEX by me in which my protest appeared; and I cannot therefore be certain whether the word I used was "just" or "right." However that may be, my complaint was one of injustice; and, now that I remember, it was so headed by yourself.

LES.

[The "injustice" of which Mr. LeSueur has complained was that the heading "Words, Words, Words!" was a "disparaging title," which, being prefixed to his article, tended to prejudice the reader's mind against it. He admits that he misunderstood the meaning of this heading; which was very evidently intended to designate, not his article, but the articles of our own that he himself deliberately characterized as mere verbiage. He now holds that it was "injustice" and "unfairness" in us to bring this [supposed] disparaging charge against him in a prefixed title, but neither one nor the other in himself to urge it at length against us in the article to which the heading was prefixed.]

acterized as mere verbiage. He now holds that it was "injustice" and "unfairness" in us to bring this [supposed] disparaging charge against him in a prefixed title, but neither one nor the other in himself to urge it at length against us in the article to which the heading was prefixed.]

One of two things is perfectly clear; the charge of useless verbiage is either "unjust," "unfair," and "disparaging" (and therefore of course "offensive"), or else it is not. If this charge is really "unjust," etc., it is exactly as much so in one place as in another, and Mr. LeSueur has himself committed the injustice he complains of; but if it is not, we have no more committed it than he has, and his complaint is frivolous and unreasonable. All the sophistry in the world cannot get him out of this dilemma. It astonishes us that he should persistently contend that it is just "criticism" to accuse us of empty wordiness in his own article, but that it would be unjust "disparagement" for us to make this identical charge in the heading we prefixed to it. As a matter of fact we have not made the charge at all, while he has made it; yet he desires us to apologize for the fault which, if it is a fault, he alone has committed! We decline emphatically to do anything so absurd.

Further: we should certainly consider it "unjust," if we had "prefixed a disparaging title to a correspondent's letter," and we promptly said so. But we add now that we did consider it very unjust "criticism" to disparage several elaborate articles of our own, which discussed important principles, as being merely concerned with unimportant "names"; although we did not think it worth while to say anything about it. Neither was this the first time that Mr. LeSueur has been "unjust" towards us; since in THE INDEX of Oct. 29, 1874, he brought charges just as unreasonable as his present one, although then, as now, expressed in a very gentlemanly manner. Less suspiciousness on his part as to our moral status, and more heedfulness as to the real bearing and import of what we publish, would enable him to avoid the "injustice" he has now twice committed against us—though, we are glad to believe, without the slightest intention of doing so. As a critic, we think he shows himself singularly liable to misunderstand what others mean; but, because we most sincerely respect him, we take this opportunity to express the great delight we have experienced in reading a very able article of his on "The Intellectual Life," in the Canadian Monthly and National Review for April, 1875. This is one of the noblest, most high-minded, and admirable papers we have ever read, and by-and-by we hope to be able to republish it in THE INDEX. We are more than willing to admit we have been in the wrong, when honestly convinced of the fact; and if we cannot satisfy Mr. LeSueur in this instance, we nevertheless indulge a hope that he will believe us sincere in the high esteem we express for him.—ED.]

THE MINNEAPOLIS LIBERAL LEAGUE.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 18, 1875.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

At a meeting of the Liberal League of this city, held on Sunday, May 2, the following resolution was adopted:—

"Resolved, That the Liberal League of Minneapolis cordially indorses the proposal for an international convention of advocates of free thought, to be held in the city of Philadelphia during the summer of 1876; and recommends that some organized effort be made by Leagues throughout the United States to bring about such convention."

I have the satisfaction of saying to you that, since the reorganization of the League in this city last winter, it has proved a most decided success. We occupy one of the largest halls in the city, and the weather must be very stormy to prevent every seat being filled. The success that has attended our effort should encourage free-thinkers in communities where there is a large liberal element to follow our example. We organized on a platform of absolute freedom of opinion, inviting Infidels, Atheists, Spiritualists, Christians, and Jews to come together and reason upon such topics as might be agreed upon; and the invitation has been most cordially accepted by all of these different classes. We have made the grand old saying of Terence our motto: "Naught that concerns mankind is alien to me;" and topics for discussion have been as varied as it was possible to make them. Among the subjects thus far discussed are the following: "The Sunday Question," "Prophecy and Prophecy," "Spiritualism," "The Possibility and Probability of a Supernatural Revelation," "The Crusades of the Middle Ages," "Revivals—their Cause and Cure," "What shall we do to be Saved?" "The Discovery of America," "The Origin of Conscience, or the Evolution of Morals," and a large number of like character. Next Sunday an opportunity will be granted for all to answer the question, "What shall we do with Jesus?"

I only commenced, however, to tell you that our manner of conducting the League has proved a very decided success, and to recommend a similar course to others. As a thought-provoker, and a means of enlightenment on the progressive ideas of the day, no sort of organization could prove more satisfactory. To provide against the "bore," who universally infests the free platform, the speeches are limited to ten minutes each; and we all know that a speaker who is all words and no ideas will be disgusted to be obliged to crowd his verbal avalanche into so brief a space of time. Therefore, after an effort or two, the "bore" quietly subsides and leaves us to our own destruction, or else becomes an attentive listener.

The churches are giving us gratuitous advertising, as a Sunday rarely passes without an ex cathedra whack at us from one or more of the city pulpits; while the Citizen (a local Christian publication edited by a "professor" in our State university) is gaining a very considerable circulation among radicals by lampooning us most unmercifully in bad English, worse Latin, and Greek that is absolutely horrifying.

Very truly yours,

FRANK J. MEAD.

TRUE AND FALSE MONEY COMPARED.

"Money is not only a means of exchange; it is a documentary expression of legal claim. It is not wealth; it is documentary claim to wealth, to which at a given time persons are entitled. . . . Money is, therefore, correspondent in its nature to the title-deed of an estate. . . . Money cannot be arbitrarily multiplied any more than title-deeds can."—RUSKIN.

Not one person in a thousand exchanges his labor or service directly for the labor or service of another. Not one person in a thousand exchanges his labor-product directly, for the labor-product of another person. A medium almost invariably intervenes to effect his exchange, and this medium we call money; and it makes a vast difference what the nature or character of this medium is.

If persons arranged their exchanges directly, knowing the labor cost of the articles they wished to exchange (like two farmers or carpenters arranging to "change works"), they would probably approach each other in the following manner.

We will suppose the articles to be exchanged a pair of shoes and a hat:—

A to B.—"I have a pair of shoes which have cost me, labor and stock, eight hours of honest labor, which I desire to exchange for a hat of equivalent cost; for it would take me five times as long to make a hat, and, when done, it would not be fit to wear."

B to A.—"I have hats which cost me eight hours of honest labor each. I will exchange with you equally, which in this case will be equitably, as the cost of each is equal; and I too shall be benefited by the exchange for the same reasons you have stated."

Is not this sufficient benefit in exchange, without either "making a profit" out of the other?

The medium of exchange which now intervenes between A and B (and so on through the alphabet) ought to enable A and B to exchange their products on the same principle, with the same advantage to themselves as in the foregoing simple instances of direct exchange, while the carrier between the two (or merchant) would be compensated on the same principle; to wit: the "labor cost" for his services, including equitable risks, insurance, rent, etc. But the medium of exchange (money) heretofore and now in use performs no such function. It is of such an uncertain and legerdemain character that no one, not even the learned pundits who expound "finance," have any definite idea of its operation; and the consequence is that no one, except experts in the use of it, can use it without getting cheated out of from three to four-fifths of their honest earnings. Thus it has to give four or five pairs of shoes for one hat of equivalent cost, while B has to give the same number of hats for one pair of shoes. Hence the old adage: "Shoemakers' wives and blacksmiths' horses have to go without shoes;" while the men who build all the houses seldom if ever have any sort of a house of their own to live in.

Money is the instrument through which, whether justly or unjustly, all exchanges of labor or service are made; yet we are told that it is inconsequential what the nature or character of that instrument is!

At Winslow, N.J., Hayes & Co. own six thousand acres of the best land in that State by parchment title; own and conduct a glass-works, cultivate one thousand acres, own a village of cabins, employ several hundred persons, and pay them in paper money which reads as follows:—

"WINSLOW, N.J.—Due to the bearer in merchandise, at the counter of our store, Five Dollars.
"HAYES & Co."

The village and its inhabitants resemble the slaves and their cabins on a Southern plantation before the war, and they are scarcely less helpless, degraded, and enslaved. The money is a solvent money, and, if I should take this specimen which I hold in my hand to their counter, it would be promptly redeemed. Now why is the condition of these people even worse than that of common working people? It is because, and only because, the money they are paid in is more indefinite than our national money; and they are worse off just in proportion to that indefiniteness.

If every man were an expert in making everything he needs to supply his own wants, and had the facilities at hand to do it as in his own trade or profession, every industrious person would have an abundance of everything; for every one would have time enough, under those circumstances, to supply his own wants, and every one would be obliged to do his own work, and could not shift off his work upon other people by means of a legerdemain money.

Money ought to be, can be, and will be of such a character as to insure just such results as are described in the preceding paragraph. But all who work at all now have to support from four to eight persons besides themselves, two per cent. of whom are supported in luxurious living, while they themselves live on the plainest and coarsest fare. If every one worked to the amount of the labor-cost of everything he consumed, which all but infant children and invalids could and would do under the reign of equitable money, the vast impulse that would be given to production would fill the earth with plenty, peace, and security.

About the year 1830, as near as I can recollect, what was called "superfine Genesee flour" was five dollars per barrel. This was the best quality of flour then known. A mason's wages at that time were two dollars per day, and his barrel of flour cost him two and a half days' work. Now we will suppose a mason of that day (forty-three years ago) had put five dollars in United States gold coin into his money-box, and kept it there until to-day, when he takes the self-same money to buy flour. The money is current, and more than current, for it is quoted to-day (April 5, 1874, —when this estimate was made) at 1.12½ premium. He inquires the price of the same quality of flour, and is told that it is twelve dollars and fifty cents per barrel. His five dollars in coin will be received in payment for the flour to the amount of five dollars, sixty-two and a half cents, and by adding six dollars, eighty-seven and a half cents in "greenbacks" he gets the flour; and thus he pays four and one-quarter days' work for the same kind of flour to-day which in 1830 cost him two and a half days' work. Difference, one and three-quarters' days; i. e., he pays nearly twice as much labor for his flour to-day as he did then.

A mason's wages to-day are four dollars per day, and his barrel of flour costs him a little over three days work, half a day more than it did the mason of forty-three years ago.

But let it be remembered that the labor-cost of flour to-day is not one half so much as it was forty years ago, owing to the better soil where it is now raised, improvements in agricultural implements, and in means of transportation.

But now let us suppose that the mason of forty years ago had received in payment for his two and a half days' work a Treasury note (or greenback) of five dollars, with this inscription upon its face: "The United States will pay to bearer, on demand, five dollars in one barrel flour (best quality) of one hundred and ninety-six pounds. This bill receivable for all debts due the United States."

That same Treasury note would procure a barrel of flour to-day the same as it did then.

But this is not all. The labor-cost of nearly all articles of consumption are reduced from time to time by this introduction of improved tools, implements, machinery, scientific discoveries, etc., and although ruinous and destructive fluctuations in prices would not occur if this civilized money were in use, as prices do now and heretofore have done, yet a gradual diminution of prices would occur. As it occurred, the new issues (because based upon labor-cost) would recognize the fact, and the old issues would naturally return to the issuer to be exchanged for the new, and none but hoarders of money would be the losers. All other persons would be gainers by the introduction of labor-saving machinery, reducing prices and the number of hours of labor at the same time; and thus every encouragement would be given by everybody to inventors and inventions, and patent laws could be dispensed with.

But how is it now? A million of laborers lying idle in the United States under the reign of a false and semi-barbarous money, by the introduction of labor-saving machinery (an annual loss to the whole people of at least $300,000,000), the product of labor decaying in warehouses for want of purchasers, and business paralyzed because persons lying idle have no money to purchase with. This part of the subject is by no means exhausted, but I must hasten to give one more example.

A farmer of my acquaintance bought a farm in the neighborhood where he had always lived. He knew its capacities for production under a given amount of labor. He paid cash down for one-third the price of the farm, and gave his note for the other two-thirds payable in yearly instalments, and expected to honor his paper as the payments became due; his expectations being based upon his knowledge of the farm and estimates of the crops he could raise upon it in the time specified, at the current prices, making some allowance for ordinary fluctuations in prices.

But the financial crash of 1857 caused an enormous "shrinkage of values" (so called), and so for his crop he got about one-third less money than he had promised to pay. Thus he had to pay one-third more labor for two-thirds of his farm than he had contemplated, while the man who sold him the farm got one-third more labor than he bargained for; for the note he held against the purchaser didn't "shrink."

Now suppose the purchaser in this case had promised to pay a given quantity of corn, of rye, of flax, of butter, of cheese, and other products of the farm (everything he had raised upon his farm was just as "valuable" for uses to everybody as ever it was): he would then have paid just the amount of labor agreed upon, and no more, for what he had "raised" upon the farm had exceeded his estimates.

Is it not plain that all money now and hitherto in use is a money adapted only to speculation; i. e., to exploiting with the products of labor and the spoliation of labor itself through the Wage System? And is it not equally plain that all that the honest, industrial, or laboring people want money for is to enable them to exchange their labor or service, or the products of the same, equitably and honestly?

The reign of a true and equitable money is in the near future; and, when it comes, it will enhance the production, the business, and consequent wealth of the country in a short time ten-fold, and make it possible for every person to have all the comforts and elegances of life.

In other words, poverty would soon be abolished, security of persons and property would be established, peace would prevail, and millionaires and paupers would become extinct. E. D. LINTON.

LUCRETIUS.

The compensation humanity pays for exceptional genius is that reverence and mere imitation are excited by it in lesser minds, rather than emulation.

The glorious intellects of Greece, while marking the lofty plane on which man may stand, left as heritage a great army of quoters and commentators who, instead of developing their own powers in original ways, repeated the facts of their masters and not their spirit; and we find the later translations of the works of these ancient Titans accompanied by apologies for their boldness, and such interpretations of the text as may accord with the Bible!

The poem of Lucretius, "On the Nature of Things" is among ancient works remarkable for its onslaughts on superstition, its accounts vividly rendered of ancient sciences, and its foreshadowing the results of modern scientific thought.

Lucretius was born in Rome, within a few months of Julius Cæsar, and studied in Athens the philosophy of Epicurus, which with many original additions he sets forth in his poem. His style is robust and terse, and his spirit philosophical, equally removed from reverence or contempt. He reviews the whole circle of the natural sciences of his time, notices refraction of light in water, treats of the porosity of matter, and the relative motions of ships and stars. He knew that light travelled faster than sound, and sagaciously inferred that, as leaden projectiles melt where they strike, heat must be motion and concussion of atoms.

Perspective is thus beautifully treated:—

"Thus courts, though equal wide, yet seem to bend,
And grow more narrow at the distant end."
"The roof depressed, the sides seem joined in one,
The wearied sight lost in a darkness come."

He points with emphasis to natural explanations of phenomena commonly attributed to spiritual agency, as echoes which are reflections of sound from hard upright surfaces, and not the work of fauns or satyrs; and he observes that fauns and satyrs might inhabit plains as well as other places, yet echoes are never heard on them. So, instead of the vengeance of angry gods, he sees the causes of the spread of disease to be air and contact.

Investigating the mind, he gives us this on the increasing ease of thought:—

"The objects, though removed, yet leave behind
Some secret tracks and passage through the mind,
And fit for images of the same kind."

The mind is dependent on the body, and powerfully influenced by it; as in intoxication, danger, and sickness.

Atoms are the seeds of all material forms; they contain all the essential properties that go to build up plants, animals, and men; they make them, as letters words; theirs is the only persistent individuality in the universe; yesterday in the air, to-day in a leaf, to-morrow in a man, an atom is always itself.

Man, though first, is on the same plane with all else; universal Nature is the womb and urn of him, as of all other things.

He notices the particular claims of men, and, taking language as one of the alleged distinctive marks of superiority, draws attention to the various expressive barks, growls, and whinings of dogs, and parallel cases with birds.

Atoms are capable in combination of producing effects called intelligent. Of their individual forms he speculates that the ultimate parts of sweets, such as honey, may be round and smooth; while acid and unpleasant bodies may be composed of angular and jagged atoms.

His adumbration of the doctrines of the struggle for existence and survival of the fittest is as follows:—

"For seeds of bodies from eternal strove,
And used by stroke, or their own weight, to move,
All sorts of union tried, all sorts of blows,
To see if any way would things compose:
And so, no wonder they at last were hurled
Into the decent order of this world,—
And still such motions, still such ways pursue,
As may supply decaying things by new."

"But more, these years must numerous kinds deface,
They could not all preserve their feeble race;
For those we see remain and bear their young,
Craft, strength, or swiftness has preserved so long."

He illustrates how necessity is the mother of invention, and how Nature suggested art to past races of men:—

"We knew to fight before the help of art,
To bruise and wound before we framed a dart;
And Nature taught us to avoid a wound,
Before the use of arms and shields was found.
Before beds were, even Nature threw us down
To rest: we drank before a cup was known.
These various things convenience did produce;
We thought them fit, and made them for our use."

The first fires built by men, he considers, were initiated from the effects of the sun's rays or lightning; and the art of casting metals may have been suggested by the perfect way in which lumps of metal fill cavities of the earth in mines.

Lucretius saw that the prevalent religions of his day were debasing, and he also saw how greatly their power came from common interpretations of death and futurity; so he manfully tried to find out the truth:—

"And, were the Soul immortal, would the Mind
Complain of death, and not rejoice to find Herself let loose and leave this clay behind?"

"Were souls immortal, ne'er began,

But crept into the limbs to make up man,
Why can they not remember what was done
In former times? Why all their memory gone?"

With true Roman vigor he scorns the fear of death, and asks his reader: "Why should common you dread extinction, when mighty generals, philosophers, and poets have submitted?" And he ridicules the dainty dread of unpleasant changes in the body after death, saying that it is an absurd extension of the notions of sensibility, proper only to life. Death in his universal sweep attacks even the grave:—

"For sepulchres themselves must fall
In Time's abyss, the common grave of all."

For the repining he has little consolation:—

"Besides what harm, had the Sun idly ran,
Nor warmed the mud, nor kindled it to man?
What harm to us, if we had ne'er began?
True; those that are in being once, should strive,
As long as pleasure will invite, to live;
But they who ne'er had tasted joys nor seen,
What hurt to them suppose they ne'er had been?"

The gods he seems to believe exist; yet, as he does not think they meddle with things, we cannot consider his faith in them to have been very strong.

The evils of life he plainly sees, and discourses as eloquently as Mill on the struggle of Man with the rest of Nature, for comfort and even existence; the vigor and plentifulness of weeds on farms and gardens, the sudden tempests at sea, and earthquakes and pestilence on land, are graphically depicted. Yet for all this the gods are not to be blasphemed; and yet, because of all this, they do not deserve to be worshipped, though man may know many joys and have many bright, happy days.

Certain knowledge may be obtained by honest effort; and of scepticism he says:—

"He that says nothing can be known o'erthrows
His own opinion, for he nothing knows;
So knows not that—"

Perceiving which, the extreme Pyrrhonists said that they could not even be certain of the uncertainty of knowledge.

Lucretius combated most ably, with all obtainable weapons, the notions of Creation, Spontaneity, and Design; he said that nothing could come from nothing, and that an atom in its degree was a plant, or an animal, as the seed of it.

These sterling thoughts, produced in a land and at a time too advanced and too early for general comprehension and acceptance, have lain dormant for two thousand years, until the general and averaged waves of European evolution are arriving at the level of the plane touched by the piercing minds of Greece. The modern methods of observation and experiment are settling on unmovable bases the truths seen afar off and vaguely by such intellects as Democritus, Epicurus, and Lucretius. J. G. H.

MONTREAL.

THE INNER VOID.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—The man who, after a course of earnest study, has arrived at the conviction that the current and Orthodox system of belief affords him no solid ground on which to stand, and who in consequence renounces it, will soon find within himself a void which he cannot fill up. His religious aspirations must find materials, so to speak, to work upon.

Men in this position may be counted by thousands in the present day, and are to be found in every place, as well as in every denomination of Christians.

It may be remarked also that, in renouncing the creed in which a man has been trained from early childhood, many prejudices and erroneous ideas will adhere to him of which he may not be conscious. The anthropology of the discarded creed is so different from the conception of the "Cosmos" or the "All," that he requires much instruction to see the difference.

Such men are to be found in remote parts of this extensive country, far from the centres of thought and culture, and are thereby left to their own resources in a great measure.

It is true that THE INDEX, and such other papers as fearlessly contend for the truth in opposition to the popular errors of the day on matters of religion, are of great benefit to such men; and it is my object in these remarks to draw the attention of some of the able writers connected with THE INDEX to the case of men in the position I have just stated.

The religious instincts of such men are often very strong, and they expect to find in the New Faith a substitute for the discarded anthropology of the old.

I am, sir, yours,

J. F.

ONTARIO.

[We should like to put the "Truths for the Times," the first of the Index Tract series, into the hands of every such lonely thinker. It is a bird's-eye view of the "New Faith," sketched as well as we can sketch it. There have been many essays and articles in THE INDEX written by many writers with the same general purpose. Such persons as Dr. F. mentions are entitled to the best words and best sympathy of all who have struggled into the warmth of free religion; and THE INDEX is an earnest and honest attempt to transmit both. Would that it might be more successful in reaching all who need it! Too few are willing to take the necessary pains to increase its circulation, which might easily be doubled, if all united to help it.—ED.]

A YOUNG LADY, having read about a man's having invented a stove which consumed its own smoke, hopes he will devise a method whereby tobacco-smokers may be run on the same economical principle.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address
THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics, 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect, Third edition, 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life, 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations, The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index, 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig, and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D., 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man, 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication, 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition, 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition, 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch, 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works, 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr, 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs and Unbeliefs.....	1.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition, 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English verse by Bayard Taylor, 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elsevier's Edition.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe, 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMBERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone and Alport Books.....	1.50
Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German, 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
Army Medicines on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsy the Fairy, A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt, or, The Clouded Interior.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Science. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Oriental Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English with analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek, Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne, 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life, 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day, 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait, 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems, 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology, 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Things Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological, 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions, 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton, 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty, not in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language, First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eckoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of English Literature from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrine and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons, 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons, 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson, with a Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait, Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours.....	2.50
A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHÉLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Prof. H. B. Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels, 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays, Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology, 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology, 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	2.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation, 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature, 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine, History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels, Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.0
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture, 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker, 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems, 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion,—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being.

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE DISCUSSION

Is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 3 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 3 per cent. all money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOKS OF BOUND MUSIC.

Containing the Crema de la Crema of all Vocal and Instrumental Music.
PAGES FULL SHEET MUSIC SIZE.
Price of each book in Boards, $2.50; in Cloth, $3.00; Gilt, $4.00.

GEMS OF GERMAN SONG, 216 pages. Vocal.
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG, 200 " " " " " "
GEMS OF SACRED SONG, " " " " " "
WREATH OF GEMS, 200 pages. Vocal.
GEMS OF STRAUSS, 250 pages. Instrumental.
OPERATIC PEARLS. 200 pages. Vocal.
SHOWER OF PEARLS, 200 pages. Vocal Duets.
SILVER CHORD, 200 pages. Vocal.
HOME CIRCLE, Vol. I., 216 pages. Ins'l.
HOME CIRCLE, Vol. II., 250 pages. Ins'l.
PIANO AT HOME, 250 pages. Piano Duets.
MUSICAL TREASURE, 225 pages. Vocal and Instrumental.
PIANO-FORTE GEMS, 220 pages. Ins'l.
PIANIST'S ALBUM, " " " " " "
ORGAN AT HOME, 200 pieces. For Reed Organ.

The above books are uniform in style and binding, are wonderfully cheap for the contents, are sold by all principal music dealers, and will be sent to any address for retail prices.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or their time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The New York TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION. Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREE

SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People;" and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fredk Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1875.

WHOLE No. 285.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

RY A. W. S.

MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM has very kindly placed in our hands two of his manuscript essays, one of which we shall print in THE INDEX next week.

"ELISHA was a good man," says Dr. Lorimer of the Tremont Temple, "but he ought to have whipped the boys." Oh no; the bears "licked" them up sufficiently!

GEN. GRANT does not wish, he says, to be president for a third term. We imagine that his wishes, in this respect, have a singular coincidence with those of the people.

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, Dr. Holland, Bayard Taylor, and others, have complimented Miss Kate Field by asking her to reappear upon the stage. The lady has accepted the invitation.

THE POPE receives a higher salary than any sovereign in Europe. His average monthly income is said to be two millions of dollars. We should think that might support any man, fallible or infallible.

IT IS WITH great pleasure that we print in our editorial columns, this week, an article from the pen of Rev. Dr. Bartol. He has his own beautiful way of saying things, as well as his own rare wisdom in thinking them.

SINCE the return to this country of David A. Wasson and Francis Tiffany, American radicalism has all its ablest representatives at home, except Moncure D. Conway; and we are not sure but he calls himself an Englishman by this time.

GEN. SHERMAN'S new book—his Memoirs—is having a great sale, and is provoking much discussion in military circles. To any of our friends who may desire it we will send it, on their order. Five dollars and a half is the price.

THE LONDON Academy, in an extended notice of Fisk's Cosmic Philosophy (which a colored porter at J. R. Osgood & Co.'s persists in calling Comic Philosophy), says that it is "the most important contribution yet made by America to philosophical literature."

THE Liberal Christian, in an editorial notice of the Free Religious meetings during anniversary week, says: "But saying what we have, it would be ungenerous to omit the acknowledgment of the unwonted sweetness and moderation which characterized the meetings."

COL. HIGGINSON presided at the morning meeting of the Free Religious Association, on Friday of anniversary week; and we hear only the highest praise of the address which he made on that occasion. We venture to say that no other Association in the land has two such capable and brilliant presiding officers, as Messrs. Frothingham and Higginson confessedly are.

THE EVANGELICALS are pricking up their spirits for a lively campaign in this city next autumn. Rev. Mr. Murray is to have Music Hall for Sunday services; and Horticultural and Beethoven Halls are had in prospect for similar popular meetings. Is it a pity that free religion had not some great popular prophet, such as Theodore Parker was, who could preach a reasonable religion, every Sunday, to the people of Boston?

A SUBSCRIBER, in renewing his subscription, and speaking of the "hard times" which he and so many others have experienced, says: "Farmers must not spend money till they earn it." A good and sound maxim, indeed; yet applicable, not alone to farmers, but to editors and all others. "Pay as you go" is not a maxim of simple prudence only, but of genuine honesty as well. This strictly observed by men and nations, and "hard times" would oppress us less often and less severely.

"I DO NOT believe," says one, "in people wrapping up their hearts, and putting them carefully away lest they should get hurt." Yes; our faculties are sometimes killed by too much coddling. Better let them take the world as they find it, and "rough it" as best they can. There is no safer place than the world, where we can be brought up. All the good we know is there, as well as all the evil; both are mixed up together. In trying unwisely to run away from the last, we are in danger of losing the first.

THE GEM meeting of anniversary week, in many respects, was that which took place at Hollis Street Chapel, in this city, on Wednesday afternoon; at which occurred the graduating exercises of the Kindergarten Normal Class from the school of Miss Garland, at 98 Chestnut Street. Four essays were read, all upon kindergarten topics, and illustrations of kindergarten games were very charmingly given by the class. The kindergarten system of education, we believe, is bound more and more to win the attention and approbation of parents.

WE LEARN on the authority of the Boston Journal that the New York Nation is now chiefly edited by two Massachusetts men—Arthur Sedgwick and Wendell Phillips Garrison. Mr. Godkin, hitherto the editor, has come to reside in Cambridge, where there is some hint of making him a professor. The Nation is certainly an able paper, but it always has seemed to us to be afflicted with an element of cynicism, and moreover to lack a certain moral earnestness which is indispensable to any paper that affects to be critical in the interest of political and social reform.

REV. S. P. PUTNAM, of Omaha, Neb., who spoke so acceptably at the late meetings of the Free Religious Association in this city, has written the following letter which will explain itself:—

"BOSTON, June 4, 1875.

"G. W. FOX, Ass't. Sec. A. U. A.:

"Dear Sir,—I find that my intellectual convictions are of such a nature, that I cannot work freely or to advantage with the Unitarian body; and that Christianity, as almost universally understood, is something which I not only do not accept but believe injurious to the best interests of man. I therefore wish to have my name removed from the Year Book of the Unitarian Association, and to be no longer called a Unitarian or Christian minister.

"Very truly yours,

"S. P. PUTNAM."

THE SECOND RADICAL CLUB will have its annual Grove Meeting next Sunday, June 13. Its great success last year, with a similar occasion, lends a strong coloring of hope that this next one will be no less successful. The same place which the club found so agreeable last summer has been selected for this, and pretty much the former arrangements have been repeated by the committee in charge. Trains will leave the Fitchburg depot at 9:45 A. M., and 1 P. M. Tickets for the round trip will be sixty cents for adults, and thirty-five cents for children. They may be obtained only at this office prior to 4 o'clock P. M. on Saturday, and of the Secretary at the depot on Sunday morning. Members are expected to furnish refreshments as before.

ONE SAYS: "I believe in people doing and saying foolish things; it gives variety to life, and keeps self-conceit at its proper level." There is some quaint wisdom in this; and yet the wisdom it hints is that, when we have fairly outgrown our foolishness, we see how even it may have been an essential part of our whole experience, and helped us on to a wiser age. Certainly it were not well to suggest that deliberately to do or say a foolish thing is advisable under any circumstances; only that human nature will have expression—foolishly if it must, wisely if it can; and that the beauty and mystery of the whole thing is that even folly is made to promote wisdom in the end, and that our full-rounded life is built up of many and various fragments.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

Our Ancestors, and their Religion.

BY A. W. STEVENS.

Every man, I suppose, has some interest in his ancestors. He likes to know who they were and what they were. The man of the novel, Japhet in Search of his Father, is only a representative, I take it, of most men; inasmuch as we all have a natural curiosity to know what our origin was as well as what our destiny is to be. By knowing our progenitors we are helped to know ourselves; for it is by heritage, greatly, that we are what we are. And although the child may improve upon the parent, yet the child is because the parent was. By going back, therefore, to the source of our origin, finding out who our ancestors were, where they were born and when, how they lived and acted, what they loved and hated, what they believed and denied, what they hoped for and feared,—by ascertaining or endeavoring to ascertain all this, we shall be satisfying—shall we not?—a natural and laudable curiosity; and shall arrive at a better understanding of our own character and circumstances.

Races, no less than individuals, have an ancestry. Every nation must own its parent as well as every child. Every people must account for itself in part, by giving an account of the people from whom it sprang. Unless a race or nation knows the peculiarities of the race or nation it came from, it cannot know what is peculiar to itself,—how much it owes to inheritance, and how much to native genius and originality. Perchance it may find that there are some things, which it has been supposing were of its own invention and discovery, that really are referable to the country and the people whose lineal offspring it is. In the home and heart of the remote land and race, out of whose midst it came, it may with surprise discover many of the same manners and customs, institutions and beliefs, common stories and fables, nursery tales and rhymes even, which are familiar and prevalent in its own community, and which it thought were indigenous there. Such a discovery, however, although it may greatly damage national conceit and egotism, yet will have a tendency to quicken in the heart of modern nations great interest in and sympathy with ancient and ancestral nations; and though these latter may be extinct, or exist only in faded relics and remnants, yet their history will be more intently studied, and all that gives information of them more eagerly sought after, than ever before. And thus men will become at the same time more intelligent concerning themselves, and concerning the race—the whole race—to which they belong.

WHO WERE OUR ANCESTORS?

Who were our ancestors?—the ancestors of us who call ourselves Americans? Shall we say the English? This will be true; and yet our question only will have begun to be answered. To trace our ancestry back to England, or Scotland, or Ireland, or France, or Germany, is to take but a very short step backward in our ancestral investigations. This country is exceedingly juvenile. Compared with the age of other nations, the American nation is only a day old. We were born yesterday, and every child of us knows that our mother was England. But England is herself comparatively young; she is one of the modern, not one of the ancient, nations. Only a few centuries ago England was not a nation at all,—the country and the people inhabiting it were known under a different name. English civilization, great and noble as it is, is comparatively recent; ten centuries will cover it,—for that period will take us back to Alfred the Great, who was the father of English civilization. Ten centuries—a thousand years—this is a brief space of time when we are encountering the past, when we are investigating the lineage of nations! Before Alfred, what? No England—no English nation, no English civilization worth the name.

We must go behind England then—behind the English nation—in the search of our real ancestry. But what do we find behind England and the English? We find Britain and the Britons. Britain was the name which England was known by in the time of Julius Caesar, and for some time after. The Britons were not our modern British (although these latter take their name from the former), but they were an obscure tribe rather than a nation of people. They were semi-barbarous. They lived in huts, and dressed in the skins of wild beasts. They had no great cities or towns; they had no commerce or trade worth mentioning; they could show no signs of any considerable advancement in the arts and sciences—indeed, their civilization was exceedingly rudimentary.

Do we find, now, our real ancestry among these ancient Britons? No, we do not; although they help to constitute the basis of it, and in approaching them we begin to touch bottom as we voyage up the stream of history searching for the sources of our ethnical life. But the ancient Britons alone would hardly have given birth to the great English nation, and so have stood as our progenitors. They had to be invaded by a superior people; they had to be re-enforced in their stock by harder, more heroic, more enterprising, and more conquering tribes, before they could be worked up into the constituent elements of the noble Anglo-Saxon family. The Britons furnished the ground; but other nations had to bring the materials with which to build up the glorious civilization of our modern England.

Now how was this done? Briefly as possible I will try to tell.

THE ROMANS.

Fifty-five years B. C., Julius Caesar—who was then one of the three ruling consuls of Rome—flushed with success elsewhere, turned his intrepid look towards the North, and determined on the conquest of Gaul. Gaul was the ancient name of France, and of the northernmost portion of Italy. The North of Europe was at this time little known to the South, very slight communication having taken place between the two sections. By Romans, in Caesar's time, the North was considered as a vast outlying wilderness filled with hordes and tribes of semi-barbarians, who were pretty good in making war and in going on predatory expeditions, but not amounting to much in other respects. Caesar, however, loved a stout foe, and bravely courted danger. If the North was difficult to subdue, all the more did he wish to subdue it. So with a large army of infantry and cavalry, and a considerable navy, he started forth on the enterprise to conquer Gaul. Having succeeded in this, it was only a step for him to enter Britain, which he did; and succeeded, after some hard fighting, in putting that country also under subjection to the Roman eagles. This was fifty-five years B. C. For one hundred years thereafter—owing to civil disorders in Rome—Britain was alternately free from and subject to Roman power. But, fifty years after Christ, Claudius Caesar determined to subdue it wholly; and in connection with his successor, Nero, this was finally accomplished, and the Britons—after being slaughtered by the thousand and the tens of thousands—were at last fairly conquered and made vassals by the Romans. During this last effort in the conquest of Britain, London was founded by the Romans; and those immense walls and dykes and garrisons were built, the remains of which are visible in England to this day. For four hundred years after this final conquest, Rome remained the complete mistress of Britain. Then her power at home began to decline, and with it went down her empire in the West and North of Europe. The Britons were now once more free, and endeavored to carry on their own affairs in their own way.

THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

But now new enemies appeared. The Picts and the Scots—who had been kept at bay hitherto by the Romans—poured down from their invulnerable highlands, and carried dismay and devastation to the hearts and homes of the Britons. The Picts and Scots were a small tribe, but a fierce one. The Britons, now in their helplessness, called on their former masters, the Romans, for assistance against these rugged invaders from Scotland. But the Romans were having enough to do at home, and refused all succor. The Britons then, in their extremity, applied to two neighboring German tribes—called the Angles and the Saxons—to come over and help them. This call was heard and answered. The Angles and the Saxons came—joined their united forces with those of the Britons, and soon chased the Picts and Scots back to their highland homes, and compelled them to remain there. And here, for the first time, the Anglo-Saxon race appears in history; formed by the union of the Angles and Saxons in one tribe or nation. And at this point we begin to feel that we must be very near to if not quite arrived at the fountain head of our ancestry. But we have at least one step more to take.

The Anglo-Saxons, having assisted the Britons to drive out their enemies, were not then disposed to return to their own country, nor to leave the Britons to enjoy the fruits of the victory by themselves; but they determined to remain and make the new country their own, and to set up their authority there. This they did; and the Britons, though delivered from the Scots, became straightway delivered over again to their deliverers. Here Britain and the Britons disappear from history, and the Anglo-Saxons and England take their place. This was A. D. 450.

THE NORTHMEN.

But the Anglo-Saxons—or Saxons as we will call them—were not suffered long to remain in peace in their new possessions. Away to the North, on the Scandinavian peninsula, there dwelt another tribe of people, whose fame had widely gone forth, and who were held in great respect and fear even at Rome. This was the tribe of Normans, or Northmen. As early as A. D. 398-410, the Normans (called by the inhabitants of Southern Europe Goths, which signifies a rude, barbarous people) had left their wintry regions in the North, marched the whole length of the continent of Europe, and arrived at the gates of the "Eternal City," which three times they entered, and the third time ravaged, pillaged, and sacked. Thus these bold adventurers, so early—before the Saxons had entered Britain—had made their name a terror throughout the length and breadth of Europe. They marched and counter-marched the continent at pleasure, and there was no power so mighty as permanently to impede their progress. This was the case until the time of Charlemagne—A. D. 768-814—when they were somewhat checked and beaten back; not, however, before they had made permanent establishments in some of the Southern and Western nations of Europe. During all this time, they had continued to molest and invade the countries nearer home. They made repeated incursions into Germany, England, and France; and succeeded, after the death of Charlemagne, in compelling one of his feeble heirs—then king of France—to cede to them one of the noblest provinces in the north of the kingdom, in which they permanently settled, making it the dukedom of Normandy. And here they were the near and dangerous rivals of the Saxons—only the Straits of Dover lying between the two. The Saxons were well aware of the character of their powerful neighbors, for almost from the time they had taken possession of England they had been molested and terrified by them, as they had swooped down from Scandinavia with the swiftness and fury of northern winds and storms. Indeed, for a great many years these Normans had disputed with the Saxons for the possession of England, much of the time with about an even degree of success. Under Alfred the Great—who reigned from 872 to 901 A. D.—they were temporarily checked; and the Saxons, under this great king, saw their palmiest days in England. But it almost always has transpired that, after a truly great man has lived and borne sway with mighty influence in a nation's affairs, he has been succeeded by a set of truly small men who have well nigh undone what he did, and wasted what he created. This was the case after Alfred; for, so feeble was the administration of his successors, that in a very short time the Northmen were quite as powerful in England as the Saxons were; and, in little more than a century after Alfred's death, these bold and all-conquering adventurers from Scandinavia had made themselves complete masters of the Saxons, and put their own king on the throne of England. William, Duke of Normandy in France—who himself was a whole-blooded Northman, from the stock of Scandinavia—in A. D. 1066 crossed over from Normandy into England, defeated Harold, the last Saxon king, at the battle of Hastings, and took entire possession of the crown and territory of England. Henceforth, the Saxons were never in power again in the British isles, but almost from that time to this Norman influence, Norman manners, Norman customs, Norman character, may be said to have prevailed in the English nation.

And now, at last, we have found our real ancestry. It is a composite race, made up of many materials, to which we belong. The blood of the ancient Britons, the Angles, the Saxons, the Normans, flows in our veins,—and we are indebted to them all for our national character. But it is from the Scandinavian stock that we are especially descended. We were born out of the North—out of the hoar-frost and rime. We came from the loins of the mighty Goths, who for more than five centuries made the continent of Europe tremble beneath their mighty tramp, as they marched all-conquering from the ice-fields of Norway to the vine-clad plains of Italy. We call ourselves Anglo-Saxons: it would be more proper if we called ourselves Anglo-Normans; for the Northmen of Europe stamped deeper than any other tribe or family their strong peculiarities upon our English temperament and constitution. They transmitted to us that imperious and indomitable will, that adventurous and enterprising spirit, which straightway sent England to the front rank among the nations of Europe; and which has since made America—the child of England—to loom up as a nation which has no successful rival in the arts of war or of peace. And it is not a little remarkable that Rome—who ruled in England four hundred years—did not succeed in leaving her language there; but in France—where she also ruled an equal length of time—she did leave it, inasmuch as the Latin is still the basis of the French tongue. The English language is more pure and original—having a less number of foreign elements in it—than any other of the great European languages, except the German. And this is owing in chief measure, no doubt, to the invincibility of the Anglo-Norman character—to its power of resistance. Our vernacular is less facile and graceful than the French or Italian, but it is stronger and sturdier. It is more racy; it smacks of the soil, of the woods, of the rocks, of the glens, of the hills—aye, of the snow, the frost, and the ice.

I said we had found at last our ancestry among the Northmen—as indeed we have. But the insatiable spirit of inquiry moves us to ask just one more question. Who were the Northmen, and where did they come from?

Although this question has long been asked by those who are curious about the history of man, it is only within the last twenty-five or fifty years that it has received a satisfactory answer. Once, all that could be said about the Northmen was that they came from the Scandinavian peninsula; that is, from Norway and Sweden. Those who insisted on the Church-dogma, of all men from one pair, of course felt obliged to refer the Northmen back to Adam; but how Adam's children ever got strayed so far from home, and got so changed from the style of their parents, these good Bible-believers did not pretend to explain, except by a miracle and a succession of miracles. But miracles are not necessary to account for anything. They are out of place entirely, when we wish to proceed soberly and scientifically in any investigation. Without the convenience of miracles—but by patient, persevering, systematic, laborious study—it has been discovered who the Northmen were, and where they originally came from; and the result is quite as wonderful as any miracle could be.

THE ARYANS.

By the science of Comparative Philology—which is the study of human languages, their origin, their constitution, their affinities—it has been clearly demonstrated that the Northmen came from Northern-Central Asia; that they belong to that great and ancient branch of the human family, which is called the Aryan branch, or the Aryan race—or sometimes the Indo-European race; that they are members of this race with the Hindus, the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans.

In very remote times—how remote none can say—the ancestors of all these nations lived in ancient Iran, or Northern-Central Asia. For some reason—probably because of a very decided change in the climate of that region, from pleasant mildness to intolerable cold—this ancient people determined to emigrate, and seek new homes elsewhere. They divided into two streams; one went south-east into India, the other went north-west into Europe. These last as they slowly migrated planted colonies, or left detachments, in Persia, in Greece, in Italy, in Gaul, in Germany, in Scandinavia. Of course, these various migrations covered an immense period of time; and between the time when the emigration from old Iran first began, to that when the most advanced wave of it had swept clean up into the northern-most portion of Europe, thousands of years must have intervened. So that, throughout this immense lapse of time, and the changes which occurred meanwhile, the nations starting from the same point would have forgotten their common source and origin, their original family relationship and connection. This, indeed, they did. From having originally constituted one and the same nation, they came to constitute many and various nations; from having originally spoken one tongue, they came to speak a great many different tongues; from having originally substantially but one code of laws, one set of manners and customs, they came to have different codes of laws and very various manners and customs. And yet, underneath all the wonderful variety which now distinguishes these different nations, on close and careful attention there is clearly discoverable a still more wonderful fundamental unity. As we dig down through the vast deposits which centuries upon centuries have piled above the historical courses of this great race, we find that all the streams of national life which trickle down from Norway and Sweden, from Russia, Germany, and the British Isles, from France, Spain, Italy, and Greece,—and those which flow up from Persia and India,—we find that all these come together at last, and unite in one vast volume, and ascend to one fountain head, in the far off and now uncertain seat of the ancient Aryan race. Different as are the languages which these widely-scattered nations now speak, when we come to subject these languages to a careful and critical analysis,—when we examine their structure, get at their roots, and trace their ramifications and affinities,—wonderful as it may seem, we discover that they are all branches of one great trunk, dialects of one ancient tongue, which was spoken by the people who were the ancestors of Indian, Persian, Grecian, Roman, Celt, German, Saxon, and Norman alike. Incredible though it should appear, the very language which we Americans now speak is a sister language to that in which the sacred Scriptures of India and Persia were written more than a thousand years before the birth of Christ. Nay, more; as we pursue our curious investigations farther, we find that many of the same rhymes and stories which doubtless are sung and told in some of our American homes to-day,—in many at least of the homes of Norway and Sweden, England, Scotland, and Germany,—are the same essentially as those which are sung and told by many a Hindu mother to her child, and which descended to them and to us through long and tortuous channels from the old common parent stock in Northern Asia. So wonderful are the results of the science of Comparative Philology, which shows us how our ancestral lines run far out into the past, and intertwine with those of many another nation greatly remote from us in time and space!

These Northmen, then—our immediate ancestors—came legitimately by their adventuresome and roving spirit. They received it from their ancestors. No wonder, therefore, that they, as also the Germans and the Celts (the last of whom inhabited Gaul or France), should have sent out explorers to take possession of and to colonize neighboring provinces. Thus the Celts colonized Britain and Ireland; the northern Germans colonized Scotland in part (the Picts and Scots were Germanic or Teutonic tribes), and subsequently France, Spain, and Italy. The Northmen went almost everywhere, planting colonies and nations which in some cases had only a brief existence, and in others were permanent. Among other places to which their enterprising spirit carried them, the Northmen went to Iceland, Greenland, and even to America. Yes, five hundred years before Columbus discovered America, the Northmen had discovered it. In A. D. 1007, some of the Northmen, for the second or third time, came to this country, skirted along Massachusetts Bay, sailed around Cape Cod, past Nantucket and Duke's Islands, up into Mount Hope Bay; on the shores of which they landed, built their houses or booths, and remained there three years. So early, therefore, as the beginning of the eleventh century,—while yet this continent was entirely unknown to Europe, while even the dark ages were resting still over European nations,—the enterprising Northmen, our real ancestors, had discovered for us our destined home; had actually made a lodgment here, and reared the altars of that religion which now is the acknowledged faith of all Christians in America. For as early as the tenth century the Northmen, to a considerable extent, were converted to Christianity.

THE RELIGION OF THE NORTHMEN.

And now we have traced and followed the fortunes of the Northmen, not only in Europe, but from their origin in Northern-Central Asia, in a time so remote as to be unknown, to the eleventh century, when they had discovered and temporarily taken possession of America. It now remains for us to consider the religion of our ancestors, and to find out what their ideas of God and man, of the world, of duty, of life and immortality were, before they became Christians.

The religion of all the ancient tribes of Northern Europe was fundamentally and essentially one. Indeed, in many of its conspicuous and important features it bore a striking resemblance to the ancient religion of Greece, Persia, and India. Max Müller says: "The broad outlines of the ancient religions of those races (the Scandinavian, the German, the Celtic, the Greek, the Roman, the Persian, the Indian), were likewise the same; originally they all worshipped the same gods, and their earliest (Aryan) communities were not broken up before such pregnant conceptions as 'God,' 'evil spirit,' 'heaven,' 'sacred,' 'to worship,' 'to believe,' had found expression." Of course, all these religions were so-called pagan religions,—for all the nations professing them had a national existence long before Christianity had its origin; and yet they all anticipated Christianity in the fundamental and vital doctrines which it teaches; and, though some of these ancient religions have since given way to Christianity, they have not done so without imparting to the religion to which they succumbed some of their own healthful and vigorous life.

The religion of the Northmen is to be studied in their Sacred Scriptures, called the "Eddas." The manuscripts of these sacred books were found for the first time in Iceland, early in the seventeenth century. They immediately awakened in the minds of the few who cared for such studies the profoundest interest; and since that time they have been carefully studied and scrutinized, and have undergone numerous translations and publications in the Norwegian, Swedish, Danish, German, and English languages.

The Eddas were originally written and composed in the old Norse language, which was the language spoken by the Northmen in Scandinavia and Iceland; for in Iceland the Northmen established themselves in the ninth century, and built up a considerable community there, which continued and flourished for a long time; noble traces of which remain to this day. The precise date of the composition of the Eddas cannot be with certainty determined. Great antiquity is claimed for them by some; they are ascribed to a modern origin by others. Max Müller says that the poetic Eddas (for they were divided into prose and poetic parts) "were composed in Norway in the sixth century after Christ, carried to Iceland in the ninth, and written down (or written out in full) in the eleventh century." However that may be, they are the source of our reliable information concerning the religion of the Northmen.

And now what was that religion? Interesting as it would be to dwell upon the particulars of this faith, we must suffice ourselves now by mentioning only the important and most impressive features of it.

THE ASA-FAITH.

The ancient religion of the Northmen is usually called the Asa-Religion, or Asa-Faith,—from the Æsir; that is, the gods whom the Northmen worshipped. Of course we find in this Asa-Religion—as we do in every religion, excepting none—a great deal that is the result of superstition, an unenlightened, undeveloped state of the human intellect and conscience; we find a great deal that is grotesque and weird, fabulous and mythological. In this religion, as in every other, we have to separate the chaff from the wheat, the kernel from the husk, the spirit from the letter; we have to separate that in it which is essential and eternal from that which is only local, accidental, and transient. But whatever else we find in this religion, we find that at any rate which fed, inspired, and animated the hearts and minds of our heroic ancestors; we find that which shows them clearly to have been touched with the finger of Divine light and love, and which puts their fundamental faith in sympathy and relationship with the fundamental faith of the soul of man throughout all time.

CREATION—OR EVOLUTION.

The idea which the Northmen had of the origin of all things was substantially this: In the beginning, there were two World-principles or elements. One was Light and Heat; the other was Darkness and Cold. Between these, there was a deep abyss of emptiness, silence, and rest. But Light and Heat sent forth their beams across the yawning chasm, and touched the darkness and the cold. Immediately there is motion; and out of its bosom chaotic matter comes forth, and takes on form and organization. Thus is the first World-mass created, and the void space is filled with substance. But as yet the physical world only is created. The void is gone,—but silence yet remains. Now, then, the Animal-world appears, which comes forth of the Physical, and is allied to it. But even this is not all: a third result is yet to be reached. The Spirit-world is produced, which overcomes and rules the Physical and the Animal. Then darkness and cold and void and silence all flee away, and light and warmth and substance and life are instead.

First, heaven is filled with spirits. At the head of all these is Odin, who is spirit, power, and holiness. He has two brothers, who with himself constitute the Trinity—the three Æsir. But Odin is above all and over all; he is creator and sustainer; he is the All-Father,—by this name the Supreme Being was known and addressed by the Northmen. Odin creates Ask and Embla—the first man and the first woman, from whom all the rest of mankind were descended.

Now is Creation complete and perfect. The All-Father smiles upon his work, and watches over it with powerful and loving care. He is the spirit, the divinity, which resides and moves in it, as the soul in the body.

THE ENTRANCE OF EVIL.

In the first ages of creation, the Asa-Religion says, there was a time of peace and happiness among men and gods. But from the beginning there had been seeds or germs of evil, which slumbered in the World-mass—in the dark, cold, chaotic matter which Spirit partially overcame. From these there was produced a race of evil beings who inhabited the lowest, deepest, darkest, coldest place in Nature.* These were the Jötuns, the wicked giants, who by their very nature were at war with the good god Odin, and all his works. One of their number, called Loki, somehow managed to insinuate himself into the kind graces of the gods, and to get a place among them in heaven. Here he craftily fomented mischief and rebellion; and the consequence was that he and all who adhered to him were cast down out of heaven into the lowest depths again. From this time forth, Loki became the active agent of evil throughout the world. He is the author of earthquakes and eclipses, of every species of natural calamity. He is also the author of sin on the earth; for he crept into the midst of mankind, and stole away many hearts from good, by the alluring prizes of sensual and mercenary gain. Thus Odin and Loki—Good and Evil—come to be terrible antagonists and enemies.

MORAL CONFLICT.

The Asa-Religion says that when innocence left the earth righteousness came in its place. That is, when men were called on to decide whom they would serve, Odin or Loki; when they were led to make choice between good and evil,—then the vision of virtue dawned on them, and they saw that though they had ceased to be innocent they could become righteous. Hence, the moral law, the sense of duty, is taught in the Asa-Faith. Man hears the voice of the moral sense in him, calling him over to the side of good; but there is also in him his physical nature which draws him towards the evil. It is thus with man, says the Asa-Religion, because his moral or spiritual part came from Odin, while his sensuous and grosser part came from Loki. If he would be happy, however, and deserve the favor of the Æsir, he must take sides with them in fighting against the Jötuns. Then will he have lot with the spirits above, and receive an abundant reward. Otherwise, Loki will possess him altogether, and drag him finally down to the caverns of woe and despair.

IMMORTALITY.

For the Asa-Religion also clearly recognizes the future life of the soul, and teaches the doctrine of immortality. The Eddas say: "The All-Father made man, and gave him a soul that shall live and never perish, though the body rot to mould or burn to ashes." (See Dr. Dasent, Oxford essays on The Norsemen of Iceland.) They taught that the good, brave, and virtuous at death should ascend to Asgard, and dwell with Odin and his bright family; while the evil, the cowardly, and the sensual should descend to remain with Loki and his evil spirits, in Jötunheim.

Here I should say that the Asa-Religion speaks of various divisions of the universe. "Heim," in the old Norse language, means home. Therefore the home of the gods is called Godheim, or Asgard. The home of man is called Manheim, or Midgard. The home of the evil spirits, or Jötuns, is called Jötunheim. There are other divisions also, but these are the principal ones. In Asgard, where the gods live, is Valhalla, the great hall where Odin gives his banquets to his celestial companions, and where he receives the souls of the brave who are slain in battle.

DESTRUCTION AND REGENERATION.

The Eddas also speak of the end and regeneration of the world. The long and fierce struggle between Odin and Loki—or between the Æsir and the Jötuns—terminates at last in the destruction of everything. The vault of heaven cracks and falls; the earth bulges and yawns; the sea foams and lashes itself; the sun, moon, and stars are swallowed up in unyielding night; the Æsir and the Jötuns close in a final deadly contest—all creation ends in one tremendous crash, and rolls over into the yawning maw of the bottomless abyss! Nothing less terrific, stunning, and perfectly tremendous than such a winding up of all things could have suited at all the vigorous imagination of the Northmen. Tempestuous and destructive in their natures, they craved a grand catastrophe as the close of all things; and, in their demand for the last touch of the awful, they were willing to risk even the destruction of Odin and the gods along with the Jötuns, trusting that the great All-Father would contrive somehow to emerge from the universal demolition, and recover himself and his kingdom once more!

* It is a singular fact that, in the Asa-Religion, hell was regarded as an intensely cold rather than a hot place!

And this, indeed, was the case. For, though Odin and all his gods went down in their grand final tussle with the Jötuns, the bright and glorious deity reappeared, waved his sceptre over the universe, and a new earth was evoked, or rather the old one came forth regenerated and purified—the immortal good of gods and men was recovered, and the world went on again glad, pure, and rejoicing, free from the stain and thrall of evil forever. All this is only a lively image of the great struggle which is going on between good and evil, spirit and matter, virtue and vice, and the final certain triumph of the former over the latter.

SPIRITS—DEMONOLOGY.

The Northmen shared largely in the almost universal belief among men in the agency of spirits in connection with human affairs. Is not Scandinavia the home of fairytories, of elves, of trolls, of sprites, and goblins? All the Germanic races are full of the belief in such things. Moreover, the Northmen believed in guardian spirits—that each man had one or more. And they believed in the consulting with spirits, in getting information and help from them. There was a large class among them who had second-sight; who dealt familiarly with spirits, and acted as "mediums" between them and ordinary mortals. This, at least, was the popular notion.

WORSHIP.

The old Northmen were not accustomed to offer their worship in temples. They believed that God lived out of doors, and could best be found there; that he preferred to meet his children in the large and glorious temple which he himself had constructed. So they worshipped him, even as their ancient brethren the Persians did, under the blue sky, often in the aisles and arches of the woods. In later times, however, they did have temples; but they were simple in construction and arrangement.

Thus I have given an outline of the religion of our sturdy ancestors—the old Norse-Folk. Of course I have omitted a great deal that is interesting and instructive, and have done no more than sketch the subject, and indicate the prominent features. How many of the stories and fables familiar to our Norman and Saxon ancestors I have left unmentioned, though they are part and parcel of the religious faith and daily life of those people! They would well repay any one for the trouble of looking them up, especially those who love the homely but pleasant lore of our rude ancestors. I say rude; and yet, though these Scandinavians were fierce, stormy, and warlike in their disposition, they had also many noble and excellent qualities. They knew how to be generous to a friend, and magnanimous to a foe. There was nothing mean, sneaking, or treacherous about them. They were frank, manful, and true; brave to the point of rashness, rough in their encounter as the north wind; and yet they could be kind, and gentle, and tender. May their memory live long in our hearts! May we keep and cherish all the truths and virtues they have transmitted to us, and discard all their errors and vices!

EDDA MAXIMS.

The following are some of the maxims found in the older Edda, which were believed to have been given by Odin himself:—

Vices and virtues are borne by the sons of men blended in the breast; no man is so good that his faults do not follow him; no one so bad that he is good for nothing.

A friend more trusty can no man have than a good understanding.

One's own home is the best, though little it may be; every man is master in his own house. Though he have but two goats, and a cottage thatched with boughs, it is better than begging.

This I counsel thee, secondly, that thou swear not an oath unless it be true. Cruel fetters shall bind the traitor. Wretched is he who breaks his word.

Hast thou a friend in whom thou hast full confidence, and thou wilt receive good from him? Then mingle thy thoughts with his, exchange gifts with him and visit him often.

Never be the first to break off rashly with thy friend. Sorrow consumes the heart when thou hast no one to whom thou canst open thy whole mind.

Make thy friend's misfortune thine own.

Once I was young, and travelled alone through wild paths. But I thought myself rich when I met with others. Man is a joy to man.

That is a communion of soul where each can say confidently to the other all his thoughts. Anything is better than to be false. He is not a friend who speaks only fair words.

Never rejoice at the misfortune of others, but let their prosperity please thee.

Water he needs who comes to thy table; a towel and a hospitable welcome. By good treatment thou shalt win from him good words and kindness in return.

Scoff not the guest, nor spit upon him from the window. Be kind to the poor.

He talks too much who never ceases his vain flow of words. The flippant tongue, unless it be checked, often runs itself into mischief.

No heavier burden is borne by a man than immoderate drinking; nor is ale so good as it is said for the sons of men. The more one drinks, the less he knows, until his understanding is gone.

The bird of forgetfulness hovers over the drinking room, and steals away the senses of men.

The herd knows when to go home, and it leaves the pasture; but the foolish man knows not the measure of his stomach.

The gluttonous man, unless he makes use of his reason, eats his own death.

His power the wise man shall wield with moderation.

Cheerful and glad let every man be to the end of his life.

The heart only knows what dwells the heart nearest. It alone can betray itself.

There is no disease worse for the brave man, than to be discontented with his lot.

The master of the house should be cheerful at home, kind to his guests and circumspect; let him be attentive and affable.

The fool stares when he comes a guest. If he gets a drink, his whole mind is opened.

The tree pines away which stands within the village; no bark nor leaf remains to shelter it. So is it with the man whom no one loves; why shall he live long?

Bear thyself irreproachably towards thy brethren. Be slow to avenge thyself on them, even though they injure thee. This, it is said, will profit thee in death.

Wealth is like the glance of the eye—it is a most unstable friend.

Riches depart, kindred die, man himself dies also; but a good name dies never for him who gained it.

WOMAN'S PART IN THE CONCORD CELEBRATION.

BY LOUISA M. ALCOTT.

Being frequently asked, "What part the women took in the Concord Centennial Celebration?" I give herewith a brief account of our share on that occasion.

Having set our houses in order, stored our larders, and filled our rooms with guests, we girded up our weary souls and bodies for the great day, feeling that we must do or die for the honor of old Concord.

We had no place in the procession, but such women as wished to hear the oration were directed to meet in the town-hall at half-past nine, and there wait till certain persons, detailed for the purpose, should come to lead them to the tent, where a limited number of seats had been provided for the weaker vessels.

This seemed a sensible plan; and, as a large proportion of ladies chose the intellectual part of the feast, the hall was filled with a goodly crowd at the appointed hour. No one seemed to know what to do except wait, and that we did with the patience born of long practice. But it was very trying to the women of Concord to see invited guests wandering forlornly about, or sitting in chilly corners, meekly wondering why the hospitalities of the town were not extended to them, as well as to their "men folks," who were absorbed into the pageant in one way or another.

For an hour we women waited, but no one came; and the sound of martial music so excited the patient party that with one accord we moved down to the steps below, where a glimpse of the approaching procession might cheer our eyes. Here we stood, with the north wind chilling us to the marrow of our bones, a flock of feminine Casabiancas, with the slight difference of freezing instead of burning at our posts.

Some wise virgins, who put not their trust in men, departed to shift for themselves; but fifty or more obeyed orders and stood fast till, just as the procession appeared, an agitated gentleman with a rosette at his buttonhole gave the brief command:—

"Ladies, cross the common and wait for your escort!"

Then he vanished, and was seen no more.

Over we went, like a flock of sheep, leaving the show behind us, but comforting ourselves with the thought of the seats "saving up" for us, and of the treat to come. A cheerful crowd, in spite of the bitter wind, the rude comments of the men swarming by, and the sad certainty which slowly dawned upon us that we were entirely forgotten. The gay and gallant presence of a granddaughter of the Dr. Ripley who watched the fight from the Old Manse kept up our spirits; for this indomitable lady circulated among us like sunshine, inspiring us with such confidence that we rallied round the little flag she bore, and followed where it led.

Patience has its limits, and there came a moment when the revolutionary spirit of '76 blazed up in the bosoms of these long-suffering women; for, when some impetuous soul cried out, "Come on, and let us take care of ourselves!" there was a general movement; the flag fluttered to the front, veils were close-reefed, skirts kilted up, arms locked, and with one accord the Light Brigade charged over the red bridge, up the hill, into the tented field, rosy and red-nosed, dishevelled but dauntless.

The tent was closely packed, and no place appeared but a corner of the platform. Anxious to seat certain gray-haired ladies weary with long waiting, and emboldened by a smile from Senator Wilson, a nod from Representative May, and a pensive stare from Orator Curtis, I asked the President of the day if a few ladies could occupy that corner till seats could be found for them.

"They can sit or stand anywhere in the town except on this platform; and the quicker they get down the better, for the gentlemen are coming to take these places."

This gracious reply made me very glad to descend into the crowd again, for there at least good-nature reigned; and there we stood, placidly surveyed by the men (who occupied the seats set apart for us), not one of whom stirred, though the grandmother of Boston waited in the ranks.

My idea of hospitality may be old-fashioned, but I must say I felt ashamed of Concord that day, when all I could offer my guests, admiring pilgrims to this "Mecca of the mind," was the extreme edge of an unplanned board; for, when the gods were settled, leave was given us to sit on the rim of the platform.

Perched there, like a flock of tempest-tossed pigeons, we had the privilege of reposing among the sacred boots of the Gamaliels at whose feet we sat, and of listening to the remarks of the reporters, who evidently felt that the elbow-room of the almighty press should not be encroached upon even by a hair's breadth.

"No place for women," growled one.

"Never was a fitter," answered a strong-minded lady standing on one foot.

"Ought to have come earlier, if they come at all."

"So they would, if they had not obeyed orders. Never will again."

"Don't see why they couldn't be contented with seeing the procession."

"Because they preferred poetry and patriotism to fuss and feathers."

"Better have it all their own way, next time."

"No doubt they will, and I hope we shall all be there to see."

So the dialogue ended in a laugh, and the women resigned themselves to cold shoulders all round. But, as I looked about me, it was impossible to help thinking that there should have been a place for the great-granddaughters of Prescott, William Emerson, John Hancock, and Dr. Ripley, as well as for Isaac Davis's old sword, the scissor's that cut the immortal cartridges, and the ancient flag some woman's fingers made. It seemed to me that their presence on that platform would have had a deeper significance than the gold lace which adorned one side, or the senatorial ponderosity under which it broke down on the other; and that the men of Concord had missed a grand opportunity of imitating those whose memory they had met to honor.

The papers have told the tale of that day's exploits and experiences, but the papers did not get all the little items, and some of them were rather funny. Just before the services began, a distracted usher hurried in to inform Judge Hoar that the wives of several potentates had been left out in the cold, and must be accommodated. Great was the commotion then, for these ladies, being bobs to political kites, could not be neglected; so a part of the seats reserved for women were with much difficulty cleared, and the "elect precious" set thereon. Dear ladies! how very cold and wretched they were when they got there, and how willingly the "free and independent citizenesses" of Concord forgave them for reducing their limited quarters to the point of suffocation, as they spread their cloaks over the velvet of their guests, still trying to be hospitable under difficulties.

When order was restored, what might be called "the Centennial Break Down" began. The President went first—was it an omen?—and took refuge among the women who, I am happy to say, received him kindly, and tried to temper the wind to His Imperturbability, as he sat among them, looking so bored that I longed to offer him a cigar.

The other gentlemen stood by the ship, which greatly diversified the performances by slowly sinking with all on board but the captain. Even the orator tottered on the brink of ruin more than once, and his table would have gone over if a woman had not held up one leg of it for an hour or so. No light task, she told me afterward, for when the inspired gentleman gave an impressive thump, it took both hands to sustain the weight of his eloquence. Another lady was pinned down by the beams falling on her skirts, but cheerfully sacrificed them, and sat still, till the departure of the presidential party allowed us to set her free.

Finding us bound to hear it out, several weary gentlemen offered us their seats, after a time; but we had the laugh on our side now, and sweetly declined, telling them their platform was not strong enough to hold us.

It was over at last, and such of us as had strength enough left went to the dinner, and enjoyed another dish of patriotism, "cold without"; others went home to dispense hot comforts, and thaw the congealed visitors who wandered to our doors.

Then came the ball, and there all went well, for woman was in her sphere; her "only duty was to please," and the more there were the merrier. So the deserted damsels of the morning found themselves the queens of the evening, and, forgetting and forgiving, bore their part as gayly as if they had put on the vigor of their grandmothers with the old brocades that became them so well.

Plenty of escorts, ushers, and marshals at last, and six chairs apiece if we wanted them. Gentlemen who had been as grim as griffins a few hours before were all devotion now, and spectacles that had flashed awful lightning on the women who dared prefer poetry to polkas now beamed upon us benignly, and hoped we were enjoying ourselves, as we sat nodding along the walls while our guests danced.

That was the end of it; and by four A. M. peace fell upon the exhausted town, and from many a welcome pillow went up the grateful sigh:—

"Thank Heaven, we shall not have to go through this again!"

No, not quite the end; for by-and-by there will come a day of reckoning, and then the tax-paying women of Concord will not be forgotten, I think; will not be left to wait uncalled upon, or be considered in the way. And then, I devoutly wish that those who so bravely bore their share of that day's burden without its honor will rally round their own flag again; and, following in the footsteps of their forefathers, will utter another protest that shall be "heard round the world."—Woman's Journal.

DRAPER AND HIS CRITICS.

Dr. Draper has reason for gratitude to his friends, and doubly so to his enemies. He wrote a bold book upon a subject never before separately treated, and by a large portion of the press it has been received with favor as a valuable and important contribution to the serious thought of the time. The interest in the subject, the reputation of its author, and the cordial commendation of many critics, were certain to secure the work a fair measure of success; but, on the other hand, a considerable number of writers were enraged by it, and, with the usual folly of passion, have execrated it into about thrice the circulation that it would otherwise have had. It is to be hoped they will learn that things are often overruled, in this world, to ends not contemplated by their contrivers. This, however, lends no excuse to bad practices, and those who have unscrupulously attacked Dr. Draper's work are to be held to account for it, just the same as if they had not overreached themselves in the result aimed at.

The honest and intelligent criticism of his book will, no doubt, be respected by its author, and objections to its reasonings and conclusions will probably be taken into careful consideration; while, if convinced of their validity, he may be expected to indicate it in future editions of the volume. But by a very considerable portion of the religious press, and by many secular journals, the editors of which know where to flatter and where to abuse, with a view to brisk sales, the book has been vehemently denounced. Scribner's Monthly, for example, published in March an admirable article on the "Indecencies of Criticism," and the same number contained a "criticism" of Dr. Draper's work, illustrating them so perfectly as to raise the suspicion that such was its design. The frothy invective that has been copiously poured out under the name of criticism is, of course, not worth noticing; nor shall we trouble ourselves with the various petty objections that have been raised, and that are so easy to raise, against a work of this character. But one criticism, particularly, deserves attention, because it lies against the whole reason and purpose of the book, and has been made on all sides; in fact, it forms the only unanimous basis of attack on the part of Dr. Draper's assailants. It is said that his work is a fiction, and represents no reality; that his subject is an illusion, his title a misnomer, and his book a mere figment of the imagination. He professes, it is said, to write a "History of the Conflict between Religion and Science," when there is not, and never has been, any such real conflict, and therefore no possibility of its history. The organs of all the Orthodox denominations are in emphatic accord upon this point, and even the outside sects—Jews, Unitarians, and Catholics, whom the Orthodox repudiate as beyond the pale of Christianity, as knowing nothing of true religion—take precisely the same ground in regard to Dr. Draper's work. The Jewish Times, for example, says: "Is there really a conflict between science and religion? We answer emphatically, no! There is no such conflict! there can be no such conflict!" Dr. Thomas Hill, in the Unitarian Review, says of Draper's book, that "so far from giving us a history of the conflict between science and religion, it gives us nothing to show that such a conflict ever existed"; and Dr. Brownson, at the Roman Catholic extreme, declares of our author's volume, "He professes to give in it the history of the conflict between religion and science, or of a conflict that has never occurred, and never can occur." There is, at all events, little conflict here, but an harmonious strain of denial of the legitimacy of Dr. Draper's subject, all along the line, and which reaches even to the dubious borders of that which is recognized as no religion at all.

What, now, are we to make of this? It can hardly be that these diverse parties have solemnly conspired to perpetrate a huge joke; and we can only suppose that they are serious at the expense of their intelligence. Religion and science have certainly coexisted in the world for a long time, and they have both figured pretty largely in human thought and human affairs. They must have had some relations with each other, and these relations must have had a definite character. If they have not been in conflict, then they have been out of conflict, or in harmony. Those who deny the antagonism must affirm the opposite, or that the relations of religion and science are, and always have been, those of concord and harmony. But, if this be so, let it be understood that Dr. Draper's work is not the only one that is discredited. What means the multitude of books that have been written professedly to bring these subjects into harmony? There is a vast body of theological literature, going back for centuries, that is devoted to the work of reconciling religion and science. Whole libraries of such literature have been consecrated to the harmonization of separate and special phases of that relation. Generation after generation have spent a large part of their theological force in reconciling Christian doctrine, which has been held as religion, with astronomical, geological, biological, and ethnological science. If Dr. Draper is a romancer, then all this must also go to the account of romance. If there has been no conflict, then there could be no reconciliation, for the attempt to reconcile that which is already harmonious is absurd. If it be said that our ignorant predecessors may have fancied a hostility which we now know to be unreal, the reply is, that the work of reconciliation was never so rife as to-day. We could run the Popular Science Monthly alone on the papers we receive from the theological side, aiming to harmonize present religious thought with the present condition of science. Why this vigorous and comprehensive effort to harmonize the already harmonious? The religious periodicals abound in discussions aiming to compose the alleged differences and discords of religion and science; and there pours from the press a continuous stream of books devoted to the same end. An impending volume of eight hundred pages is announced by a correspondent of the Evening Post, who gives an analysis of its contents, and remarks: "The conflict between science and religion as to man's origin on this planet has been so ardent, and the interest which men of culture the world over feel in the subject is so deep and growing, that I can hardly be mistaken in supposing that the readers of the Evening Post will be pleased to receive a synopsis of Mr. Southall's book, the proof-sheets of which I have been kindly permitted to examine. He combats the views of Lyell, Lubbock, Evans, Lartet, De Mortillet, Nillson, Worsaae, Désor, and others, that man is several hundred thousand years old; or, as Mr. Geikie and Mr. Boyd Dawkins, in their recent books put it, preglacial." Again: "The book will provoke a deal of criticism in scientific and religious circles. Persons far more competent than the present writer to pronounce judgment upon its merits do not hesitate to say that it is the most important contribution yet made in America to the theological side of this weighty subject." Of course, "the theological side," which holds that there is no such thing as "the conflict between science and religion," "ardent" or otherwise, will at once proceed to squelch this superfluous writer; and when they have done so, and repudiated the folly and futility of all other books of the same class, and dried up the discussion in their periodicals, it will be time to talk to Dr. Draper about the ill-siveness of the subject-matter of his history. There is something not a little ludicrous in the attitude of those who are lustily continuing a fight that is centuries old; and, when the history of it comes to be written, suddenly turn non-resistants, and protest that it is all a mistake, and that there has really never been any conflict at all! Can it be that it is because they would rather not have the history appear?

But it will be said that truth can never be in conflict with itself; that religious truth and scientific truth must harmonize, and that any apparent antagonism is due to prejudice and imperfect knowledge. Granted; but this concedes the fact of a conflict, and only proposes a theory of its cause. The harmony affirmed is not a harmony realized, but rather hoped for, as a possibility of the future, to which present broad and thorough investigation is tending; and with this we entirely agree. But the hope of a state of things yet to be reached cannot be made a ground of denial of what is, and has been. It is maintained that, at bottom, there is no real conflict between capital and labor, and many indulge the anticipation that their relations will be ultimately harmonized; but he who denies that there is now any such conflict had better spend a few days in the mining districts of Pennsylvania, where for months this conflict has threatened the peace of society. It is also held that the true and highest interest of nations is that of concord, and many think that the world will yet grow into international amity and unity; but shall we therefore deny the past existence of war, and discredit as groundless all our histories of international hostility? The case of religion and science is exactly parallel. However they may finally be brought into accord, they certainly are not in that relation now, and no antagonism of the past has been more deep and unrelenting, and more defiant of all efforts at adjustment, than this. The conflict between religion and science, or between the study of Nature and the tracing out of its order, and the systems of belief that claim a religious character, is as much a reality of human experience as the collisions of nations, and just as much a proper subject for the historian.

Dr. Draper has been much reproached for not defining what he means by religion. There is no complaint that he has not defined science, because no need of it is felt; everybody understands what science is. But it is not so with religion. The theological world is full of dispute and contention as to what religion is. It is loudly declared by the theological party that science and religion are in harmony, and then the theological groups fall straightway to battling over the initial question as to what constitutes religion! Each group assumes it to be what its members believe, and what those with different beliefs do not possess. The reverend representative of the Unitarians, Dr. Hill, says of the oldest and most numerous Christian communion: "The hostility of this corrupted Church toward science was no greater than its hostility to religion; religion and science, twin forms of truth, were alike persecuted by this dragon; and it is both an injury and insult to religion to ascribe to her the evil deeds of those who hate her, and wore her name simply as a cloak for their political ambition and their intolerant pride. For every martyr of science, history can show a thousand martyrs of religion slain by the ecclesiastical powers of Rome." But the representative of the "dragon," at the opposite wing, is ready with his reply to this Unitarian Gentle. Dr. Brownson says: "Christianity teaches that Gentilism is apostasy from God and from his truth, and that so far from being his worship it is the worship of devils. We protest, therefore, against the logic that concludes that what it finds true of Gentilism is and must be true of Christianity. We protest also against concluding that, because Protestantism is a congeries of absurdities, Catholicity is unreasonable and false. Gentilism and Protestantism may stand in the same category, or be simply varieties of the same species; but they are specifically, generically different from Christianity." And between these two extremes there is a crowd of sects which agree in little else than in dismissing the Catholics and Unitarians to perdition as destitute of all religion! Dr. Draper, it is evident, would have complicated his case to little purpose had he gone into definitions, and thus virtually assumed to decide, among these conflicting claimants, which has the true religion. For historical purposes Dr. Draper was compelled to take broad views, and to recognize as religious all bodies of people who combine and organize for religious ends, profess religious faith, and make claims to religious character; giving prominence in his treatment of the subject to those who have been historically most prominent, and are most responsible for theological resistance to the reception of scientific ideas.—Prof. Youmans, in Popular Science Monthly.

THACKERAY had a nose of most peculiar shape, as may be seen by his portrait. The bridge was very low, and the nostrils extremely well developed. On one occasion, at a party where Douglas Jerrold was present, it was mentioned that Mr. Thackeray's religious opinions were unsettled, and that a lady of his acquaintance was doing her best to convert him to Romanism. "To Romanism!" exclaimed Jerrold. "Let us hope she'll begin with the nose."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

SPRING.

Winter now has vanished;
Snow has passed away;
And the fields are growing
Greener every day.

Birds are sweetly singing,
Sun is shining bright;
Days are growing longer,
Shorter grows the night.

Every one is smiling,
Nature smiling too;
All creation over,
Only sky is "blue."

Cares are left behind us,
Books are thrown aside,
For the "leaves" of Nature
Now are open wide.

Worship not in temples,
Forms, and idle prayer;
Praise the God of Nature,
Present everywhere.

LABOR.

Toil swings the axe, and forests bow;
The seeds break out in radiant bloom,
Rich harvests smile behind the plough,
And cities cluster round the loom.
Where towering domes and tapering spires
Adorn the vale and crown the hill,
Stout Labor lights its beacon fires,
And plumes with smoke the forge and mill.

The monarch oak, the woodland's pride,
Whose trunk is seamed with lightning scars,
Toil launches on the restless tide,
And there unrolls the flag of stars;
The engine with his lungs of flame,
And ribs of brass and joints of steel,
From Labor's plastic fingers came,
With sobbing valve and whirling wheel.

'Tis Labor works the magic press,
And turns the crank in hives of toil,
And beckons angels down to bless
Industrious hands on sea and soil.
Here sun-browned Toil, with shining spade,
Links lake to lake with silver ties,
Strung thick with palaces of trade,
And temples towering to the skies.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 5.

R. P. Halliwell, $50; Mrs. Dimock, $1.75; Geo. Henshaw, $10; Jacob Hoffner, $60; Mrs. S. S. Russell, $50; F. E. Abbott, $1.50; R. D. Arnold, $1.65; N. W. Covell, 30 cents; L. H. Stockbridge, 75 cents; F. B. Skinner, 25 cents; E. Culver, 50 cents; D. Porter, 50 cents; E. A. Willats, 75 cents; Cash, 22 cents; Geo. A. Dennison, $1.60; C. A. Loud, $1.50; C. Bowman, 75 cents; R. B. Stone, $1; F. S. Billings, $1.50; Wm. Wiley, $10; Geo. Henshaw, $3.20; Lucretia Mott, $5; P. A. Lindsay, $5; Miss Mack, $3.20; A. P. Ware, $3.20; Miss S. M. Nowell, $3.20; Mrs. M. H. L. Cabot, $3; Cash, $3; L. R. Hopkins, $3.20; Carl Edelheim, $3.20; J. D. Lange, $3.20; K. D. Arnold, $3; J. S. Warrington, $2.10; A. Loos, $12.50; Jas. Gilchrist, $3.20; D. W. Buckminster, $3; J. R. Beal, $1.50; Mrs. S. S. Pierce, $1.50; R. C. Hitchcock, 75 cents; N. W. Covell, $3; Chas. E. Pratt, $3.20; Thos. Hudson, $4.23; C. N. Overbaugh, $3; Ben. Birdsall, $3; Mrs. S. D. Curtis, $3.20; Mrs. W. A. Perkins, $3.20; Henry W. Saxon, $3.20; D. F. Henderson, $1.95; Geo. J. Adams, $3.20; Geo. Riker, $2; S. W. Coburn, 75 cents; Wm. Rotch, $3.20; J. F. Woodward, $3; C. E. Seaver, $3.20; Geo. W. Park, $3; W. H. Wilbur, $3.20; W. E. Darwin, ten cents; Francis Hart, $3.20; Orin Monroe, $1; J. P. Towne, $1; A. A. Raymond, $3.20; S. Hoag, $3; Mrs. A. G. Hagar, $3.20; Mat. Schmuck, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 10, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

CREATION OR EVOLUTION--WHICH?

The venerable Francis W. Newman—a name long known and honored in the world of letters and of dialectics—contributed to last week's INDEX a very valuable essay, under the title-head of "Public Morals and Public Reforms." In that essay, Prof. Newman did me the honor to consider at length some views of mine, published recently in these columns. That he animadverted upon my opinions with some severity, I certainly have no reason to complain. On the contrary, I thank him most sincerely for pointing out what seems to him to be false in my statements, even though he did it with no little heat of feeling and sarcasm of expression. I am very well aware that, by virtue of those human limitations which I share with all men, more or less of error must necessarily mingle with whatever truth I see and state; and it is an unalloyed delight to me to have my misconceptions and misstatements corrected. I purposely refrained from replying to Prof. Newman last week, because while he had the floor I deemed it unfair to interrupt him, or to endeavor in any way to break the full force of his reasoning. Indeed, I do not propose in any direct way to reply to him now, but rather to go on and state some further views which I entertain, even at the risk, as hitherto, of propounding some error as well as truth. My idea is that it is best for each one to speak frankly what he believes, and to have no concern whatsoever whether his propositions shall stand or fall. Stand they will, so far as they are true; fall they must, so far as they are false. The moment any man begins to have any personal pride or egotism of opinion, that moment his mental and moral eye-sight begins to fail; and he looks at truth as a partisan, not as a philosopher. Let us have done with personal and dogmatic controversialism, and in all our discussions invoke the spirit of calmness and of peace. Only thus we shall be able to know the truth, and to state it with powerful persuasiveness.

In looking at the world in which I live, and considering my relation to all its contents, I have one primary question to ask: How do all things really get on? I want to know what is the natural (divine, if you please) method of production and reproduction. Was it by an act of creation, or by a process of evolution, that the world became what it is? Did the Creator suddenly wake up to the consciousness that the universe was in a state of dreadful chaos; and say, "Dear me, I can't stand this any longer! Go to, now, I will try my hand on this. I will create a little. I will fix things, and put the universe in order"? And then, by one tremendous effort, by sweat of God's brow, by fatigue of God's strength, did he heave at old chaos, drive its scattered elements into rank, whip its primordial germs into shape, order protoplasm up on its feet; and, with one loud, long whoop, whoop, hurrah! of divine enthusiasm, spin the world out on the floor of space, and then take a long breath, and say, "There, I have done it"?

Science, in which I have more faith than in the Bible, tells me that this world got a-going in no such way as that. It tells me that there is no Creator (strictly speaking), and has been no creation. It assures me that there was no mental fuss and fatigue in getting things started, and that there never has been since any occasion for hurry or worry in carrying things on. It reveals to me the grand, impressive truth that in far far-off mystery, amidst infinite silent spaces, the eternal life-principle stirred among the eternal nebulae; and, from unknown small beginnings, through unknown countless ages, it grew and grew, expanding slowly into larger and fairer results, until all that was produced which we now know, and infinitely more besides. And it tells me, moreover, that this process of world-growth is still going on, carrying everything with it—earth, animal, and man—nearer and nearer towards the ideal of perfect beauty and perfect order!

Now I confess that this "gospel of evolution," which I am surprised to find Prof. Newman almost sneering at, is to me a real "gospel" of comfort and inspiration. I am intensely delighted to find that all things do really grow, and that there is an evident honest intention in Nature to secure cosmical fulfilment at all hazards. Now, when I look on the evil in the world, on all the woes and sufferings of my fellow-men, and think how comparatively slight is my power and theirs to prevent or change all this, I am immensely heartened and comforted by the reflection that the great Soul of goodness "is marching on," has been marching on, and forever will keep marching on, triumphing over evil, over wrong, over sorrow, and evolving cosmos out of chaos every where. Is there anything unwise, inhuman, hard-hearted, in the holding or teaching such a philosophy as this? Indeed, it seems to me that this faith, which is based on knowledge, constitutes the very essence of the new religion of science. It is the religion which consists in simply having faith in the integrity of the universe; faith that all the laws of the universe are ethical as well as physical, and that they are all working with irresistible might to secure the fulfilment of all things,—to secure that everything shall "come full circle," because the flight of time is also the flight of truth.

If this is "fatalism," as Prof. Newman somewhat sarcastically suggests, then I would that I could convert all the world of mankind to it. For in that case I believe there would come about an entirely new mind and method in the beneficent effort to promote the social welfare of our race. The method of "reform," which prevails now, and has prevailed so long, is based wholly on the old idea of creation; namely, that some power from without must interfere, and fix things. As God is supposed to have created the physical world by sheer force of intervention in nebulous chaos, so, the "reformers" think, we too must take hold and create the moral world by another forceful intervention in the chaos of evil; and as God made haste and fatigued himself, so we must hurry and sweat and tire ourselves all out to get our creation done in season. This whole method is false in basis and false in practice. It has caused all the persecution, all the war, and two-thirds of all the suffering we have ever had in the world. The old theology went up and down the world, trying to force men to be religious; the present method of "reform" chiefly undertakes to force men to be moral. The old theology signally failed, and the present method of "reform" will fail as surely. We have got to learn that our true civilization must be based, not upon the theories of the Bible, but upon the facts of science. And if science has any fact at all, it is that of evolution. Things grow; they are not made. Manufacturing morals is as unscientific as manufacturing worlds.

The best thing we can do is to plant seeds, and then help them to grow as fast as we wisely can. Do you say that, in order to plant seeds, we have to cut down trees, pull up stumps, and dig out stones? Very well, do that with the earth as much as you please—she will bear it; but be careful how you push your analogy over into human nature. You find a new kind of soil there, and must proceed to cultivate it less arbitrarily. Have you any right to come and snake the devil out of me, as you would a root out of the ground? Bind me, restrain me, you may, if I threaten to harm you; but it is your duty to get the devil out of me by some gentler process of exorcism, than that you would apply to remove the rocks and roots from a New England farm. Nay; but we forget that there is no devil in me nor in any man, any more than there is in a stump or a stone. Science handsomely bowed the devil out long ago, and he has not been seen since. Devil and evil, in our new social-science vocabulary, mean only crude, undisciplined, unused, or misused force; which it is our happy privilege and glorious ability to convert into splendid uses and beauties in all men. Do you say that this will take a long time to accomplish? Yea, verily; and I say that this is a part of the evolution process: "slow and sure" is its motto. What infinite patience must reside in the heart of Nature, to cause her to wait so long for the physical world to grow into decent and comely shape! Let us imitate her, in our dealings with the moral world. Let us, so far as we can, eliminate the time-element from our reckoning of the growth and progress of souls. With a hasty and forceful hand, we only spoil what we try to make or change. Charity suffereth long and is kind; it endureth all things, and hopeth all things.

Yet, after all, I do not forget that every way God maketh his way in the end. Nature even hath her earthquakes, her whirlwinds, her tempests. And, among men, let those thunder and lighten, rend and shake, who must. Let each one work as the spirit moveth him. Only, let not those who choose forceful and destructive methods call me a dunce or a coward, because I choose my way in preference to theirs. It may be that I love my fellow-men no less than they, and shall be found as ready to sacrifice for them. The world grows apace, man advances, and truth proceeds to triumph, in and by and over us all!

A. W. S.

LET US BE FAIR.

One of the duties of the believer in free religion would seem to be that of rendering full and even cordial justice to the beliefs and expressions of others; to interpret all beliefs from the inside, and to put upon all statements of belief the interpretation that best accords with the faith that there is a soul of truth even in error, and with the well-known character of the men that entertain the error. This is the principle, as it seems to me, from which free religion starts. Its first assumption is that all modes of belief, having their original root in human nature, have an element of justification in them, which must be regarded sympathetically in order to be appreciated. And when intelligent men enunciate propositions in regard to their religion, it is fair to ascribe to them intelligent meanings.

Mr. Phillips Brooks, for example, is known of all men to be a singularly frank, sincere, brave, independent person who has thoughts and speaks them. He is also known to be a very broad churchman, with as little of bigotry, prejudice, or pretence about him as in the present generation it is common to have. When such a man says that "Christ was really at the root of all our modern commerce, its life and inspiration," it is fair to presume that he is conscious of saying nothing intrinsically absurd; and, if he did not think it intrinsically absurd, justice demands that his thought should be measured and weighed before being rejected. It may be taken for granted that he used the word "commerce" in its legitimate sense,—as including the agencies that bring communities together in accordance with the natural principle that regulates demand and supply all over the earth. "Whiskey Ring frauds" and other transactions of like description—such as men like the late Mr. James Fisk indulged in—do not, it is likely, come within Mr. Brooks' definition of "commerce"; but belong rather to the nefarious proceedings that interfere with the purposes of commerce, as much as they thwart the ends of religion. Few preachers as faithfully denounce social iniquities as he; and he does it in the name of Christ. He certainly should not be charged with setting Christ fatally against himself.

Besides, it is true, in a sense, and a very real historical sense, that Christ in times past,—that is, the faith in Christ, the interest of men in Christ,—has been the life and inspiration of modern commerce. Unintentionally so, no doubt; the establishment of commerce was not the direct or even the indirect aim. The aim was the extension and establishment of the "kingdom of Christ,"—the triumph of the gospel. But this end could not be promoted except by opening facilities of intercourse between distant lands and peoples; by overcoming barriers of race and language; by fitting out expeditions, planting colonies, encouraging emigration, and aiding the efforts of pioneers and traders. Whatever we may think of missionaries now, as promoters of civilization, it cannot be forgotten that once they were the forerunners of civilization. But for "Christ," the continent of America would not have been discovered when it was; for whatever of enterprise, adventure, and heroism there may have been, the vehicle in which they travelled was the Church. To say that Christ is at present the life and inspiration of modern commerce is a proposition that no sensible man will defend. But to say that he was once is one of those truisms that Mr. Phillips Brooks usually avoids.

It is quite possible that Mr. Brooks is of opinion that "commerce" would exhibit more "life and inspiration," if the men who control it had more of the spirit of the "Christ" that he believes in,—the incarnate soul of equity and brotherhood, whose kingdom would be a perfect republic, whose reign would be an epoch of mutual good will and service; and in this he is probably right. Mr. Brooks was so valiant a champion of the cause of civil freedom, in times and places where it was challenged, that we cannot believe he would, in an age of mental and moral liberty, be an advocate of servitude. Whatever he says, he certainly means nobly.

O. B. F.

LIBERTY AND TRUTH.

May I say that, though perhaps congenitally incapable of worthy membership in any club, and but consciously deserving to be read out of all churches, I listen to the debates in the Free Religious Association with a feeling that it has a work to do and a reason to be; and yet also that the time has come for us all to emphasize something more than our freedom.

The early stage of our civil war was said to be a fight for the flag—who should own and run the country. But, while no sect or party among us proposes mental slavery as its object, let us not lay our main stress on proving that to be its effect. The word liberty may, indeed, be so repeated as to become political and theological cant and conceit. Some who shriek it seem, in their tone and gesture, like one flinging out his arms and legs to see if there be atmosphere enough to accommodate those, to him, very important members. Be sure there is room to exercise our spiritual limbs and organs; but with what noble and beautiful work and building do we adorn the common and boundless air which, in body and soul, we breathe? Long ago, Dr. Channing asked, Does our freedom bear generous fruits? The hunter has a wild delight in the chase, but is scarce content unless he bring home some game at night. The explorer sails the sea, well provisioned with instruments and food, but would hardly boast of his unhindered navigation, if he did not, Columbus-like, discover continent or island, or approach the north or south pole. Antiquarian or archaeologist must justify his study, and pay for his time, with bringing to light some old monument, inscription, manuscript, or forgotten version.

Nor can we religionists live on liberty, but on truth. What new and better conceptions have we to offer of God or the creation, and what loftier positivism than Comte's about realities of the spirit? Truth in the soul is the child of freedom; and if there be no such offspring we must fain suspect that a barren intellectual licentiousness has usurped the generous name,—or that we are putting wilfulness for free-thinking, or making a selfish capital with this breaking of chains and casting off of trammels, which is our daily reiterated boast. Charles Darwin, with refreshing simplicity, showing unawares his perfect candor and utter devotion to science, tells us what he learns from observing his own infants. Perhaps, by-and-by, Liberty will be so good as to inform us what she has found out by inspecting her children. I would not make severe or premature demands, nor overlook the actual precious produce. But we shall confess the radical literature has performed as yet but slight part, only as it were the first piece of our great programme of instruction and revelation.

Let it be our business less to fight, or even to expose error or criticise fault, than to disclose and manifest verity and right, and to be the evolution we preach, as co-creators with God; or at least to trace its line for the generations to come! Denying of all mistakes ever made will not suffice.

The pope was so angry of late with his German and other censors, that he wanted to beat the ploughshare and pruning-hook back into the sword and spear, with worse than Hebrew revenge, reversing the blessed prophecy into the ancient curse. Let us not spell backward our human lesson so into the savage and the pre-ancestral beast! Even that inward armory, which the apostle describes under old figures of the bloody tools of war, I trust we shall not always have occasion, in its complete outfit and panoply, to employ; and I warmly respond to the peaceable words, at Beethoven Hall, of Lucretia Mott, which consecrated the place to a better music than its usual resounding of pipe or harp.

Doubtless there are sins to be rebuked, especially that social hypocrisy which has such a huge swallow for all transgressions of sensuality or deceit. But our heat must not be hate; and let me echo and cast my vote for the sentiment of President Frothingham in favor of a friendly rather than an aggressive policy, even in displacing superstition as preliminary to establishing sound doctrine. Higginson and Weiss, Potter and Connor and Gannett are of the same, not anti-Christian, but more than Christian, mind. Is there to be, as the president's language appeared to intimate, a struggle of rival and even antagonist methods of reform? Let all speak and act from the inmost instinct. But the body of regenerators is not big enough to divide ranks much; and I hope we are to follow a higher way to propagate than by fission. I believe that the sun of our goodness, more than the wind of opprobrium, will get away the traveller's cloak of perjury which he wears over all his other iniquity. Let us have no split! Truth is more an atonement than a wedge or sword.

But we must watch and see, as well as love. John Robinson's phrase is still continually quoted in our ears: "There is more truth to spring out of God's Word." But is there to be no more word? Alas, how many a mistake in what was God's word literally to him! Has God done talking to his children? His is serial story and many-volumed discourse. He is the infinite hearer, says George Sand. But he is the infinite speaker, too. How much he has to say to us, and how little we can tell him! So, the best prayer is the listening ear. If we hearkened more, and prayed less, and then did for our brother what we heard from our Father,—not passing our sister by,—how all were well!

C. A. BARTOL.

QUESTIONS OF SYMPATHY AND RESPONSIBILITY.

It has been a difficult problem for a portion of the public to keep THE INDEX and the Free Religious Association distinct. It has been again and again declared by the editor of the paper and by officers of the Association, that the two have no official connection and no responsibility for each other. But again and again has it been asserted outside that THE INDEX is the organ of the Association, and that the Association is responsible for, and committed to certain opinions by, its utterances. Those persons who are in the habit of making such an assertion will perhaps be awakened from their delusion by reading the leading editorial of THE INDEX for June 3, in which the editor, with his usual plainness and vigor of speech, criticises a part of the action of the late annual meeting of the Association, from which he alone, at the time, expressed dissent. This certainly does not look as if THE INDEX were the organ of the Association, or as if the Association and THE INDEX were but two forms of one body, and necessarily agreeing in opinion. And if the article in question accomplishes no other purpose than to make clear this matter of independent responsibility—if it shall prove that THE INDEX is in no sense the organ of the Association, but that all its writers, editorial, and others, only speak through it on their individual responsibility,—it will do an excellent service. The editor, on this ground, has given his view of a certain vote at the late meeting of the Association. Now let another member, on the same ground of individual and not of official responsibility, give his view of the same vote.

The action criticised and condemned by the editor was the adoption of a resolution of cordial, fraternal greeting in response to a similar one received from the "Conference of Western Unitarian Churches." It was my intention to send these resolutions with a brief article to THE INDEX for insertion at this time; and now that the subject has been brought up for discussion, it is still more important that the readers of the paper should have before them the resolutions themselves, which involve the subject-matter of the discussion. The resolution received from the Conference of Western Unitarian churches was as follows:—

"Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary of this Conference is hereby instructed to express to the Free Religious Association, at its forthcoming Annual Meeting in Boston, our hearty sympathy with its endeavors to promote the cause of truth and religious liberty."

The following is the resolution in reply:—

"Resolved, That this Convention cordially reciprocates the message of sympathy and good will received from the Conference of Western Unitarian Churches. The Free Religious Association, though not in alliance with any sect or specific form of faith, and holding no common creed, most heartily welcomes every fresh word, from any religious body, in behalf of religious liberty and for fellowship in the spirit of humanity rather than by unity of theological belief. Therefore, the Secretary is instructed to send our fraternal greetings with this Resolution to the Western Conference of Unitarian Churches."

I must confess my surprise to learn that the editor of THE INDEX finds so much in this simple resolution, which, I suppose, to those who voted for it meant little more than a courteous and cordial

"Thank you," to the friendly Western greeting. Yet the spirit of liberty must be vigilant, and we have reason to thank our noble champion of religious freedom that he never sleeps on his post. And so, when he characterizes such a resolution as an unconscious betrayal, by the Association, of its fundamental principle of liberty, and as "unconstitutional and therefore null and void," let us carefully review the matter to see if he be not right. Of course, those of us who voted for the resolution as well as he who voted against it mean to be true to freedom; and to this he will agree.

Thus reviewing the ground, I, for one, must say that I see no sufficient reasons for the interpretation, which THE INDEX editorial gave to this interchange of messages. And the central error of the interpretation seems to me to be this: It assumes that the resolutions on both sides cover much more ground than they legitimately do. Two religious bodies may interchange expressions of sympathy on certain points, though widely differing on other points. A monarchical government and a republican government may exchange messages of good will, as they are every day doing, and yet neither government commit itself to the entire constitution of the other. So I do not understand that the Unitarian Conference, as an organized body, voted itself in entire sympathy with the Free Religious Association as an organized body, in all its doings, methods, and statements. It simply expressed a grateful appreciation of the service of the Association in behalf of "truth and religious liberty."

Still less ground would there appear to be for thinking, that, in the resolution of response, the Free Religious Association voted itself in sympathy with the Western Unitarian Conference in all its principles, statements, beliefs, and doings. The resolution only reciprocates the message received. It is merely a responsive greeting to that, and cannot fairly be construed as covering anything else. Moreover, it declares expressly that the Association keeps clear of all sectarian and doctrinal alliances, and extends its welcome solely on the ground that the greeting was a word in behalf of its own principles. The aim was to put into the resolution simply the clear principles of the constitution of the Association,—absolute liberty of thought and fellowship in spirit; and that there is anything else in it, expressed or implied, I am not able to see.

How, therefore, the resolution is a violation of the constitution, or how it commits the Association, or the meeting that passed it, to the Christian platform or doctrine of the Conference to which it was sent, I cannot understand. Covering only the special points on which expressions of sympathy were interchanged, it does not, in my view, at all raise the question of the attitude of the Association towards Christianity; which attitude is definitely settled by the constitution and practice of the Association.

Similar action has been taken previously, if not directly by a meeting of the Association, by its Executive Committee, with reference to other religious bodies. Messages of good will have been thus exchanged between the Association and the Brahmo Somaj of India, and the General Association of German Independent Congregations in this country, and the Council of Liberal Religious Thinkers, held in Naples, Italy, in 1869, as an anti-council in protest against the papal Ecumenical Council at Rome; and which proved to be largely under the influence of materialists and the atheistical class of free-thinkers. Such action has been reported to the Association at its annual meetings, but it has not, to my knowledge, been complained of as committing the Association to materialism, or to the platform of the German body, or to the beliefs and methods of the Brahmos. Of course, in all these cases care has been taken to explain that the Free Religious Association is not a church, nor sect, nor an organization upon the basis of any theological belief, but only what its name and constitution import; and the same care was taken in the case of the resolution in question.

Perhaps it would have been better if this last case had been met in some such way as previous cases had been, avoiding the necessity of voting upon a resolution at the meeting; since the introduction of resolutions, except on matters of business, may bring up delicate questions for an Association that stands upon the individual responsibility of its members. Yet since this was the first time that any branch of the Christian Church had shown the courage to send a friendly message to the Association, and the message was specially meant for the meeting, the occasion might justify the new and more direct mode of reply.

W. J. P.

LONDON LETTER.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Nothing is farther from my intention than to say a word in disparagement of the noble work which I believe THE INDEX is doing. It is impossible to shut our eyes to the fact, that your paper stands alone and in the very front of the battle of free thought with superstition and bondage. But I am led to ask, Is our line of action the most useful and the most necessary for present times? Have we not, as it were, hastened over the field to root up the most distant tares, leaving many on every side, and behind us, still undisturbed and flourishing?

You know, of course, the needs of your own countrymen far better than we can on this side of the Atlantic; and it may be the very best possible work that can be done, to wage war with the most advanced brigade of the Christian army. In an humble way, I have been doing the same thing myself here in England; and for now nearly four years have pursued a course similar to your own in relation to Christianity. But the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey has opened my eyes, and led me somewhat to question whether the necessary preliminary clearing away of rubbish has been perfectly done; and whether it would not be wiser to go over the old ground of exposing the fallacies of the popular creed, and repeating that exposure till conviction dawns on the popular mind.

I will not weary you with details of Moody-and-Sankeyism, with which your experience must have made you familiar. Suffice it to say, that the air is redolent of their names and their exploits, and the excitement as yet gives no sign of abatement. After much hesitation, I was prevailed upon, first, to go and hear them, and then to preach about them; and, contrary to all expectation, I found that nothing I have ever said or published, since my trial for heresy, has attracted so much interest.

You can understand the reluctance of an old sportsman to fetch out a rusty matchlock to kill sparrows. Something akin to this reluctance took hold of me, before I could bring myself to set forth the grounds on which the revivalists' gospel is false, and actually to preach a sermon against the doctrine of the atonement. The undertaking seemed to be like "slaying the dead"; and it is so long since I attacked these mouldy traditions, I could not but distrust my skill in dealing with them. However, the mere announcement of my intention to do so was enough to bring to St. George's Hall an unusual number of Orthodox and semi-Orthodox Christians, some of whom no doubt went home grievously shocked; but others were brave and candid enough to own their satisfaction with my performance. The sermons, I must add as a matter of fact, are having a run; and another large edition is already bespoken.

From this circumstance, I am led to infer that the popular mind is much more ready than it was four years ago to examine into the truth or falsehood of the Orthodox beliefs; that, whereas then they would hardly listen to a word of heresy, now they are hungering and thirsting for it; and they need at this spring-time of independent thought some help in shaking off their shackles. And this, too, not on the deeper problems of the age so much as on the A B C of Christian tenets; namely, the fall of man, the curse against the race, everlasting hell, and atonement of blood. If this be so, some of us must begin our work over again, and go down to the level of the awakening mind; and, instead of laughing their hopes and fears to scorn, we must calmly and respectfully reason them out of their foolish alarm.

I do not urge you to deviate a hair's breadth from the line you have chosen; for THE INDEX has a sphere of its own, and is maintaining the grand principles of religion where, but for its influence, religion would perish. But I do think that, if you are surrounded to any appreciable degree by believers in traditional Christianity, by people who still imagine they want "salvation" and a "savior," it would be well if you were to invite preachers and lecturers to go down to these people in their darkness and bondage, and unfold to them the first principles of a reasonable faith, and plainly set before their eyes the absurd untruthfulness of those assumptions on which their terrible fears are based. I am aware in how many ways this good work may be wrought; and none may say to another, "Your method is wrong." The wise man will not confine himself to any particular method, if he can effectually use other methods also. Sometimes the beliefs want exposing; at other times the question of external authority. Here, the preacher must use purely intellectual arguments; there, he must avail himself of moral ones.

But a mission of some sort to the Christian heathen is imperative; and such a mission cannot succeed if it present an aspect totally unsympathetic, or deal with questions too high above the intellectual sphere of those for whose benefit it is set on foot.

Whatever else may be needed, simple instruction in first principles is absolutely essential; and of such instruction there is certainly not yet a sufficient supply. We want a kind of Sunday-school for adults, where they may learn the alphabet of the truth about God and man, and be taught to see that the pictures of these objects and their relation to each other, which they have gazed upon from childhood, are only frightful caricatures which would be ludicrous if they were not ghastly. Such elementary work as this, though not the highest or final that we have to do, is worthy of all earnest and kind-hearted men and women; most of all, of those who have themselves been slaves in Egypt, and have reached at length the promised land.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S. E., May 8, 1875.

Communications.

SUSAN DIMOCK.

In memory of the noble young physician whose loss our community so deeply feels, it is proposed to endow a free bed at the New England Hospital for women and children, to be called the "Susan Dimock Free Bed."

Her friends believe that no other monument could so worthily express their appreciation of her loving service to the poor, suffering women under her care at the Hospital; and now that she is called away from that work they think that in this way can best be carried out her own wishes and prayers for the Hospital.

The interest of five thousand dollars would support a bed free in perpetuity; and the name of Susan Dimock, the skillful physician and tender friend of the poor patient, would be kept in grateful remembrance in the place of her labors.

All who would like to unite in thus honoring Dr. Dimock's memory are invited to send their gifts to Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Geo. Wm. Bond, Esq., Rev. Geo. L. Chaney, Miss Lucy Goddard, President of the New England Hospital, or any of the Directors.

INFALLIBILITY.

There are two grand divisions of the Church, Romanism and Protestantism, the one as full of error as the other, and neither very much like the Christ that each professes to follow. Each of these claims to be the true Church, and yet each confronts us with a different principle. The one sets up the Church as the arbiter of faith, the other proclaims the Bible to be that rule. Both, we think, are wrong. Neither the Church nor the Bible is an infallible rule of faith, and a little reflection will convince an unprejudiced mind of this fact.

While we regard the Roman Church as deserving more charity than is commonly granted her by Protestants, while we admit much that is claimed by her, yet we cannot accept her plea of infallibility, because history disproves the validity of that plea. Popes and councils have contradicted each other—they have had opposite opinions upon different doctrines of the Church. This proves fallibility; in case of two diverse opinions both cannot be absolute truth. In the Roman Church there are those who do not believe that Christ's words to St. Peter authenticate the papacy, which is the principle of the Roman Church, or at least the papal part of it. If the Church were infallible, it could not be divided in sentiment.

Turning to Protestantism, we find the Bible set up as a rule of faith, each individual to interpret it for himself, to accept or reject its teachings as may suit his own views of the case. The reactionary movement succeeding the Reformation, in its protest against the authority of the Church, found the solution of all matters of faith in the Bible, on the principle of private interpretation. This principle has found many adherents, and cut Protestantism into almost numberless sects. The Bible-spirit, in its attempt to get away from the Church-spirit, falls into precisely the same error it seeks to avoid, only in another form. The Roman system centres its authority in one man; Protestantism centres its authority in each individual who may choose to interpret the Bible for himself. Pray where is the difference? The one has a Pope in Rome; the other makes each person his own pope—the infallible, final authority. And here we have the spectacle of a so-called Christian Church split into two grand divisions, and these again into endless parties, opinions, and sects. That the Bible is not an infallible rule of faith must be evident, when we ask what the rule of faith was before the Bible was written.

Another reason for our assertion is found in the fact that all men do not interpret the Bible alike. Why have we so many opinions about passages of Scripture? Which is wrong, the Bible or the men who hold those opinions? If the Bible is wrong, then of course it is not infallible; if the men are wrong, then the private-interpretation principle falls to the ground. "But," says one, "I am right because I am enlightened by the Holy Spirit; he tells me immersion is the only passport to heaven." Another says, "I am right because the Holy Spirit has sanctified me and tells me I must get to heaven by way of the mourner's bench." Now what are we to make of such religious jargon as this? Does the Holy Spirit lie by telling one man one thing and another an entirely different thing? This is the sort of religion we find springing from private interpretation. Each self-satisfied Christian, no matter how ignorant he is, imagines that he has the "enlightening influence" of the Holy Spirit, and he sets his poor, private judgment up against the opinions of the Church, and against common sense.

Without advancing an opinion now as to what is an infallible rule of faith, a matter upon which good and true men are divided, we are prepared to say, as we began, that neither the Church of Romanism nor the Bible of Protestantism is an infallible rule of man's religious faith. O. L. ASHENFELTER.

CARLISLE, Pa.

"BUDDHISM NOTWITHSTANDING."

"Buddhist life culminates in absolute renunciation of self for the interest of others; subordination of self-interest to the general welfare. Christian life tends to a temporary renunciation of self for the glory of God; subordination of self-interest here, to be repaid with interest in the future."—(Buddhism Notwithstanding.)

Is there any evidence that those who profess Buddhism are practically any better people than those who profess Christianity, or that they carry into life the precepts and principles of their teacher more than do Christians the precepts and principles of Jesus of Nazareth? Between the teachings and practice of the Christian churches and the teachings of Jesus there is almost an infinite difference.

Human nature in India, it is presumed, is essentially the same as it is in Europe and America; due allowance being made for the staidness of Oriental customs and habits. Men everywhere are, and must be, influenced by one or both of two motives; namely, to escape evil or to obtain good, or both. Christianity is based on both of these.

Does Buddhism present a higher motive, or does it advocate action without motive? Is it less rational that men should submit to self-sacrifice to attain to eternal life and joy, than that they should do the same to attain "Nirwana" or eternal death—or unconsciousness, which is practically the same thing? I have yet to learn that the Orientalists are better or happier people, or that they have more learning, science, and virtue than those of the Occident; or that progress is more general amongst them.

D. S. GRANDIN.

UPPER GLOUCESTER, Me.

THE PLATFORM OF "THE INDEX."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The writer of the article quoted from the Golden Age, and severely criticised in THE INDEX of May 6, evidently referred to an earlier editorial article (not anonymous) in that paper of March 13, which suggests some thoughts and questions that I think many of the readers of THE INDEX would like to have answered.

1. Should not the first aim of a paper which is devoted to a special work or cause, be to present clearly and unmistakably the platform of that cause?

2. Can the platform of a paper be truly said to be other than the platform of the cause to which that paper is devoted?

3. If the cause of Liberalism and that of Free Religion are not identical, what is the sense and where the justice of placing the "Demands of Liberalism" permanently in a conspicuous position in a paper devoted to Free Religion?

4. The impossibility of Free Religion being anti-Christian lies not so much in the nature of Christianity, as in the character of the Free Religious movement, which, in its only organized form, most certainly recognizes the possibility of a sympathy of religions; which the anti-Christian attitude would render practically impossible. If Mr. Abbot does not believe in the possibility of such "broad sympathies," it is very clear that he is not really in sympathy with the Free Religious movement, however much he may approve the methods of the movement which he calls "Liberalism."

5. The "network of inferences," so kindly alluded to in the criticism of my communication in THE INDEX of April 22, will be found on closer examination to be but the reflection of a web which the editor of THE INDEX has himself woven. If he has "put his foot in it," that is no fault of his many critics, who have only held the mirror for him to view his work, and who would have been very glad to prevent such a catastrophe.

6. Mr. Abbot's interpretation of the Free Religious platform seems to be a sort of "Spider and Fly" arrangement. He first declares that the Free Religious Association invites persons of all shades of belief to membership, and then asserts that in his own "private opinion" no one can "come upon that platform without surrendering totally" his own religion's "fundamental principle." In other words, the "unlimited fellowship" of which he is so proud amounts simply to an invitation to surrender one's own individuality, and be converted to the Abbotian notion of Free Religion. Any religion under the sun may boast of such unlimited fellowship as that!

7. Judging from the methods of THE INDEX, it would seem as though the phrase "Devoted to Free Religion" really means, "To our friend, Free Religion, this work is affectionately inscribed by the author."

There are many papers that are devoted to Free

Religion, in the sense of allowing "each varying shade of opinion to represent itself," and the Golden Age is one of the number; but in my opinion it requires something very like an "editorial chameleon" to represent Free Religion in an anti-Christian attitude; for, to many people, freedom not to believe in Christianity would be slavery, inasmuch as it is to them a reasonable belief.

8. "The principle of the separation of Church and State" is unquestionably "the great bulwark of all our religious liberty;" but it does not necessarily follow that the "Demands of Liberalism" are Free Religion in a nutshell. Brevity is said to be the soul of wit, but unfortunately wit is not always the soul of brevity!

9. Could I be assured of sufficient space in your free paper to answer more fully some of the special points in your criticism of my last communication, I might be induced to write again. For the present I rest my case with the above suggestions.

Yours for true liberty,

MARCUS T. JANES.

PROVIDENCE, May 17, 1875.

1. A "cause" can have no platform. Its advocates must make their own platforms according to their own understanding of the "cause."

2. The platform of a paper can only be "truly said" to be the platform of a paper.

3. By "Liberalism" we mean the principles of "Free Religion" as applied to religio-political questions. We do not see the "sense" of the question.

4. The "sympathy of religions" is only one half of the fact; the other half is the antipathy of religions. All religions sympathize in their universal element, and antipathize (to coin a word) in their special elements. Free Religion is foolishness, if it has only half an eye.

5. Mr. Janes' webs and mirrors are so badly mixed that we will not try to separate them. Does he not mean that we have put our foot (to adopt his elegant phrase) into his mirror? We should judge so by the above distracted reflections.

6. Free Religion wants just so much fellowship as is consistent with perfect freedom, and no more. We have never "declared" what Mr. Janes attributes to us.

7. What?

8. Mr. Janes has at last voted for the separation of Church and State. We leave him now to discover which one of the "Demands of Liberalism" is not essential to this end.

9. Mr. Janes' readers will probably be satisfied with the "above suggestions."—Ed.]

HUNGRY HEARTS.

I received a letter the other day that contained such words as these: "Why did God send so many hearts into the world, and then leave them to starve?" We know there are thousands of hearts conscious of terrible hunger, to whom this gnawing sensation is the one most familiar. They strain their eyes from pole to pole to find something to fill the vacuum; they look heavenward with tearful gaze to see if the manna be not there; they grope in the dark with extended arms, ever clutching for the something they crave. Their continual cry is for bread,—heart-bread.

We recognize these hearts on the street by the hollow, deep-set, distant eyes that never see us; by the pitiful, imploring look that pleads, "Oh give us!" by the haughty, disdainful air that says, "I want none of you." The hungriest hearts are sometimes silent, proud, and imperious,—hearts that the world judges to be self-loving and exclusive. Often they are timid and fluttering, such as shrink into corners, or perhaps as fawn at the feet of strong individuals for love and sympathy. A hungry heart is frequently ambitious, working with the fury of the tempest, driving everything before it, riding over its neighbors in its mad haste to get the food it craves, and yet never obtaining one satisfying morsel. These last are the least understood and the most severely criticised. Many hungry hearts sit by when others feast, and seek to enjoy the odor of the wine which comes from their friends' cup; such are known as patient, good people, and are more likely to win a little pity. Other hungry hearts survive on the misfortunes of mankind; they join a slandering party for company; they go to a funeral for rejoicing; they clap their hands when a house is burned, and exult when a character is lost. The agony of this class of hearts is beyond description; for they suffer not only the natural pangs of starvation, but the most stinging poison of their own cynicism is constantly added thereto.

Scientists tell us that life is a struggle for existence, ending in the survival of the fittest; but surely there are many bodies, both material and spiritual, that somehow remain upon earth, though in a very lank, lean, and unfitted condition. The physical hunger of such is generally attributed to shiftlessness, or the arbitrariness of capital, and not to any stinginess on the part of Nature.

Has God not provided as liberally for the survival of souls as of bodies? Is he not as generous with heart-food as with potatoes and beefsteak? It is a very old-fashioned necessity that bodies must eat; from the cradle to the grave the mouth is open, and man labors with all his might to fill it. He ploughs and sows, trades and writes books, to make muscle and bones, and cover them with flesh. The town that does not provide a Poor House to feed its hungry is despised; the beggar child that comes to the door for "cold victuals" is regarded as a matter of course. It is not uncommon to hear the most exquisite person say, "I am hungry for my dinner." Everybody talks about his favorite dishes, and his good or poor digestion as freely as he discourses about the weather. Meantime, Nature rejoices in the good appetites of her children, and loads them with her bountiful material gifts. She is equally generous with her soul-gifts, and scatters them over the earth with a no less lavish hand. She paints a gorgeous sunset for the imagination as freely as she ripens the grain to feed the hungry stomach. The mysteries of the deep, the hidden secrets of the earth, the wonderful qualities of mind and matter are so many wise volumes containing soul-bread. Nature also is constantly inspiring man to feed his own soul. The baby has its rattle-box almost as soon as its mother's breast, and every year is added a cart-load of juvenile books and trinkets adapted to the evolution of the infant mind. Churches and seminaries stand together with meat-markets and soup-houses. If there be signs of a mental famine, Tyndall appears with an address which the scientific division of the starving class seize with maniac fury, tear in pieces and chew for months. Some terrible scandal stirs the torpid blood of reformers, and sets them with eager haste to planning all kinds of social repairs. A mill-dam overcomes resistance, and the rushing waters swallow up the lives of innocent women and children. How the dormant pity and human affection of a whole nation is quickened into intense action! No doubt, every spring, there is planted as much seed for the soul as for the body, and every autumn there is reaped as mighty a harvest. It is true, some years have their drought; so, too, there come the years of over-abundance. The war-season brought substance for a nation's thought for half a century.

So, while there is no intent on the part of Nature or man to starve the soul, yet its diet has never been so common, easy, and free a gift as the body's food. It never has found a language in the primers, or become so universally the fashion. One rarely speaks of a lecture, conversation, or book as a dinner at which the soul has eaten, or says, "My heart has fed upon that thought to repletion." It is not usual for a friend meeting another on the corner to say, "My soul is athirst; let us go into some literary Parker's and commune together." Often one exclaims, "I am weary of life" but seldom, "My heart hungers for bread!"

The closer the soul shuts itself within its own walls, the more it dreads the light and sunshine of free thought and expression, and the more it is agonized at the sight of others out airing. These are the people who slam the doors in the face of new ideas, and every fresh phase of thought; who are seized with mental spasms at the sound of a new ism, screaming till they are black in the face, "Put them out; burn their newspapers, padlock your lecture doors and church pulpits against their utterances!" To quiet their cramps and fits, and get along with them in the smoothest way possible, the spirit of progress submits till the laws of Nature can no longer endure reversion; then it turns and faces Old Ideas, and exclaims, "Who are you that pretend to say that all of truth is known; who would set a limit to the knowable; who would force us to chew your quid of old opinions? You lived on the intellectual products of your generation, which was right; this generation expects to reap a new crop. If your time has come to fossilize, nobody shall prevent you; but we will not be forced to lay our bones on the same field."

As Nature sets no example of arbitrary constraining, so man demands his fullness, or brings destruction to himself by forced restraint. These strange voices we hear shouting wild and fanatical opinions (as we name them) are often the victims of social suppression. Their lips are hermetically sealed, till at last the pent-up forces give way in fire, smoke, and hideous noises, blasting themselves and threatening to destroy everybody within reach; or else they produce a momentary fire-works, and vanish forever. The youth that was never allowed to witness a horse-race, because it was wicked, finally becomes a spectator of such a performance; the years of waiting have created an appetite of such intensity, that he vows to invest his first dollar in a "Smuggler," and race the rest of his life. This he does; but racing is only weak gruel for such starvation; so he takes to leaping ditches and stone-walls for stronger diet, and breaks his neck in the experiment. The wife who vows to keep her family pure, by closing her home against society, is starving the hearts of her husband and children, and driving them away from her for food; but the home that is a powerful, lasting magnet does not lie idle, but is in constant communication with every instructive and beautiful influence that can be reached.

Were the laws of Nature better understood and courageously obeyed, there would be no lasting starvation of hearts. The agony comes from persons being forced to grow in crooked and unnatural positions; and the causes are quite as often in the subjects as their environments. I read a story, not long ago, made very pitiful because a young lady was compelled by circumstances to teach school. At last she gave up the ghost and died of a broken heart, through failing to mingle in such society as she considered due to her nature and capacity. The author used the case to advocate suffrage for women,—his logic being that votes would bring wages, and wages social position, and social position eternal bliss. But is there not as much starvation in the so-called "social positions" as in the humbler walks of life? Might there not be as much real soul-food in unfolding and training the intellect of children, as in being forever a passive receiver or silent admirer among the fixed social ideas? If the imagination and reason of the young were trained aright, they would gather their joys daily from all the sunshine of life, as the bee sips honey from all the flowers. The eyes that never saw a lovely sunset at home never saw one abroad, and never could see one; whilst he who has watched the golden glories from his home hill-top could feast abundantly in native or foreign scenes. The ambition need not starve for grand society, when the richest joys of companionship are to be found among our common neighbors; the affections need not waste themselves hankering after novel heroes, when there are true, rich, waiting hearts all about us; young men need not become nothings because they have missed being millionaires, when to be honest men is possible to them; the intellect need not lie still and finally go to decay, whining because it has not mastered the curriculum of Harvard, when every day and everywhere there are more lessons spread wide and free than the brightest mind can fathom or the quickest memory gather. What a pity, says one, that such a genius as Mr. So-and-So should spend all his life in poverty! Save your tears, O sentimentalist! quite likely had gold been left him in abundance he would have developed no genius. Said a woman to me: "Had I been educated, I would have been somebody." I replied: "Why don't you read the books and papers lying about you?" "Oh, because I have not been educated," she sighed; and so she will wail on to the end of her days, starving because she will not eat the food that is at her hand.

But each generation is feeling its way slowly along; and, in spite of all the weights ignorance hangs upon its skirts, it gains a notch or two on its predecessor. The starving hearts are rapidly filling up, and their number diminishing, as the vast mines of soul-food and mind-food are being opened for exploration. Still, there are myriads left; and the question comes, "What can be done for them?"

We all know that every patient, sympathetic heart is a mausoleum of secret histories gathered from the trembling lips of God's weary creatures. This is a significant fact, and suggests the following remedy:—

Let the broken heart tell its story over and over to you; thus it runs off its grief as through an open sluice. Let the foolish and crazy shout their wild fancies, and the hideous pictures they make on the air will send them home to reason. Let the timid crawl into the shadow of your superior strength, and do not counsel them to be strong; they will draw vigor from you, and, when they can walk alone, will leave you unadvised. When all hearts find voice, and all the world invites them to dine and sup; when we expect them to become hungry, and faint for food; to clamor for existence as eagerly as now the body does,—then will hungry hearts be fed, and then will it be seen that all the mighty store-houses of God's love are open in the universe wide and free to all.

L. S. H.

MR. CONWAY gives an account of a new lecturer in London, Mrs. Annie Besant, who, from being the wife of a High Church clergyman, has become a radical writer and speaker. Her husband separated from her for this reason. She has the highest culture, and is acquainted not only with the various European languages, but with the bearings of their literature on the subjects on which she is particularly interested. She is what may fairly be described as beautiful, being less than thirty years of age, and with the soft, clear eyes, rich brown hair, delicate oval face, and refined features, which make the best type of English beauty. She is rather under the average size, and dresses with a taste which can only be ascribed to the influence of education in Paris acting upon a mind naturally endowed with a fine artistic sense. She stood on the platform habited in a rich, black silk skirt and black velvet basque, with a white lace ruffle around the neck. There is no gesticulation, and yet an occasional slight bending forward of the form, or an unconscious movement of the shapely head, or of the mouth, the flashing or the sparkling of the eyes as the telling arrow of logic or wit speeds from the arch lips, do more effective work than all those gestures, which are the natural accompaniments of mere declamation. Although she is in sympathy with the movement for the enfranchisement of her sex, her main work is that of a religious free-thinker and republican reformer.—Golden Age.

THE Festival of the Asses, which has been for long ages observed in Verona, grew out of the following circumstances: According to the legend, the young ass on which our Saviour entered Jerusalem was set at liberty immediately after, and, profiting by his opportunity, took to traveling in Palestine; from whence he made the tour of Egypt, visiting every place of interest or note, and nobody appears to have caught him! Crossing the Mediterranean dry-shod, without the aid of any ship or bark whatsoever, he went to Cyprus, Rhodes, Candia, Malta, and Sicily; he then walked up the Adriatic to Venice, which city, by the way, was not then in existence; but he seems not to have liked the little island, for soon he passed on to Verona, where he fixed his residence, and where he died at a very ripe age. The pious and hospitable Veronese placed his remains in a reliquary of the same shape, and they kept it in the church dedicated to "Saint Mary of the Organs." Every year this interesting and valuable donkey was carried in solemn procession through the town of Verona; at the present date the Festival of the Asses has become a mere name. The Genoese were fortunate enough to obtain the tail of the above-mentioned ass, and they kept it with great piety in the church of Saint Dominic, which stood where the Theatre Carlo Felice was afterward built.—Scribner's Monthly.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8c " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6c " "
 " 52 " " 5c " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. HIGGINSON, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. WASSON on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. WASSON on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. CHENEY on "Religion as a Social Force," especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age," an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. HIGGINSON on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. CHANNING on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. POTTER on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. VICKERS, S. R. CALTHROP, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. CHADWICK on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. MILLS on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. ALCOTT, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. GANNETT, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. HIGGINSON, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. THOMSON, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and HIGGINSON of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. WASSON.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. CHANNING. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. POTTER. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. PARTON. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universals ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	Price.
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.50
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CHARLEY'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Application to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A Series of Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
The Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Montions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy. A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Flights and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.50
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subject of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Frothy Edge.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHellen (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
England, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denham Quay, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THORAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.35
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN

HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,

BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOKS OF BOUND MUSIC.

Containing the Crete de la Crete of all

Vocal and Instrumental Music.

PAGES FULL SHEET MUSIC SIZE.

Price of each book in Boards, $2.50; in Cloth, $3.00; Gilt, $4.00.

GEMS OF GERMAN SONG, 216 pages. Vocal.

GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG, 200 " " "

GEMS OF SACRED SONG, " " "

WREATH OF GEMS, 200 pages. Vocal.

GEMS OF STRAUSS, 250 pages. Instrumental.

OPERATIC PEARLS. 200 pages. Vocal.

SHOWER OF PEARLS, 200 pages. Vocal Duets.

SILVER CHORD, 200 pages. Vocal.

HOME CIRCLE, Vol. I., 216 pages. Ins'l.

HOME CIRCLE, Vol. II., 250 pages. Ins'l.

PIANO AT HOME, 250 pages. Piano Duets.

MUSICAL TREASURE, 225 pages. Vocal and Instrumental.

PIANO-FORTE GEMS, 220 pages. Ins'l.

PIANIST'S ALBUM, " " "

ORGAN AT HOME, 200 pieces. For Reed Organ.

The above books are uniform in style and binding, are wonderfully cheap for the contents, are sold by all principal music dealers, and will be sent to any address for retail prices.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,

WEST NEWTON, MASS.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST

—URIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,

P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1875.

WHOLE No. 286.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———. Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

WE SECOND the motion, which the Independent makes, that George William Curtis be our next President.

THE LEADING ESSAY in this week's INDEX, by O. B. Frothingham, will be found very interesting and spicy reading.

THE Independent estimates the existing population of New York City to be one million two hundred thousand. What a large association of agreeable and disagreeable people that is!

JOSIAH WARREN was a grand old man, and he wrote some very thoughtful books. One of these was his True Civilization; a few copies of which we have for sale at this office, at fifty cents a copy.

THE BOSTON Herald wittily says that "the Spiritualists have resolved to be represented at the national centennial, probably by a materialized spirit. Otherwise, they will not have a ghost of a show on that occasion."

THE SPIRITUALISTS now have another eminent scientific man to count among their recent converts. This time it is a distinguished Russian Zoölogist—Prof. Wagner, of the Imperial University of St. Petersburg.

THE ITALIAN senate has passed, without discussion, a bill granting an annual pension of fifty thousand francs a year to Garibaldi, for life. The old hero deserves it, but whether he will take it or not remains to be seen.

THE Spiritualist Scientist, published in this city, seems to us to be a very fair and able paper, and to occupy a place in the Spiritualist literature of this country which no other paper hardly does. We are glad to see that it is prospering.

IN SIMPLE justice to Col. Higginson, and moreover at his request, we print in another place in this paper his remarks at the Radical Club; in order that the real views he entertains, and which he expressed on that occasion, may not be mistaken by any one.

THE Golden Age says of W. C. Gannett: "Mr. Gannett is one of the finest minds among the young men of the country; a man of real genius in his way, whose breadth is not at the expense of depth, and whose spirit has as much sweetness as sunshine in it."

THERE is a paper published in Paris, Texas, called Common Sense, "devoted to free thought and the downfall of supernaturalism." Those are good things to be devoted to, and common sense is a good thing to have; so we trust that the Texas paper, thus named and thus aimed, will flourish right along.

WE ARE very glad to learn that Col. Higginson's Young Folks' History of the United States is selling so well—the eleventh thousand having just been issued by the publishers. It is a charming book for any one to read, but it is an especial god-send (ought we not to say man-send?) to child-students of history.

BRADLAUGH's National Reformer has every week a column under the head of "Rough Notes." In this column, May 30, it told its readers "that Mrs. Charles Watts, on May 20, added a little girl to the family circle." We would delicately hint to the Reformer that it have a column of "Gentle Notes," in which to announce hereafter such interesting events.

A CREMATION COMPANY is to be established in Zürich, says the London National Reformer. Five hundred and sixty persons join in the enterprise. A piece of land in a cemetery has been given to the company, and upon this it will erect a furnace, a mortuary, a chapel, a room for urns, and so forth.

Well, burning here for a little while is better than burning hereafter forever.

THE Christian Union, of June 2, prints a letter said to have been written by Daniel Webster, and furnished to the Union by J. S. C. Abbott, the imaginative historian. The letter is about "Sabbath-schools" in particular, and religion in general. If Daniel Webster ever wrote such stately twaddle as this letter is full of, it must have been, we think, when he had taken more wine than usual.

WE FIND this extraordinary statement in Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly, of June 19: "The mystery of all mysteries is contained in no other book save the Christian Bible, not even in the Bibles of other nations; and was never revealed by any savior except Jesus of Nazareth,—for which reason he is the savior." We shall expect to see the Weekly adopted as an organ by the evangelicals yet!

"THE AMERICAN SPIRITUAL INSTITUTE" is the name of a new Spiritualist Society formed recently in this city. Its members, the Globe says, are those "who do not believe in radicalism, free love, and other so-called advanced theories of this sect." Well, what do they believe in? Is it only another Christian denomination? If so, its existence would seem to be superfluous, inasmuch as there is already a great variety of Christian sects in this city.

MR. DALL, just returned from India, where he has been a Christian missionary for twenty-one years, tells us that Samuel Johnson's Oriental Religions is hailed with unaffected delight by the Hindus, and read by them with the greatest pleasure. Mr. Dall informs us, moreover, that, though going out to India as a conservative Christian, the result of all his observations and experiences there has been to make him more and more liberal every year.

MR. FROTHINGHAM makes, in his article in another column, an admirable suggestion, it seems to us, as to the rational use of the Bible in our public schools. We submit that it is a far better way to carry a reform, by a positive than by a negative method. What true liberals desire is, not to shelve the Bible altogether (it is intrinsically too grand a book to be thus treated), but to put it to real rational and human uses. Certainly, the way which Mr. Frothingham suggests, of its possible use in our public schools, is worthy of the most candid attention.

CORRESPONDENTS in the London Times are discussing what they call the "Sermon Trade." One of them makes the statement that clergymen in England are provided with "a regular supply of original (?) sermons at 13s 6d a quarter, in strict confidence"! Very likely, some of these sermons are much better than the ministers who use them could write themselves, and if so the hearers are the gainers; but alas for the consciences of the ministers who gain reputations and salaries on other people's merits! By the way, we have a lot of old sermons which we would dispose of at far less than cost to some minister. None but a Christian need apply, since we wrote the sermons when we were trying hard to be a Christian ourself.

WHAT our soul (if we have any soul) will be in the next world (if there is any next world), or what shape it will take there, has never been determined. The popular notion is that we all shall be ghosts when we slip out of our bodily jackets; but just what a ghost is, nobody (we suppose) knows. The poet, T. B. Aldrich, seems to be in as much doubt on this subject as anybody; for in the last Atlantic he thus dubiously but sententiously writes:—

"Somewhere—in desolate, wind-swept space,
In Twilight land, in No-man's land,
Two hurrying shapes met face to face,
And bade each other stand.

"'And who are you?' cried one agape,
Shuddering in the gloaming light.
'I do not know,' said the second shape,
'I only died last night.'"

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zuning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Fraternity.

A CLUB PAPER.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

It was a doctrine of Rousseau, that man was at his best in a state of Nature; meaning, by a state of Nature, the condition from which he has emerged into civilization. "Everything is good," he said, "when it proceeds from the hands of the Author of all things; everything degenerates in the hands of men." Rousseau added, that, in the present conditions of things, a man abandoned at his birth would be most of all degraded, because prejudice, authority, necessity, example,—all the social institutions and influences to which we are submitted,—would stifle Nature in him, and would put nothing in its place. But perhaps it might not be absolutely impossible to withdraw him from these dangers, and place him in conditions where Nature alone would act in him. In this case he would grow up, what? An animal, or a man? Rousseau ought to say a man.

This doctrine of Rousseau has become the doctrine of a large class of persons,—by some called "sentimentalists," by others "transcendentalists," by others "Utopians"; the essence of whose belief is that the history of the human race is a history of fall and degeneracy,—mankind departing further from primitive innocence as the ages went on, until the present state, which is one of misery and division, has been reached. In this view, the immoralities and enormities, the social crimes and sins, of civilization are due to the arts, inventions, discoveries on which the men of our generation pride themselves. With these comes wealth; with wealth comes luxury; with luxury come ease, sloth, vanity, pride, envy, jealousy, strife, division. These take shape in rebellions, wars, slaveries, the battles of races, the alienation of orders, the destruction of the fraternal spirit; the vision whereof tortures the mind. This idea seems to lie at the bottom of the ancient tradition of Eden, the garden in which the first pair were placed, where they sinned through disobedience, and whence they were expelled in shame. John Ruskin is haunted by some such idea, when he denounces our civilization as throughout rotten and inhuman; and counsels a return to primitive simplicity, by purchasing a tract of land in England, colonizing it anew, and beginning all over the experience of mankind. To revive human nature, so strangely disfigured by institutions and prejudices; to return to the primitive instincts of the race, and thus to recover the moral sentiment, stifled by superstition, outraged by false and artificial customs, and misconceived by a school of philosophers who resolve all moral ideas into conventionalities,—is the purpose of this class of thinkers and doers.

To reason against this theory is not the intention of this essay. It is hardly worth while to combat spectres, and this belief has become a spectre in the current opinion of mankind. My thought is to give a few illustrations of the opposite doctrine, that what we call fraternity—the brotherly, neighborly, friendly spirit—is one of very slow growth; that it was not at the beginning, did not show itself till comparatively late, and owes what maturity it has acquired to the civilizing agencies which Rousseau and his school denounce.

At Barnum's original museum, which stood on the spot which the New York Herald so worthily occupies as the successor of that strange conglomeration of wild animals and "what is it," there was exhibited as an object of special curiosity a "Happy Family," as it was called. It consisted of a number of animals—supposed usually to be natural foes—living together in closest amity. Cat and dog, kitten and mouse, rat and weasel, and other aboriginal enemies,—there they were on the most friendly terms imaginable. Nothing but want of space apparently forbade the fulfilment of the ancient prophecy, that the ox and the bear should feed together, and the wolf lie down with the lamb. Nothing, we should say, but want of space, unless it might be want of an adequate supply of soothing syrup. For, to attentive observers, the passiveness of the caged creatures was remarkable. A drowsiness passed heavily upon the assembled animals; a frowzy and musty semblance was theirs. They had either outgrown their native dispositions, and were kept alive as paupers are in almshouses; or they were drugged into a compliant submission to the rules of the establishment. Stuffed they were not, for the monkey scratched his ear, the dog waved his tail, and the rat moved a timid whisker. The kitten winked in the direction of the mouse, as if she would say, "Under other circumstances!" and the mouse slept the sleep of the just, its faintly-heaving side quivering with no signs of trepidation. The exhibition would have been pleasanter if it had been more lively. Perhaps they were not real creatures after all. A lad in my Sunday-school, pondering on the story of the bears who came out of the wood at Elisha's bidding, and devoured the mocking children, demurely asked the teacher if they let Elisha go? On being told that they did, he placidly remarked that then he did not believe the story. He knew bears, and to the best of his belief there was never yet a bear who stopped, so long as there was anything left to eat. This young man did not share Rousseau's persuasion of the world's primal innocence; for he thought twenty children apiece, forty children for two bears, was a small allowance for a single meal.

Ants commonly have borne a good reputation for the cardinal virtues, but occasionally we are told they get tired of setting an example to the sluggard; and on these occasions they show their wisdom by attacking a neighboring community, killing the warriors, and making slaves of the women and children. Seizing on the eggs and cocoons, they transport them to their hillock, allow them to hatch, and then rear them as drudges and porters. The battles of the ants are Waterloo and Solferino in fury.

The "little busy bee" has cheaply earned a good name by eating the choicest sweets of the garden on sunny days; but follow the hypocrite to his hive, and you will find him playing as many scurvy tricks as his betters. It is edifying to behold the working bees trying to immure their young queen in a cell, while her aged mother attempts to take her life. They are thieves and plunderers, these bees; they exercise no hospitality; they kill the stranger; they are not friendly to their own kith and kin; they are as niggardly as they are industrious. The animals have apparently forgotten that they were ever in Eden.

The cat takes pleasure in torturing the mouse; the bald eagle robs the fish hawk; the lion is merciless to the jackal; the wolf has only too much bowels for the fox; wasps destroy their young; birds rout other birds from their nests, and then appropriate them; apes, squirrels, dogs practise barbarities that must drive almost to despair the Berghs of their race.

Travellers on the Western prairies see the skeletons of dead buffalos, multitudes of which escape from the bullet of the hunter only to be gored to death by their comrades, maddened by the sight of comrades' blood. In a pack of dogs, if one is hurt, the rest fall fiercely on him and tear him to pieces. It is no exaggeration to say that "the sight of another animal of its kind, in agony, appears to act on the brute as an incentive to destructive rage. He is vehemently excited, rushes at the sufferer, bellowing, barking, screeching; and commonly gores, bites, pecks, or stings it till it dies." Animals are naturally without compassion for their sick and aged, but forsake them without hesitation, and sometimes put them to summary death, as nuisances and incumbrances. So general is this, that some apologists for the Creator surmise that such wholesale extirpation of the miserable is one of those beneficent laws of creation, by which age and infirmity are spared the slow torture of hunger and decay. However successful this argument may be, as exonerating the Creator, it is not successful in establishing the loving kindness of the created. The wrath is wrath all the same, even though it be forced to ejaculate praise.

That man in a state of Nature is not brotherly, needs no proof. Father Beeson contends that the American Indian is a perfect Christian without knowing it. He seems to be a perfect Christian without showing it. People of his kind are, as a rule, not perfect Christians. I need not cite examples from ancient writers, of tribes that used to kill, boil, and eat their superannuated relatives; of other tribes that solemnly put second childhood to death as remorselessly as the Spartans exposed their sickly children to the wolves. Mr. Tylor tells us that in Loveden are many churches which contained, less than two centuries ago, a species of club called attaklubbor—or family clubs—used for the practice of knocking the burden of existence from the old and hopelessly sick. We read in Sir John Lubbock's Origin of Civilization: "The Peejeans believe that as they die such will be their condition in another world; hence their desire to escape extreme infirmity. Therefore, as soon as a man feels the approach of old age, he notifies his children that it is time for him to die. If he neglects to do so, the children after a while take the matter into their own hands,

A family consultation is held, a day appointed, and the grave dug. The aged person has then the choice of being strangled or buried alive. A young man came to Mr. Hunt, and invited him to attend his mother's funeral which was about to take place. Mr. Hunt accepted the invitation, and joined the procession; but, surprised to see no corpse, he made inquiries, when the young man pointed out his mother who was walking along with them, as gay and lively as any of those present, and apparently as much pleased. Mr. Hunt expressed his surprise to the young man, and asked how he could deceive him so much by saying his mother was dead, when she was alive and well. He said, in reply, that they had made her death-feast, and were now going to bury her; that she was old, and his brother and himself had thought she had lived long enough, and it was time to bury her; to which she had assented, and they were about it now. He added that it was from love for his mother that he had done so; that in consequence of the same love they were now going to bury her, and that none but themselves could or ought to perform such a sacred office. Mr. Hunt did all in his power to prevent so diabolical an act; but the only reply he received was that she was their mother, and they were her children, and they ought to put her to death. On reaching the grave, the mother sat down; when they all, including children, grandchildren, relations, and friends, took an affectionate leave of her. A rope made of twisted tapa was then passed twice round her neck by her sons, who took hold of it and strangled her; after which she was put in her grave with the usual ceremonies. In one town containing several hundred inhabitants, Captain Wilkes did not see one man over forty years of age; all the old people having been buried."

The disciples of the modern doctrine of Euthanasia—Francis W. Newman and others in London, who hold that when life becomes intolerable through age or infirmity it may righteously be laid down by the sufferer, or righteously made to cease by the sufferer's friends—may point triumphantly to this account as confirming their opinion, by the unadulterated instincts of the savage breast. There are distinctions worth noting, however; as for example this: The savage does not wait for life to become intolerable; at the age of forty,—existence still being something short of a burden, even to ladies,—he sometimes hastens death unnaturally. The savage, moreover, does not wait for his dear relative to signify a desire to depart from a weary world; but, if there be still a lingering look behind, he takes the matter into his own hands, and shows his beloved the door.

The practice does not bear witness to a strong sentiment of brotherly love among the untaught children of Nature. For that matter, the latest doctrine of Euthanasia is equally inconsistent with warm, sympathetic feeling. The modern favorer of chloroform, laudanum, or hemlock cannot be said to live in his affections. His doctrine finds no welcome from brotherly-hearted people whose pity, tenderness, and devotion increase with the demand for these gracious qualities, and who cherish the last spark of life the more tenderly because its glimmer is so unsteady. The difference between the savage and the philosopher is that the latter has forgotten brotherly love, and the former has never learned it.

In the savage breast infirmity excites rage, not pity. This appears in the brutal treatment of women and children by husbands and parents of the dissolute classes; treatment, the brutality whereof is provoked by the very causes that should disarm brutality completely. Dickens tells the whole story of this in his episode of Bill and Nancy Sykes. The story of the murderer Sharkey, and his mistress, is but one out of the multitude that the daily papers bring to light. The girl delivered Sharkey from prison, and saved him from the gallows at great cost to herself. For this very reason, apparently,—because she was weak enough to love him, and depend on him, and brave everything for him,—he treats her so brutally till she is compelled to abandon him, and leave him to his fate. The pathetic play of "The Two Orphans" presents facts of the same character. An old woman takes advantage of a girl's blindness to heap upon her every kind of indignity, crush her beneath every kind of misery, make her an instrument for every kind of baseness. A brother makes a brother's lameness the occasion of incessant insult, imposition, and cruelty. The high-toned gentleman alone comprehends the meaning of the word fraternity. Cases are continually coming to light of children exposed, starved, beaten, burned, cruelly maltreated for no other fault than that of being objects of compassion. The frequency of infanticide testifies to the same truth, that uncivilized people are unloving; that brotherly feeling, human feeling as we love to call it, increases as men and women leave the condition of childhood, and proceed beyond the "state of Nature."

Yet (the truth must be told, now we have come upon it in the course of our exposition; the open secret must be confessed), childhood is not a paradisaical condition. The nursery is not an Eden. There is still room for inculcating the lesson of love upon the little darlings of our most Christian homes. Have we forgotten Dr. Watts' little hymn? It comes to me now, as a warning echo from a very remote past:—

"'Tis dog's delight to bark and bite,
 For 'tis their nature to.
 Let bears and lions growl and fight,
 For God has made them so.

"But, children, you should never let
 Your angry passions rise,
 Your little hands were never made
 To tear each other's eyes."

The pious doctor had visited many homes, and discovered that the distinction between finger-nails and claws was not quite comprehended, even if it was quite established by the law of development. In childhood, brotherhood and sisterhood are recognized as furnishing opportunity for quarrelling, and supplying that preliminary discipline in fisti-cuffs, which is considered indispensable to the proper conduct of life. It is my privilege to know two little girls—sisters, daughters of thoroughly right-minded and kind-hearted parents—who perfectly illustrate this natural enmity of kindred. They will share nothing; if either has what the other has not, a fight ensues, which neither parental authority nor parental persuasion is able to quell. They must have all things apart—clothes, books, toys. They watch each other's motions like wildcats; nag and tease each other with a patience worthy of saints; make sport of each other's accidents and misfortunes; and show in every way so scrupulous a regard for the exactness of each other's statements that they lose no opportunity of correcting and admonishing, in season, but especially out of season.

It has been observed that children occasionally exhibit the same sort of inverted sympathy that has been so frequently noted in savages,—the disposition to treat weakness and suffering with contempt, disgust, and violence. Tears will have on them the same effect that a red cloth has on a bull. The impulse to slap and scratch, instead of soothing, is too strong to be resisted. The fact is, that the theory of human depravity comes out strong from the study of childhood. Miss Frances Power Cobbe tells of a "gentle and affectionate" little girl of three years old, whose exhibition of disgust and irritation, on occasions that would seem calculated to excite the opposite emotions, is as vehement as that of a mad bull or a cannibal savage. "The child's baby sister, of two years, fell off the lofty bed on which both were amiably playing, and of course set up a wail of fright and pain on the floor. Instantly the elder child let herself slip down on the opposite side, ran round the bed, and pounced upon the poor little one on the floor, whom she proceeded incontinently to belabor violently with both hands, before rescue could arrive. Of course, eventually both parties joined in a roar; but the baby's was a wail of pain and terror, the elder child's a tempest of indignation." In a few years this is quite outgrown; the brothers and sisters who in childhood were the direst foes in boyhood and girlhood are the most intimate friends. That is to say, as their minds mature their hearts expand; their relations become multiplied and complex. In a word, as they leave the state of Nature, and enter on the condition of civilization, they learn consideration, courtesy, and kindness.

But with the larger portion of people in society,—even in what is called respectable, elegant, cultivated society,—the state of Nature is merely concealed, not outgrown. The claws are withdrawn into their velvet sheaths. How careful one must be in motion, look, speech, expression, if he would avoid collision with these dear friends whose companionship is so delightful! Listen to the gossip of any circle, and mark how universally it is touched by scandal. No reputation is safe from the idle tongue of one's own set. See how ladies eye one another in a ball-room, or scrutinize one another in the street; interpret the winks and whispers in the corner; note how invariably (we may say inevitably, for there is no premeditation or conscious malevolence in it) the worst construction is put on looks and expressions, the most shameful inferences are drawn from innocent behavior; note how the idlest rumors are accepted if they be discreditable enough, and all the arts of innuendo and misrepresentation are employed to throw odium and suspicion on harmless and even amiable persons. The brightness that should win admiration, the guilelessness that should engage sympathy, the warmth that should awaken enthusiasm, the charm of manner that should prove attractive, are often made occasions for covert ridicule or biting accusation. This is the uneliminated savagery of men and women.

Why is it thought improper to discuss politics or religion in general society? Because people are not civilized enough to be submitted to the test of such discussion. Their passions are not sufficiently under control; their temper is unequal to the strain. They must talk nothings, because if they venture on some-things they may scratch the skin, and draw blood. Neither men nor women can talk together on any subject that excites feeling; the moment they do, they begin to quarrel—the wild beast appears. It may be doubted whether society anywhere affords a spot where the spirit of fraternity is made supreme; where speech may be open, thought sincere, feeling frank and honest, and no offence be given or taken. The Quakers maintain their sedateness by making their wants few, and reducing to the smallest dimensions the world of vexations and provocations; yet the Quakers have shown themselves more than once unable to resist the disintegrating effect of discussion on vital themes. The Shakers avoid civilization altogether; and, according to Mr. Charles Nordhoff, display most of the traits that distinguished Mr. Phineas T. Barnum's "Happy Family." It is only by remaining homogeneous that we succeed in keeping the peace; and as to be homogeneous is to be stupid, peace and dullness invariably go together. The Radical Club in Boston is fraternal, because they who compose it are all of a kind. They sit together in mute admiration of the speakers, as they deliver themselves in succession of their rhapsodies. The Liberal Club in New York is heterogeneous, and is said not to be especially fraternal. All subjects are discussed there; all opinions are expressed; there is the utmost liberty of debate. But, if they who have attended the meetings may be believed, the members on excited evenings have no great tenderness for one another's beauty. The discussion is literally a fair fight, in which the lamb sleeps at last in the stomach of the wolf.

The miserable lack of the fraternal spirit appears in the cultivated classes, in the manners of literary people towards one another. The attitude of theologians who differ on some point which neither understands, and on which nobody possesses knowledge, can be compared to nothing so aptly as the attitude of mastiffs in a ring, or game-cocks in a pit. It is thought a wonderful advance when the fox supplants the mastiff, and the game-cock gives place to the peacock. The exultation with which rival doctors of divinity seize on the adversary's blunder,—the rage excited by a happy quotation, or an ingenious conjecture,—suggests the hunting dogs whose animosity rises with the comrade's misfortune. Nothing irritates the physician of one school so much as the successful treatment of a malignant disease by the physician of an opposite school; or the joy with which he hails the failure of his brother in the healing art, even when the failure involves the destruction and sorrow of his fellow creatures,—the fact that they are all laboring toward the same end; namely, the mitigation of human ill, seeming to weigh as nothing against the instinct of sect and class. Criticism is marked by the same blood-thirstiness. The critic—literary, musical, æsthetic—is a savage; his weapons are the tomahawk and scalping knife. He looks like a savage; cultivating the mien and aspect of the bandit. He has one cardinal rule of conduct; namely, to find fault. The author, composer, painter, sculptor, actor, is his enemy, whose weak point his duty it is to find. If his duty is made harder because the weak points are few, he falls the more fiercely on those he detects. If he detects none, and is compelled to invent them, his rage against the defects he has been put to the trouble of imagining burns with increased fury. Cleverness, sagacity, wit, are supposed to be shown in sarcasm; and the more pain the sarcasm causes the more intense the delight it brings. The critic's ambition is to be feared; the number of his scalps is the sign of his prowess. To misinterpret, misrepresent, and caricature is evidence of skill. In no department, apparently, is it yet reckoned a mark of capacity to note excellences, to appreciate endeavors, to render justice to intentions, to encourage strivings, to help the groping artist by cheerful praise to find his way. The perfect work maddens instead of gladdening the critic; yet in proportion as the work is imperfect the scorn and contempt find vent. Either way, rage finds excuse for pouncing on a victim. One must think long before he will recall an example of habitual forbearance and kindness in literary criticism. To the weak nobody exercises compassion. Great reputations compel courtesy and regard; but it is the reputation, not the merit. To be without reputation in literature is to be without defenders; to have less than no reputation, to be an object of dislike, to be unpopular, in a word is to be a butt for assault. "Hit him again, he has no friends!"—the derisive shout runs along the whole line of society. It is the howl of wolves at the scent of blood.

Who has not been conscious himself, often, of an irritated, angry feeling towards husband, wife, mother, child, who was suffering,—feeling as if the illness or pain was a personal affront to be resented, instead of being a misfortune, to be pitied and relieved? Have we never felt exasperated by the pain that should make us pitiful? Among polite people, the impulse to slap a child that has hurt itself, or to scold a companion who has met with an untoward accident, betrays the lingering spirit of the animal and the savage, who resents what he should relieve. It is unaccountable, except on the theory that the state of Nature is a state of war, and that the state of Nature yields slowly to cultivation. As the fashion of building city houses with turrets and battlements, country residences like castles, and churches with shot-holes in the walls still lingers in the traditions of architecture; as bronze images of horses, and mailed warriors, and gladiators still decorate our mantels,—so the usages of the savage haunt our manners. To be suspicious, like an Indian on the war path; to take the rustle of the dead autumn leaves for the tread of a foe, and the sigh of the breeze for the breath of an antagonist, and the unexpected call of a loving bird for a signal from an ambush,—is the sign of a sensitive spirit. The woman who is most keenly jealous and suspecting, who is most confident of her sister's turpitude, and most certain of her wiles, has credit for the most immaculate and unerring purity. To think evilly is to think subtly. To think gently is to lack perception.

A friend loaned me a little book On the Art of Ingeniously Tormenting, published in London in the last century. The author, who would seem to be a woman, though the fact does not appear on title page or in preface, deliberately lays down rules by which the readers may extract the greatest sum of pleasure from others' pain. The first part is addressed to those who have authority by law or custom,—as masters over their servants, parents over their children, husbands over their wives, and so forth. The second part is addressed to those who have an interior power arising from the affection of the person on whom they are to work,—as in the case of wife, friend, and so forth. The work closes with "General Rules for Plaguing all your Acquaintance." Of course the book is a satire; and as it is a very clever one, it is worth quoting a few passages from:—

"How can I be thankful enough," exclaims the author, "to our good laws for indulging me in the pleasure of persecuting and tormenting a man who is indebted to me, and who does not want the will but the power to pay me! As soon as I perceive this to be the case, I instantly throw him into jail; and there I keep him to pine away his life in want and misery. How will my pleasure be increased if he should be a man in any business or profession; for I then rob him of all means of escaping my power! It may be objected, perhaps, that in this last case I act imprudently; that I defeat my own ends, and am myself the means of losing my whole money. How ignorant of the true joys of tormenting is such an objector! You mistake greatly, my friend, if you think I defeat my own ends; for my ends are to plague and torment, not only a fellow creature, but a fellow Christian. But let me raise this joyous picture a little higher. Let me suppose that this wretched man, now pining in a prison, has a wife and children whom he fondly loves. Must not my sport be doubled and trebled by the consideration that his children are starving, that his wife is in the same condition, oppressed also with unspeakable anguish for not being able to give her helpless infants any relief? Suppose, too, that the husband, with the reflection of all this, and his incapacity to help them, should be driven to distraction,—would not this exceed the most exquisite transports of revenge ever enjoyed by ancient or modern tyrants?"

"There is one mistake which people have often run into, in their choice of a dupe; namely, in thinking that the principal qualification to be insisted on is his having a soft place in his head; whereas the chief thing to seek after is the man who has a soft place in his heart. Many a disappointment has arisen from fixing your choice on a fool; for frequently will you find such a want of affection, such a thorough selfishness, so much cunning and obstinacy, that all your labors will be thrown away."

"If your friend should come to any worldly misfortune, be sure, in the first place, not to fail telling him (and that repeatedly) that it was entirely by his own fault. You may add as many aggravating speeches as you can heap together. Be very lavish to him of advice to do impossibilities; but stir not a step for his relief, except he should be so nearly connected to you in blood that your reputation will suffer by such total neglect. In that case, you may either take him into your house, and let him live the life of a toad under the harrow; or make him some shabby allowance, hardly enough to keep him from starving, but sufficient to prevent his seeking for support from any other means, without risking your displeasure for not resting satisfied with what you thought a sufficient subsistence."

"When you have fixed on a friend, endeavor to engage her affections by all the kind and obliging methods you can invent. When you are very certain that you are really become the object of her warmest friendly affection, and that her chief joy and pleasure is placed in your company, try how a change of temper will agree with her. To see this change of temper in you will grieve her to the heart; but still, while she finds it is in her power to relieve your complaints, she will herself sometimes feel such an overflowing of joy as will repay her for any trouble, fatigue, or pain she may have undergone. Let her go on sometime in this situation: for she will, by her own compassion, entangle herself too strongly ever to break loose from your chains, although you should hereafter treat her with the most barefaced disregard, insolence, and inhumanity."

"Tell your friend all sorts of spiteful stories that you have heard concerning her, railing also at the ill nature of the wicked, censorious world you live in."

"Remember that flattery is only to be used to draw somebody in, on whom you may exercise your brutality under the name of plain dealing."

"Let not a twenty years' experience of the truth and fidelity of your friend prevent you from loading her with unjust suspicions. This is most nobly grating to a generous mind; for truly it is said, that those injuries go nearest to us that we neither deserve nor expect."

"When you have exhausted all your stock of suspicions, accusations, and so forth, against your friend, or have a mind for a little variety in your practice, there is no better sport than to abuse every creature that you know your friend has any regard for. But measure out such abuse in due proportion; namely, give the greatest share of it to the person or persons whom you know to be most esteemed by your friend."

"If your friend be of such an obliging, complying temper as to be unwilling to deny you anything you ask, and perfectly averse also to contradicting any proposal that would give you pleasure, you may in the first place make all sorts of preposterous requests to her; in the next place, you must study her temper, to find out what is agreeable or disagreeable to her,—by which means she must either live an uncomfortable life from never doing anything she likes, or she must be eternally contradicting your proposals, and refusing your requests; which may perhaps be more irksome to her than any disagreeable thing you can desire her to do."

"By all means avoid an evenness of behavior. Be sometimes extremely glad to see people, and at other times let your behavior be hardly within the rules of good breeding."

"If you see people particularly cheerful, rack your invention to the utmost to find some method of damping their mirth and good humor; for should you happen to have no friend, husband, and so forth in company, on whom to exercise your power, yet to destroy the mirth of a common acquaintance is some joy, although not the greatest, to a truly malevolent heart."

"To women, the best way is to attack them about their clothes. When you see them pleased with any gown, cap, or ribbon that they have on, you may drop it out (as if by chance) that it was exactly such a gown as you saw Mrs. Meagre in at Sadler's Walls; carefully remembering to name either some very frightful, unfashionable, or ridiculous character."

"Be continually begging all your acquaintance to help you to servants; to recommend mantua-makers, milliners, with shops of all kinds. Fail not to employ the person they recommended. If it is a servant, let him soon be discharged with great disgrace."

Complain of the mantua-maker, that she spoiled you a suit of clothes, and stole several yards of your silk. On the milliner you may rally your friend thus: 'Surely, my dear, you sent Mrs. — to me out of a joke; for you could not imagine that I would appear such a frigate as that awkward creature would have made me.' As to shops of all kinds, you need not buy anything at any place to which you are recommended; but you may complain to your friends that, by their recommendation, you were like to have been cheated most intolerably had it not been for your own great judgment, by which you plainly perceived that the person asked double the worth of the goods; and that you could buy them at half the price at any other shop in town."

"Finally, remember always to do unto every one what you would least wish to have done unto yourself."

This is barbarism reduced to a science; the "state of Nature" carried to the point of a fine art. In the progress of civilization, which is a progress of becoming civil, the state of Nature is slowly outgrown. For the separate steps in the advance, I must refer you to the ingenious expositions of Mr. Herbert Spencer. It is too large a subject to be even proposed here. My purpose is satisfied in indicating the actual condition of society, hinting at the refinements in brutality that time and experience have effected, and suggesting the way towards the fraternity we all profess to desire.

Let me add, as a closing word, that this essay has a bearing on the principles and aims of our Club. It is called "The Fraternity"; a name selected by the founders of it as signifying a desire that the members should make a beginning in sweet, kindly, gentle relations with one another. To encourage literary talent has been its most conspicuous aim, and must of necessity continue to be so; for literary talent can be fostered only in that way. The temper of fraternity can never be conspicuously cultivated; its springs are in the good heart. Its quality, like that of the diamond and the pearl, is due to the insensible gatherings of glistening drops of water, and the invisible absorption of the soul of the sunbeam. Its operation is that of well-ordered thought; its force is the impulse of sweetly-consecrated will.

In George Eliot's poem, The Spanish Gypsy, Zarca (the Zincali chief) thus describes the faith of his wild tribe:—

"It is a faith
Taught by no priest, but by their beating hearts.
Faith to each other: the fidelity
Of fellow-wanderers in a desert place,
Who share the same dire thirst, and therefore share
The scanty water; the fidelity
Of men whose pulses leap with kindred fire;
Who in the flash of eyes, the clasp of hands,
The speech that even in lying tells the truth
Of heritage inevitable as past deeds,—
Nay, in the silent bodily presence feels
The mystic stirring of a common life
Which makes the many one; fidelity
To that deep consecrating oath our sponsor Fate
Made through our infant breath, when we were born
The fellow heirs of that small island life,
Where we must dig and sow and reap as brothers."

This is fraternity; but the fraternity of fanaticism; the brotherhood of the barbarian; the love that consists in hating your enemy; the fierce, vengeful, jealous kindness of the clansman, that is fed by the misery of the stranger. This Zarca would curse and kill his only child because she loved outside of the tribe. This is the fraternity that is to be discouraged, and put away. The true fraternity is fellow-feeling beyond the clan.

PROF. CROOKES' NEW DISCOVERY.

Amid all the varied topics—political, imperial, social, and general—which filled our columns on Tuesday morning last, it is possible that by far the most important, in ultimate consequences, was enshrined in the report of the proceedings of the Royal Society at its last weekly meeting. That report was brief, but it described a scientific demonstration which may yet turn out to be one of the most wonderful and far-reaching by which human knowledge has been enriched.

The experimentalist on the occasion in question was Mr. William Crookes, F.R.S., to whose genius and subtle skill in questioning Nature we already owe the discovery of the metal thallium, along with a complete establishment of its atomic weight. For some time past, this accomplished physicist has been investigating the action of heat and light upon bodies suspended in a vacuum; and so far back as in August, 1873, he communicated some curious facts on the subject to the Royal Society. But those which he exhibited upon the evening of the last meeting, to an audience composed of many among the most distinguished of living philosophers, were of an entirely new character, and such as combined the greatest simplicity of apparatus with astonishing results.

It has been always thought, and Dr. Balfour Stewart had even stated it as certain, that light apart from heat exercised no mechanical action; so that the spectacle of luminous rays driving round and round a suspended bar or vane would have been called a miracle in times by-gone. Yet this is what Mr. Crookes showed to his audience. He suspended a bar of pith upon a silken fibre in a bulb at the bottom of a tube from which the air had been exhausted to complete rarefaction, and a lighted candle placed near the outside of the bulb forthwith set this bar turning round. By a second ingenious apparatus he showed how the intensity of this action of light could be measured, a glass thread as fine as a spider's web being here used.

But it will be justly objected that the candle radiates heat as well as light; and, meeting that, Mr. Crookes exhibited an arrangement wherein four discs of pith upon cross pieces of straw, delicately balanced on a point in the exhausted bulb, were subjected to light from which the heat had been sifted away by a screen of alum. When the light thus purified fell on the blackened side of each disc, it drove it more and more rapidly round, but had no such effect upon the white sides of the pith. So perfectly can this mechanical force of light be measured, that the lecturer circulated a card containing the rates at which different mediums of light at different distances would drive his fairy mill. At twenty inches, one candle takes one hundred and eighty-two seconds to move the vane round; at five, it accomplishes a revolution in eleven seconds; but diffused daylight sends the little vanes spinning in less than two seconds, and full sunshine drives them merrily along yet more quickly.

Green glass greatly diminishes the action, as also blue; while yellow and light-red glass retard it much less. The stronger the luminous source the more vigorous is the impelling power; the electric and magnesium lights whirl the tiny vanes very rapidly, and thus this radiometer exhibited may be developed into an accurate measurer of actinic force, affording us—to come out of fairyland into practical life—an excellent gauge for the illuminating power of our gas-burners.

There was still, however, one objection to meet before the learned men assembled could safely allow that they saw before them light, pure light, set to work at the treadmill, and exhibited as a motive power. Professor Osborne Reynolds, when these researches first became known to him, had suggested that the discs of pith went round because there was latent moisture in them, which, being evaporated in the experiment, gave a resilient impulse to the little apparatus. The lecturer, however, exhibited a bulb containing platinum vanes suspended on a platinum thread, which had been heated to redness while under continuous and absolute exhaustion; yet this, too, which could hardly contain any latent moisture, obeyed the invisible push of the light rays as completely as the other contrivances. The opinion expressed by such savants as Professor Stokes and Huxley, Doctors Huggins and Carpenter, Messrs. Norman-Lockyer, De la Rue, Siemens, and Galton, was that the demonstration of a great and amazing discovery stood perfect, and it was generally agreed that in the present position of scientific knowledge the results obtained were inexplicable by any known theory.

We will explain a little more completely one of the comest of Mr. Crookes' experiments. He thoroughly exhausts a tube with a bulb at its end, and in this bulb he mounts upon a delicate pivot one of his little vanes, constructed of glass or straw cross-pieces, with a disc of pith at each of the four extremities. One face of each disc is blackened, and the fairy mill, though not weighing so much as a gossamer, rests quietly enough while in the dark. He moves it into the light, so that the ordinary rays of day may fall upon the blackened faces, and, obedient to some mysterious impulse, the arms begin to turn. If the sun breaks out, and shines upon the apparatus, the fairy mill whirls round with such energy that the eye can hardly follow its gyrations; and this effect is very little altered if an alum-plate be interposed, so that no heat-rays pass along with the light. To see these vanes racing round inside the glass, from no visible cause, is one of the most extraordinary surprises which science has afforded; and, as we have observed, she has puzzled herself this time, for no one can yet tell why the phenomenon occurs. Since blackened surfaces absorb light, and whitened ones reflect all the rays, one would have imagined that, however the light may act, it must repel the white and not the black sides of the discs; yet the contrary is the case. Faster and ever faster spins the tiny mill in its vacuum, till sometimes it actually whirls itself off the pivot altogether, tumbling over with its intensely excited speed, and uncommon dexterity is required to replace the cap-sized vane upon its centre. Put a hat over the magical machinery, and it stops—only to resume its circular dance as soon as the light catches the dark side of the pith again. Hold up the alum screen which sifts out all heat-rays, and the dance is somewhat slackened; but green or blue glass calms down the excited little machine to a more sober revolution, and yellow or red glass quickens it again to a more lively waltz. If a cloud passes over the face of the sun while it is spinning in full daylight, the invisible fairy miller becomes melancholy, and twists the machine very lazily; but let the cloud go by, and the bright beam glitter again, and forthwith in an instant the mysterious power is all alive, the discs rotate faster and faster, the eye can hardly catch sight of them as they fly round, and, if the sunlight lasts, the hilarious little miller tumbles himself off his perch altogether with his ecstasy of speed.

Science has as yet no explanation to give of this astonishing discovery, which at once adds light to the catalogue of mechanical forces. That it exercised chemical action was already proved, of course, by photography; but here we see the subtlest of imponderables set like a willing slave to turn a wheel; while, tiny as that wheel is in these exquisitely delicate experiments, we must remember that the universe is boundless, and that light pervades it, flashing perpetually from countless centres, like our own sun, across and athwart the infinite ether. And it may be fairly imagined that the interplanetary ether resembles the vacuum in the bulb, so that the condition of these revolving discs is, perhaps, much the same as that of the planets in space. Strange, indeed, are the thoughts which must be started by this revelation that light, pouring upon bodies freed from atmospheric friction, is in itself an active and mighty force.

That so remarkable a discovery solves at once the mystery of the comet's tail—which is always seen to be driven violently away from its natural line upon approaching the sun—is, we believe, affirmed by more than one high astronomical authority. But may it not have something also to do with the axial motion of the planets? May it not have something to do with the maintenance of centrifugal force, balancing, as it were, that of gravitation? Can it be for nothing in the celestial universe that this potency and stress of light sweeps from centre to circumference of each system, exercises a power which, in its totality, must be something prodigious? It seems not impossible that our mathematicians, calculating from the small surface of these discs the motive force of sunlight, may soon tell us pretty accurately what is the aggregate power which the luminous rays of the sun command; and nothing of this, by the law of forces, can be really wasted.

"Let there be light, and there was light," seems to derive a new majesty of meaning from the discovery which shows us this subtle something; no mere undulation nor "mode of motion," but a living force as well as the illumination of all life. Needless it is to say that, where science herself is silent and bewildered over the new fact which she has won for humanity, we intend here no rash appreciation of its significance. But it does appear as if a very marvellous expansion of knowledge is about to open in these delicate experiments; and, since the more minds engaged upon a new truth the better, we have gladly drawn attention to Mr. Crookes' paper; as these researches, if developed and confirmed, must stamp the discoverer of Thallium and of the Radiometer as one of the justly distinguished men among the living explorers of natural science.—London Daily Telegraph, April 30.

THE RADICAL CLUB.

THE FABLE OF THE SUN AND THE WIND.—THE POLICY OF TOLERATION.—THE PUBLIC-SCHOOL QUESTION.—THE PROPER ATTITUDE FOR RADICALS.

The advent of the great moral show had some influence even upon a body so lofty as the Radical Club, and the time of coming to order, yesterday, was delayed a few minutes, because this member had paused here to look, and that member had lingered there to gaze, while the other had been blockaded elsewhere by the procession of cages. At about ten minutes past eleven, Mr. Sargent announced that Colonel Higginson was present.

"Yes" said that gentleman, as he took the chair, "here he is; and he only hopes that you won't live to say that you wish that here he wasn't." He began his address, which was delivered without notes, by reading Æsop's fable of the traveller who kept his cloak in spite of the violent efforts of the wind to deprive him of it, but threw it aside under the influence of the mild beams of the sun. The work of Radicals, in Colonel Higginson's opinion, is to uncloak the self-deceptions and conventionalisms of the world; and his aim, yesterday, was to suggest the best way of doing so. All of us who are Radicals, he said, are slightly disposed to be contestants; we love a fight, or we should not be here. Those of us who are not here as Radicals have sympathy for a fight, or we should not be here. At times, it is the first duty of a reformer to be ready to knock somebody down; when the only thing to do is to take sides and strike hard. The thing for us to decide, to-day, is to determine for ourselves what the present condition of religion may be, and whether or not this is a time for combat. There are in the history of the world periods of contest and periods of assimilation, when prejudices are relaxed, when we no longer say, "Be my brother, or I will kill you." Which of the two is this? It is necessary that we should look at events not as they affect us, personally, but as they indicate the spirit of the age. Do we not, in the spiritual world, see increased harmony and sympathy? Does not persecution grow less and less? Is there not a stronger tendency to co-operation among members of different sects? In support of this view, the speaker contrasted the former condition of affairs in Massachusetts,—when a theist could not testify in the courts, a governor could only be chosen from one Protestant denomination, and direct taxes were imposed for the support of churches,—with the present state of things, when the atheists can testify, direct taxation for church purposes is abolished, and the only religious qualification demanded from a governor is that he shall be a Christian. The widespread and instantaneous indignation that arises when this tendency is violated is, in Colonel Higginson's opinion, the strongest evidence of its existence, and such violations by no means balance the evidence of the general disposition to concession and toleration. As illustrations, the speaker quoted John Newman's recent acknowledgment that, in case of having to make a choice between his country and the pope, he should put England first; and stated that half the Unitarian clergymen were in sympathy with the Radicals,—thus connecting the world of Free Religionists with the world of those who live among religious conventionalisms.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

If in any particular case, said the speaker, antagonism be necessary, to-day, it should be modified by the times. It is no more pleasant to be drowned by the last wave of an ebb-tide than by the first surge of a flood; but we must recognize the difference. The Roman Catholic Church, as some of us think, is dangerous to liberty; if every man and every woman in that church in America were absolutely consistent, it would be fatal to liberty. Shall we be tolerant to those who are tolerant and do not need it, and not to those who are intolerant? Shall we persecute them because they are obliged to persecute us? I have been obliged to meet this question in the School Committee, when the eligibility of a female teacher was disputed on the ground that she was a Catholic; but the very men who did this denounced the priests for withdrawing children from the public schools. I thank them for the consistency with which they apply our own principles. I have been on three School Committees, and have been dropped from two. I do not feel particularly proud of the way in which I got on, although I did nothing myself to secure the place; but I would like to have carved on my tombstone, if convenient, how I got off. I was dropped from one because I brought about the abolition of the colored schools; and from the other because I insisted that a Roman Catholic child should not be expelled for refusing to read the Bible. I do not deny that intolerance exists as an exception; as when, under the plea of free-thought, Catholic chaplains are excluded from jails, and Catholic girls refused permission to teach. If we do not think the Church infallible, is it not better not to treat it as if it were so; as if we were afraid of it on account of its strength? The very suggestion adds to its power, and power is always attractive. Colonel Higginson took similar ground against the entire exclusion of the Bible from the schools, arguing that to admit that it was too powerful an agency to be allowed to have any influence was to acknowledge that it was stronger than any counter-influence. It should, he said, be admitted as a text-book in English literature and in ancient history; but he disclaimed any wish to introduce or to allow any liturgy of religious exercises whatever, giving his voice in favor of absolute secularization of the schools.

THE PROPER ATTITUDE FOR RADICALS.

To-day, we must choose between the attitude of antagonism and the attitude of comprehensiveness. It is good for us to try and go outside the great religions, but not if we are to find ourselves shut up inside another no larger. For myself, I believe that it is better not to claim the name of Christian, as it involves too many explanations, and a submission to the infallible authority of a single human being; but I do not think it necessary to spend my time in fighting Christianity. I'm not a Mason, but I do not feel at my duty to be an anti-Mason like my friend General Phelps of Vermont,—who calls conventions to which few persons go; writes books that few people read; and, I fear, lies awake nights, and weeps that he cannot do more to convince people that they must fight against secret societies. I respect a man who does good to another because he is his fellow-man, more than he who does good because the object of his benevolence can pinch his fingers in a particular way; so the forms of the Christian Church are not those in which I worship, but as long as those inside either organization don't interfere with me, let them go on and work as they can. I don't care what they are logically bound to do to me. I never knew half a dozen persons who were logical, and they were not all Christians; and while this interference grows less and less, year by year, I do not array myself under the banner of the anti-them. There is so much to be really done, that I shall work for those things. For instance, when I find that in my own town I can obtain ten signatures for petitions for church taxation where I can obtain one for female suffrage, I shall work for the latter reform. When sorrow is to be removed or sin to be cured, these differences of opinion seem very trifling.

If a man bring a brother back from crime to virtue, what do I care if he come from all the bells and candles of the advent? I have more sympathy with him than with the man who stays to argue the scientific bearing of the question. I never knew of any theological plank in the anti-slavery platform, but it cured all bigotry that touched it. I never heard army chaplains discuss theology, but they all worked together.

Again, are we sure, in our eagerness to banish certain forms of religion, that God wants them to be abolished? Are we sure that the world has got all the good out of them that it can? If I could, by raising my finger, banish the Roman Catholic Church, would I do it? Never. I would by argument if I could; by magic or by force, never. You and I are not absolutely sure that we may not need the Church yet. The world goes on well; in the strife of thoughts good comes. We need to see those cherish what we think delusion, and we need to revise and re-revise our schemes; and in bidding farewell to vanishing superstitions to endeavor to gather something from them to make us purer and wiser.

THE DISCUSSION.

Mr. A. Bronson Alcott was the first speaker to respond to Mr. Sargent's cordial invitation to all present to join in the discussion. His words were in the same hopeful spirit as those of the essayist, and he spoke very warmly of the kindly reception that he met everywhere in his recent Western tour.

Mr. D. A. Wasson was next called to the floor. He said that, as he had returned from his tour with a very poor voice and very good ears, Nature seemed to have determined his proper function; but he would like to say a few words. He argued that there was such a thing as excessive toleration, and did not agree with Colonel Higginson's cheerful views, except as applied to the region under Protestant influence. I have, he said, nothing to say against individual Catholics, but I should like to abolish a dozen or two bishops. It makes no difference what any individual Catholic tells you of his aims or his belief; it isn't worth a pin. In support of this assertion, Mr. Wasson pointed to the promptitude with which members of the clergy had accepted the infallibility dogma despite previous public protest. As far as the public schools were concerned, he did not, he said, think that any person had a right to know whether or not a teacher was a Catholic. In closing, he argued that it was better to be ready to meet force with force; and even in this country to be in readiness to use something besides tolerance in certain contingencies, such as had already risen elsewhere.

The Rev. Mr. King of Kansas, a Unitarian clergyman, made a bright little speech declaring that he believed in antagonism against wrong. There are things, he said, which it is not only unmoral but immoral not to fight. I don't know enough to meet these things good-naturedly, and I won't. Professor Morse made a little speech defending what sometimes seems in scientific men like coldness towards questions of charity and reform, by saying that they are often engaged in perfecting some invention or making some discovery in which a large charity and more expansive reform is involved. He also said that if Catholic persons were admitted to the office of teacher they should be watched. Miss Peabody explained that Colonel Higginson's meaning had been that toleration was the strongest of forces, and was therefore to be used. Mr. Morse asked for an explanation from the essayist himself, who rejoined that he had meant that fair argument was the only weapon against Catholicism. The moment, he said, that one person says to another, "Because you are a Catholic you are wrong, no matter what has been your life," that person is as bad as the pope. If I am ready to die for anything, he said, it is in defence of the child who wants to be in the schools, or the girl who wants to be a teacher, and cannot because she is a Catholic. I am surprised to hear Professor Morse oppose Catholicism because it arrays itself against coeducation. Is it possible then that President Eliot and the Popular Science Monthly have become Catholic? Mr. Hallowell remarked that he was glad to hear that the essayist was ready to fight for something. "So am I," rejoined the ex-Colonel of the First Regiment of South Carolina colored volunteers: "I never was before." Mr. Hallowell argued that from the fact that the audience was small at the legislative hearing on church taxation, and large at the suffrage hearing, that the interest in the latter subject was greater. Colonel Higginson dryly asked who the speakers were at each hearing,—thereby drawing a laugh from those who knew that his name was on the published list; and said that he thought that if Mr. Phillips had been one of the speakers against church taxation there would have been a crowd. A general discussion followed between all the previous speakers, and did not close until nearly 1.30 o'clock.—Boston Daily Globe, May 18, 1875.

[For THE INDEX.]

CENTENNIAL SUNDAY.

Aback through the misty haze
That time folds round the years,
Almost beyond my sight
A dim child-life appears.
So thick the gathering veil,
Few other days are seen
In that child-life, save one—
The Sabbath day supreme.
Two restless little feet,
Two busy little hands,
A spirit struggling hard
Infinite depths to span.
Six days the search goes on Through meadow, grove, and field,
Through works of God and man,
And all that hearts can yield.
With every breath, it quaffs
New wine for limb and soul,
And starts with promise fair
A noble life to unfold.
Till Sunday morn it stands
Face front to solid wall
Of granite creeds and laws,
And God a judge o'er all.
Yes, He an awful judge,
Though all the week he sings
In merry brook and bird,
And paints the rose its tinge.
Though all the week He joys
To give a sweet caress
To children in his arms,
Or on his loving breast.
But now the child is told
That bears he'll send in rage,
If on this holy day
It seeks the violet hedge;
Or dares to venture forth
For one bright, morning smile,
Or waltz with butterfly
Along the garden aisle.
Down goes the throbbing pulse
And all the active powers;
A free child-life is forced
To serve the holy hours—
Is shut to fret and chafe,
And beat its tiny wings
Against a prison wall,
To please a fickle king.
To church it now is sent,
To sit among the saints;
A preacher perched aloft
Shouts down his sad complaints—
Complaints that God is mad,
And into fire will cast
The men, and children too,
Unless a change is past—
A change, at once to give
Up every earthly love,
And scorn the flowers here
For hidden flowers above.

Not long need priest and saint implore
This child to fear the Lord;
The shadows creep o'er tinted cheek,
And fewer grow its words.

With fear of God comes fear of man,
And fear of inmost self;
A train of doubts and questionings
As old as sin itself.

The work is done; the twig is bent
To grow up through the days,
As mythic creeds shall lead it on
In sad, perverted ways.

The full-grown man a crooked tree,
Who never finds a place,
Except it cramps and tortures him
By its ill-fitting space.

* * * * *
But here this curtain falls for aye.
Let progress sing a happier lay,
Her bells a freer Sunday ring,
Centennial gift doth science bring.

A hundred years, or half or less,
Have wrought a change that all can bless.
This Sunday comes with freedom crowned,
And superstition trails the ground;
Her robes reflect the purest type,
Are flooded o'er with golden light;
Her brow is decked with buds and flowers
That children pluck in her bright hours,
As down the lane and by the brook
They freely seek the blue-bell nook.

No more does arbitrary priest
Declare that search for God has ceased,
Or dare as autocrat to say
That any law can point the way,
Or any church that man has trod,
To all the mysteries of God;
Or dare in lordly tones to state
That he can all God's truth relate,
Or that he holds the magic gift
Wherewith the good from bad to sift.

And as for assigning deeds to hell,
And ordering sinners there to dwell,
He only proves himself unwise,
A lunatic in saintly guise,
At whom the veriest child will laugh,
And stop his ears, and flee the chaff,
And dance away, and learn his lesson
In common sense and simple reason.

Henceforth the Bible takes its place
Along with other books of grace,
Of wisdom grand, and beauty rare,
And imagery no age can spare;
Perhaps the greatest work that man
Will ever weave, or brain will plan;
But never more as tyrant god
To wield o'er man its iron rod,
Or frighten youth from Nature's ways,
And chill their blood in youthful days.
With other truths that men have thought,
And other books their brains have wrought,
Of science, art, and inspiration,
It lives or dies as man's creation.

Let those who will on Sunday preach
Their old mythologies of speech,
And hug their creed with tighter grip,
And from the cup symbolic sip;
Such, bygone ages love so well
That in their tombs they safe shall dwell.

But as man comes deep search to make
For God, in life and social state,
By means of every gift of thought
That art or science ever brought,
In stones, and by the running brook,
Where wisdom prompts his eyes to look,—
Henceforth his sermons will be writ
In law or logic, love or wit,
In pleasant chat or heavenly song,
As growth impels his soul along.

Let grand cathedrals mount the sky,
Of mighty dome, and richest dye,
The towering walls adorned with art,
Where organ-strains reach every part,—
All this shall throw a charmed spell
O'er man's æsthetic soul—and well.

But if he choose God's temple grand
Some lovely isle by waters spanned,
Bedecked with flowers and arched with green,
With mossy seats fit for a queen,
Where issue chants from throats of birds
In man's cathedral ne'er were heard,—
Henceforth the house of God must be
In first, or last; his choice is free.

BOSTON, June 10.

L. S. H.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 12.

Charles Heddeus, $6; Adam Utrich, $6.50; J. R. Weist, $9; George Martin, $5.25; J. H. Gaston, $3.20; Asa Myte, $1.60; G. V. Blasco, $3.20; A. W. Hall, $3.20; B. M. Smith, $1.80; Maggie Devoe, $1.60; J. W. Goodrich, $3.20; W. L. Taylor, $3.20; Jackson Bros., $1.25; George J. Adams, $1.20; Miss Bachem, 20 cents; H. E. Maing, 20 cents; George Allen, 10 cents; F. Bonney, $3.20; W. C. Kelley, $3.20; Levi Davenport, 75 cents; Robert H. Butcher, $3; Chas. Haskell, $3.20; Nathan Taber, $3; E. R. Young, $1; George A. Farr, $1.60; George Upton, $1.60; W. W. Stone, $3.20; Chas. L. Newman, $3.20; W. W. Baker, $3.20; O. Ditson & Co., $80; D. C. Hopkins, 10 cents; A. W. Callen, 50 cents; Alfred Warren, $2.10; August Brentano, $11.70; Carl Doerringer, $2.10; B. F. Smith, 30 cents; J. A. J. Perkins, 30 cents; George Allen, $2.10; Chas. Conklin, 20 cents; M. L. Goddard, 10 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 17, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

WE HAVE RECEIVED a note—presumably from E. L. Godkin, inasmuch as it is written on a "Memorandum blank" bearing the imprint of the Nation—which reads in part as follows: "There is no truth in the story published in your paper that Mr. Godkin has left the Nation." We believe it is a fact, however, that Mr. Godkin has come to reside in Cambridge. A. W. S.

THE SECOND annual picnic of the Second Radical Club, which occurred last Sunday, was a very successful and pleasant affair. Although the unpropitious weather of the early morning seemed to indicate that the Lord was not on the radical side, the divine beauty of all the rest of the day clearly proved that he was. The Charles River never could have looked lovelier, and Mother Nature had her hands and face washed splendidly clean, and her best green dress on, to receive us. There was a good turn-out of the members, and the day was passed delightfully by many and various means,—among which was the making of speeches, the reading of original poems, and singing. The going and coming was accomplished with (may we say?) complete Providential safety. A. W. S.

CIVIL AND UNCIVIL.

This is the day we celebrate. Freedom's day. Centennials thicken upon us. No fear but we Americans will be patriotic enough now. This year and next great reminders come to stir up within us national self-consciousness. All are glad that America is our home. America is free! We are free! Not a slave lives in this nation. All are citizens of the republic. Yes, under the federal constitution not even women are denied citizenship. By all the State constitutions, ere long, all women are bound to be recognized as equal with all men before the law. So that in spirit, if not in letter, it truly can be said that we are all politically free in this land to-day. The very genius of this country means freedom—freedom for all—nothing less. One American is ashamed to be free while another suffers bondage. American men are becoming more and more ashamed that they are free, while American women are in any degree, or in any sense, denied equal privilege. The spirit of Liberty has consecrated this continent to herself. She has dedicated it to her own purposes. That spirit cannot be thwarted. It has got itself infused into the very blood of this people; into their habits of thought, their modes of acting and speaking. We all look and live as if we felt free—boy and girl, man and woman. Freedom is in the air. We breathe it. So natural to us is it, that we should nationally die were it to be taken from us. Americans could not exist as slaves. Only by freedom we are what we are. Only in freedom can we fulfil our conscious destiny. Prophetically, if not actually, every person and every institution in this land is free. Historically and logically we are committed to freedom. Blackness and blight, death and destruction,—these are ours we know, if we hug not freedom to our hearts evermore. Freedom, for each and for all!

This, then, is freedom's day. And, to-day, this is freedom's land! To-day, we "lift up our eyes unto the hills from whence cometh our help." All eyes are lifted up unto BUNKER HILL, from whence did come our help in time past. Up to that noble summit, one hundred years ago, our fathers marched, and made there a libation of their own hearts' blood in holy Freedom's name! Upon that summit, today, a lofty monument rears its proud head high above all neighboring domes and spires, preaching to us impressively of the days long gone by, when our fathers sacrificed so freely for us, and warning us to an equal fidelity in these later times. Let all our eyes and ears be lent to Bunker Hill to-day! To-day, let our unsandalled feet ascend that sacred hill, our reverent heads be uncovered, our adoring hearts be lifted up in vows renewed of consecration to the cause that makes the spot so memorable! Farewell to the days that are gone! All hail to the days that are coming! The flag of freedom that was unfurled on yonder height, one hundred years ago, we unfurl again now. Our hearts salute its ample folds with honest pride and joy. It has marched over the continent, from sea to sea. It has waved over every plain, and from every mountain-top between two oceans. It has covered with its broad ægis a broad land. It always has meant freedom, it means the same now; and freedom it must and shall mean forever!

But let us be wise. Let us know what our age means. It means freedom; and it means PEACE. The circumstances which hedged our fathers about made it necessary (at least, they thought so) to fight for their liberties. They killed, and were killed, for freedom. They knew no better way—perhaps no better was possible to them, then. We will not quarrel with the past; that would be foolish. What was, was; and perhaps must have been. But ours is a better time; and better ways are possible to us. "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." The spirit of this age means peace; and we shall be wise only as we heed its peaceful monitions. We are glad that our fathers were willing even to fight that they and we might be free. Where need has been, we ourselves have been willing to fight, and doubtless should be again, to maintain and perpetuate freedom for each and all. But let us not keep alive the memory of war, nor needlessly anticipate it. Let us not talk nor act in warlike mood or manner. Let us not prophesy war (as though now we knew nor thought of no humaner way), but peace rather. Nay, let us not even play war, like children; amusing ourselves with its tinsel and frippery, its badges and mottoes, its noise and parade. All this belongs not to our age, but to ages of brute passion and force, when men knew no manlier way to settle a difference, or to advance a cause, than by springing at one another's throats, and slaying one another in hot blood. Atonement of blood is no more for us. It is now an old-wife fable in our theology: away with it, then, from our politics! We will settle things by reason, and will wait with them unsettled till we can do it that way. Whatever things we murder, they have ghosts which haunt us long and tediously. How in vain, for years after, we try to lay them, and bid them down! They rise, and stalk before our sight with ghastly appearance and retributive behavior. Scarcely now can Englishmen and Americans banish from their breasts the last vestige of that old battle-spirit which, one hundred years ago, locked them together in deadly strife,—so hard does animosity, once born, die out and yield to amity! Alas, how North and South still eye one another with vengeful look,—the bloody heritage of their so recent bloody duelling! Germany and France, but late released from internecine conflict, still scowl at each other across their jealous frontiers, both burning to renew the combat. Thus war makes war, and decides nothing but with most long and painful delay. Thus every war has echoes which linger and linger in the contestants' ears, the reverberations always struggling to break out once more into articulate and pronounced cries of death!

While, therefore, I commend the celebration of this day, I commend not the way in which it is celebrated. What, indeed, do we celebrate? Is it the fact that in this neighborhood blood was shed one hundred years ago,—that grim-visaged, cruel war then filled all these now so peaceful and smiling scenes with its own horrid sights and sounds,—that men of the same stock and race, men who were human brothers, then went up on that near hill, and shot and stabbed and slaughtered one another, and covered the green spot all over with clots and streams of gore, and wreathed the height with smoke and flame of battle? Not that, certainly! Why then do we now go, with swords and guns and many regiments of soldiers, to that quiet spot, and fret the majestic place with warlike mien and tone? By such uncivil behavior, we do really offer insult to the spirit of our nineteenth-century civilization which has entrenched itself on that monumental hill, and now preaches to us peace and freedom, freedom and peace—freedom in and by peace. "Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart!"—hands clean of the blood of our fellow-man; hearts pure of hatred towards him. To-day, with no appearances nor memories of war, of fratricidal strife, of ranking feuds and animosities should we approach freedom's holy hill; but with peaceful spirit and with peaceful tokens go and commemorate there the service which our fathers rendered—a service which takes its highest glory, not from the blood wherewith it was sealed, but from the noblest and purest motives those knew and felt who gave it. Of little worth is civilization to us unless it makes us civil; and makes us civil more and more. If we are truly civilized, we shall be civil; and, whatever we do, we shall do in a civil manner. But it is really uncivil to celebrate this day with guns and swords, and martial display. By such behavior, I repeat, we do affront the genius of true civilization, and show ourselves not truly civilized, but partaking still of barbaric disposition. As citizens, not as soldiers, should we celebrate this day; aye, as citizens of the whole world, too, and not of any one country. A greater sentiment than that of patriotism should thrill our hearts to-day. We love our country indeed, but we love mankind more. Our native land we own and honor; but MAN'S native land, which is the whole broad earth,—that only shall limit our feeling of fellowship.

I confess I find little in this day to enlist my deepest emotions, unless it hints something much broader and grander than any local or even national feeling. This is the age when we are united to all the ends of the earth by means of steam and electricity, so that no longer is there any "outside world" to us. Shall ties of commerce and of travel be stronger than the ties of race? If no outside world, then no outside "heathen" or "gentiles." We are all inside the world, and we are all one family. Sects, parties, nationalities disappear. With them go enmities, strifes, fightings, wars. The reign of violence shall cease; the reign of freedom and peace shall begin. A. W. S.

THE BIBLE AS A TEXT BOOK.

The fourth in the list of the "Demands of Liberalism," printed weekly in THE INDEX, mentions as one of the essential requisites of freedom the utter exclusion of the Bible from the public schools,—"whether ostensibly as a text-book, or avowedly as a book of religious worship." It is probable that the word "ostensibly" is used to guard against any suggestion that the Liberal League is opposed to the honest employment of the Bible in the way indicated. The thing protested against, we will suppose, is the covert use of the Bible as a book of faith under the pretext of retaining it as a "text-book," or reader, for students of English.

Thus understood, the article offers little or no matter for criticism. The dishonest use of the Bible is to be deprecated; and the more deprecated the more innocent the pretext. The purpose is to banish the Bible as a book of religion. But if this could be done better by retaining it as a text-book, than by thrusting it away altogether, the friends of reform will be in favor of retaining it. The use of the Bible as a text-book, provided it were done in good faith, not otherwise, might have the effect to destroy completely the power it has over the imagination; and, by bringing it within the lines of secular literature, would disarm it of all strength for mischief. A course of exercise in construing and parsing will disenchant any book,—as they know well, who have been obliged to read Homer, Eschylus, and Shakespeare in class, at school, or college. The recitation room is not favorable to the worship of literary idols.

As a text-book for readers, the Bible has great recommendations. Its language, beside being a model of simplicity, affords admirable studies in the composition, construction, and development of the English speech. The imagery is natural and bold; the rhythmical movement is grand; the thoughts are noble; the narratives simple and touching, and at the same time so remote from immediate concerns, from the interests and passions of the hour, that they can be admired as pure literature. The Bible is the great English classic, and should serve for English students the same uses that the Greek and Roman masterpieces serve for students of the dead tongues.

Mr. Matthew Arnold perceived this; and, acting on the suggestion that originated in his own mind, prepared a tiny volume illustrating his idea and the manner in which he would carry it out. A preface unfolded the thoughts that prompted the undertaking, the design of the author in submitting it, and the advantages that might be expected from its adoption,—furnishing all that was needed in the way of explanation and argument. The readings consisted of selections from the prophetic writings of the Hebrew Bible, given in an intelligible version, with such arrangement of stanzas as presented the writer's full and continuous meaning. Mr. Arnold was probably wise in taking his selections from Isaiah; but other books of the Old Testament would furnish reading lessons as good, and in some respects better, and in very great variety. No more instructive, interesting, or entertaining lessons can be taken from English or any other literature. Would it not be an admirable result of the best judgment in education, if such selections were made and adopted in all schools, private and public, in place of the trumpery extracts from ephemeral literature that fill the class-readers now in use?

That such an employment of the Bible will be approved of by any Christian community, within any assignable period of time, none but the over-sanguine will believe. People who remonstrate, as they are said to do in England, against the use of Scripture for dramatic purposes—as illustrated by the "Samson" and "Saul" of Signor Salvini—will not easily be brought to consent to the use of Scripture as a text-book by stupid boys and girls. By such consent the Bible would be dethroned and degraded in their esteem. But that is no reason why radicals should not entertain the idea, and keep it before the people. On the contrary, it is a good reason why they should do so.

O. B. F.

LONDON LETTER.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—In THE INDEX for April 29, page 201, a correspondent under the initials "A. S. H." puts to me a series of questions which it would occupy a whole number of your paper to answer satisfactorily.

You are quite as right as you are bold to print this unequivocally atheistic letter; for the day is long past for one-sided advocacy of any opinion, and we ought to be much obliged to any opponent for telling us wherein we fail to satisfy his mind. But "A. S. H." seems to overlook the fact that, while I use the terms "Divine mind" and "Divine sympathy," I am only exercising my indefeasible right to express my own belief; and not assuming that my belief is already proved to demonstration. I conceive that, so far as demonstration is concerned, it is quite as much wanting for atheism as for my belief in the "Divine mind and sympathy." All that either atheist or theist can do, in the way of proving his respective tenet, is to strike a balance of probabilities, and show which theory—the atheistic or the theistic—fits better into the actual knowledge of things, which has been hitherto gained by science. I have yet to learn that our noblest leaders in science have found a conclusive disproof of the argument from design; or that they would deem it as reasonable or unreasonable to "praise the North Star" as to praise God.

The atheism in which "A. S. H." so exults is not yet so absolutely demonstrated as to justify him in deriding my belief. He asks, "Where is the Divine mind?" I reply: I know nothing, nor do I pretend to know anything, as to the mode of God's existence; when I speak of "mind," I am not using an abstract but a concrete term, implying some form of being which can think and plan, etc. "Mind," as we know it upon earth, is no more fathomable yet than the "Divine mind," and is only assumed as the necessary cause of certain mundane phenomena. And as there are other phenomena which we cannot trace to a human mind, but to one considerably more vast and comprehensive, it seems to us reasonable to acknowledge the existence of such a mind,—call it God, or what you please; and unreasonable to assume that these grander phenomena are the result of chance.

I presume "A. S. H." is a believer in evolution, as I am. Well; to me, evolution required "mind" of the highest conceivable order to produce. If "A. S. H." thinks the opposite, he has a right to say so; but until we have further light upon the subject, he has no right to chide me for the expression of my opinion.

Then with regard to "God's sympathy towards mankind," it is true I cannot show to any one the emotion of a Divine heart any more than I can show the emotion of my own heart. But as I am rightly credited with sympathy when I act in a kind, compassionate, and helpful manner towards a fellow-creature, so it is no great stretch of imagination to credit God with sympathy for me if, in some way which I cannot explain, and by a complicated system which I cannot unravel, I am helped and comforted and consoled under my trouble and sorrow.

Moreover, I am only logical in attributing sympathy to a Being whom I already conceive of as intelligent. For to have in any way designed or caused the existence of sentient creatures, without caring at all for their final welfare, would be condemned by our own sense of right as deeply immoral. And I have no doubt "A. S. H." will agree with me that, if there be a God at all, he must be good.

Your correspondent makes merry—at his own expense—over the habit of calling God our "Father." He must be perfectly aware that this term is not applied by thoughtful (if ever by the thoughtless) to his supposed generative powers; or that anything so crude and pagan enters into our ordinary conception of God, when we call him father. Men have so called him, only because it was the highest and noblest name known among them; and we only use that term until we can find a better one,—knowing, even in our highest flights of religious adoration, that even that holy name is but a poor and feeble symbol of his exceeding goodness. Moreover, the idea of sex never enters our conception of God, though we use the masculine gender in our pronouns, and in this name of father. That name includes "mother" also, and every shade of parental tenderness. To avoid any misunderstanding, Theodore Parker often uses both names. Of course, there is danger in anthropomorphism; but if we were to abandon entirely all expressions concerning God, through morbid fear of anthropomorphism, we should have to keep silence forevermore on the subject nearest and dearest to our hearts.

In one point, I agree with "A. S. H." There is "no difference between a divine truth and any other truth." The term "divine truth" is a rhetorical figure, by which to elevate the transcendent importance of any particular statement. Truth, as truth, is always divine, because it must be as it is seen and recognized by the supreme mind. The simple truth, 2x2=4, is in this sense divine; in that the divine plan would have been utterly defeated and thrown into chaos, if God himself had disregarded or forgotten it for a single moment.

I am not ashamed, even in going through a proposition in Euclid, to say with Kepler, "O my God! I think thy thoughts after thee."

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, May 22, 1875.

LEAVES FROM MY JOURNAL.

BY S. H. MORSE.

Truth needs a grain of salt,
A lie hath its own flavor;
We win or lose by fault
Of this or that behavior.

THE POLITICIANS describe President Grant's letter as "the most important letter of his life." They measure its importance by its effect on their chances. It is curious to note the different moods in which this most honest and manly document is received. Republican editors are unable to control their sense of relief. Democratic editors do not attempt to hide their chagrin; it has taken the wind from their sails. Poor fellows of either party! What miserable business all round! Why, look at it. When democrats, without the least show of fact, raised the cry of "third term!" and "Cæsar!" republicans, frightened to death, turned piteously to the president—"It isn't so, is it?" Grant, ashamed of them, held his peace. "Speak!" they cry, "speak!" He smokes, and says nothing. Why should he speak? If the party has no self-respect, let it die. He, at least, will respect himself and his position. At last, when the party has completely lost its wits, and takes his silence so terribly to heart, he writes his letter, every word of which bears the impress of rare intelligence and honesty. "Honest Abe" himself could not have done better. He tells republicans what they should have known before, and what they would have known, had they not been too scared to face the music. They knew there was a prejudice in the public mind in favor of what is called the "unwritten law," which forbids more than "two terms." Without further thought, they concluded that they must side with this prejudice, or march to defeat at the polls. Their manly reply to the charge would have been just what the president has furnished them: "A third term, a fourth, or a fifth may prove the very best thing for the republic. We will act when the time comes; nominate Grant, or whomsoever else we deem the best man for the hour and the office. We leave the question of terms just where the Constitution has left it. Neither the example of Washington, nor the advice of Jefferson, will stand us in stead of our own best judgment. They are dead, we are living; and ours is the responsibility." The American people have sense enough for so simple a problem, and they would have been quite apt to appreciate this touch of heroism in defence of plain good sense.

But the republican party has outlived its inspiration. It survives on its reputation, and thinks to perpetuate its rule by having no opinions. It may turn out that it will yet be only too glad to hitch its "wagon" again to the very "star" it is so happy just now in thinking is "not a candidate."

I AM TRYING to account to myself for the political interest the above paragraphs betray. I don't know just why I should have any more concern in the choice for next president than in the choice of the next pope. Both are outside the practical concerns of this life. It's boy's play, the world over. And yet, like boy's play, catastrophe may lurk in the outcome. A poor fellow in either place would be unable to show the world how sensible men behave. The present pope, aside from his ecclesiastical attitude, is quite a model. The man at the White House may "drink," but his simple, unpretending manners, his matter-of-fact business demeanor, his few truth-telling words,—all this, and much more, in an age when the great men and women all "slop over," is so prosy that it savors of the very essence of poetry. I should like to live a hundred years hence, and read the life of Grant as then written. If Lincoln were about, I think he would enjoy it hugely. "Where did he get his whiskey?"

IN MY JUDGMENT, Grant is no ordinary man. Unused to political manners, he makes no show, and gets on not at all with the dignitaries of the party. It is a Swedenborgian saying that "the angels are worse than the devils." It may be that Grant has discerned something of the truth implied in this paradox. The "low company" he is charged with keeping may be his choice of evils. Stiff-necked propriety, pompous moralism, statesmanlike swelling and strutting,—from all these he undoubtedly prays the good Lord's deliverance. "Scamps" are preferable, in whom "Nature is not smothered." When your moralness is art, immorality is the most promising. Depravity is better than congealed piety. When one hears of the "high" and the "low" politicians at Washington, one is "a little curious about that," and would like to investigate. But Grant's "low company" has to all appearances been kept quite in subordination. He has a way of "coming to time" in emergencies, that vindicates the man against all partisan prejudice.

THERE IS A DOGMATISM of morals as well as of religion. Indeed, it would be hard to say which in the present age is the more mischievous. This moral Orthodoxy—in which Christian, Free Religionist, Infidel, Liberalist, all seem to live and move and have their being—is, in great part, tradition and superstition. Like the traditional religion, it rests on "outward authority," and interprets liberty as obedience to its behest; more than that it characterizes as "license." As a cow that gives a good pail of milk, and then kicks it over, so are the religionist and the moralist who upset their proffered boon of "liberty," with the backward kick of "license." I hate a kicking cow. Is it not time to lay the rod of correction on the back of this kicking liberty? Is there not a free morality as well as a Free Religion? That person is moral in spirit, who heeds his or her own moral sense; and becomes moral in point of fact in the degree that he or she, following this lead of the spirit, is educated in the knowledge of the natural laws of life, which laws are all sufficient to the well-being of society. The use of freedom is the opportunity it offers for genuine results. It gives us, not what seems, but what is. And this is, is our salvation. There is great healing in a naked fact. Stripped of its paradisaical cheat, the exodus begins. The necessity which impels is healthy; that which compels wilds a "barren sceptre." Liberty demands great courage. "Shall I nothing fear?" "Yes; fear fear."

I CHANCED TO-DAY upon this bit of conversation:—"I have been a moderate drinker all my life; and, all my life up to the last few years, an immoderate eater."

"A sorry confession."

"Well, as to the eating, should I have totally abstained?"

"I see your point—but drink is poisonous."

"You say right. Drink is poisonous, and especially the water we drink. If you would drink water that is not medicated by cooking, catch it from the sky; and even then look out for the quantity. I tell you moderate or immoderate, in ten cases out of ten, determines the poison or not poison. 'Cool, sparkling water,' killeth even like unto whiskey."

"You jest."

"But I flourish on my jest."

"It may 'cause your brother to offend."

"So does my eating meat."

"Then abstain."

"That was my question. Shall I totally abstain from food?"

FREE RELIGION, or something akin, has found recently its advocates on the gallows. Says one man to the attending priest: "You know nothing more about the hereafter than I do." And so he died without "making his peace with God." His heart being "hardened," without fear he "fell into the hands of the living God." "Plucky fellow," I heard one say. "A murderer and an infidel!" quoth another. But since most of the murderers die "Christians," the appearance on the scenes in that other world of one who would claim no such distinction, may already have proved a happy occurrence rather than otherwise,—thereby breaking the murderous monotony.

Still another murderer remains impenetrable to clerical-heavenly preparation. But the "good shepherd" has great hopes that he will yet "break through the man's most remarkable reserve." Let us pray that the man prove iron-clad.

And now a colored man exhibits a strange unconcern. "No argument of the divines changed his mind." When asked why he was not more humble, he replied: "What good would it do to be humble?" When asked why he did not shed any tears, he replied: "What good would it do?" "He kept chewing his tobacco until the fatal cap was about to be placed on him. He then leisurely threw the tobacco to one side, and was sent into eternity."

These and similar cases of "unbelief" are wholesome reactions. The farce of patching up a "peace with God" at the last moment, as a desperate remedy for the ill sinners are about to fly to,—"burning the candle to the socket and throwing the wick in the Creator's face," to catch "salvation" in return,—can be played a few less times to advantage. Welcome any innovation; comedy or tragedy offer far better parts.

THE CITY OF BOSTON drives "infidel" preachers from the Common, and lets in conductors of Young Men's Christian Association prayer-meetings, and "great moral shows." I passed one of these latter this afternoon. While making a brief note, the showman would know if I "belonged to the press." "Yes" would have given me a look for nothing. But, notwithstanding his solemn asseveration that it was "a thing every man, woman, and child ought to see," I was indisposed to claim the honor. No doubt about it; the city should vote the showman a medal—employ him year in and out to give a "free show," until our Athens became every whit purified! Hark! I think I hear the showman now: "Life of the greatest villain—life in gambling room, rum shop—all ending with the killing of his wife. Fifty-four scenes"—of course; showing "men, women, and children" just how it was done by a "most notorious villain." Who will forget the awful lesson? One look will save all the abandoned "Arabs" that nightly rove the Common. And little children, still innocent; give them a look, by all means. Would a little boy ever grow up and kill his wife after seeing a sight like that? Not likely. Would a little girl grow up and marry any man whose countenance roused least suspicion that his life's misdoings would one day be exhibited in "a great moral show," on Boston Common? By no manner of means; children are no fools. Suffer little children to come unto the show! "There's millions in it" for a tax-groaning city! Think of your penitentiaries—those "pounds of cure." Try, one and all, this "ounce of prevention."

ONE OF OUR city papers contains in one column a suggestion that familiarity with the details of bloodshed and murder begets the disposition to indulge in similar practices. On another page, it publishes a graphic and thrilling account of all the murders committed in Boston for the last thirty years. Here's food for reflection.

THE ESSAY by T. W. Higginson, at the last gathering of the Radical Club, was much to my liking. Especially do I commend that portion of it which proclaims toleration and justice to Catholics. The Catholic Church is likely to be the test of liberty in America, in a way in which even the radical and liberal side of Protestantism fails to discover. Granted that Catholicism is the deadliest foe of liberty; what then? Shall we turn liberty's foe? My friend writes me: "Has not liberty always had to fight? Why not fight Catholicism?" I agree to this. Let liberty do the fighting, by all means; but you, my friend, I beseech of you, hands off! If Catholicism can grow and spread in America, under the banner of perfect freedom, so be it. When you undertake forcibly to prevent its growth, you yourself are the enemy of freedom. "But in a hundred years, if it keeps on, it will control the country." Who has a better right? "But would you do nothing?" I would persuade all people to free themselves from all manner of bondage. "But if they assail free institutions, would you not fight?" What free institutions do Catholics assail in this country? Name one. The public school; consider that. Is that a free institution which is established by compulsion? Do you not tax Catholics against their conscience for this school? "But it is for the common good. We tax ourselves also. They have equal rights with us. It is but justice." There is an old maxim of Plutarch's that runs: "Call that which is just equal, not that which is equal just." Equal rights in injustice is not to be commended. We Americans often let a phrase run away with us. The subject is vital, and needs a thorough sifting.

I LISTENED to Mr. Underwood at the Free Religious Association meeting. He thought he was making a defence of materialism. I have heard defenders of spiritualism (not Spiritism) talk in pretty much the same way. They seem to name the same thing differently. Neither finds the "potency" of matter outside of matter. Before the mystery that is in matter each bows. The one says, "Nature;" the other, "God." The materialist would seem to say, "It is the nature of matter to evolve forms of life in a developing series up to man." The spiritualist says the same, and adds: "But this Nature knows its business. It acts intelligently. Is there no intelligence resident in it? 'Up to man'! Certainly. This 'up' settles the question. So also, 'survival of the fittest.' Fittest! Nature knows what she is about. Nothing cannot produce something. Intelligence cannot come from no intelligence. Experience makes nothing of a stick. Intellect is the substance. It alone can have experience."

MOODY is preaching over in London that "God's ways are not as our ways." One draws the conclusion from his discoursing that the more foolish a thing may appear in the sight of men, the more likely it is to be the wisdom of God. At any rate, God is to be obeyed, however foolish or unreasonable his command. Just as Abraham was going to slay his son in obedience to the divine voice, so we must hear the voice of the Lord, and slay our own good wit,—if such be the command. There is one prime obstacle to this reasoning. It would compel us all to chant, "Our God is a God of folly." We don't want to do that, if we can help it.

THERE IS A TRUTH somewhere in the neighborhood of Mr. Moody's discourse. When Warren fell, and John Brown went down into Virginia, there was foolishness in these acts to the eyes of ordinary mortals. But Warren and Brown did not heed the "voice of God" because it was folly, but wholly to the end that wisdom might be glorified.

THIS.

Time, by rolling orbs in joy, is got;
And yet the tripping maid hath leaden face,
Nor shows it loves deep furrowing. Nor thought,
Nor speculation glooms its eye; its blank
Lack-lustre gaze strays not, nor answer gives.
Who saith of Time she is that she is not?
That she is doing this and this thing well?
Leave all to her? Leave naught to her. She heeds
Nor cares thy task to serve. She goeth by,
Yet doth not pass. Be wise; be not deceived.
To thee the message of the gods hath come,
And not to Time that is and yet is not.
Thine is the gift creative; use it well,
O people wise, in time as in a world.
Some stable fortress of thy love to build,
Thy durable thought to shrine! Leave naught
To Time. Thy hand the plough, the reaper, guide.

AND THIS.

Time is the mistress of the god.
By her all worlds are made;
The mother of all souls is she,—
She the foundations laid.

She buildeth wiser than man's wit;
She sharpens wit of man;
She useth it in furtherance
Of God's eternal plan.

In patience wait her sovereign will;
Thine far the lesser part,
She beareth thee and all thou dost
Up to the Parent heart!

Communications.

JUSTICE TO CATHOLICS.

We are happy to think that the principle of religious toleration is so well established with us that one sect cannot be persecuted by another; but the recent case of Father McGlew, in one of our local courts, raises a question more vital and delicate; namely, Do our laws protect a man against persecution by his own sect? The most dangerous, because the most insidious, form of persecution, is that which attacks a man in his social and domestic relations, and poisons the sources of the happiness that comes to him through his friendships and affections. The priest acknowledged, on the trial, the validity of the marriage; but the parties who claimed that they were slandered would not be, among Protestants, more thoroughly outcast, than they actually are, among Catholics, under the anathema of the Church, that they are "living in mortal sin." It is hard to see why their civil and social rights are not directly invaded. Let us be sure that our prejudices do not betray us into any intolerance against the Catholics; but let our institutions be so constructed, and our laws so administered, that the obscurest individual shall be fully protected in all his natural rights against the despotism of the sect to which he belongs. Whatever may be the merits of this special case, it cannot escape attention that it involves one phase of the conflict between personal liberty and ecclesiastical authority.

Boston, June 15, 1875.

DOES THE WORD DAY IN GENESIS MEAN DAY?

In order to break the force of the incontrovertible facts of science, which tend to throw discredit upon the truthfulness of the Bible, Bibliolaters are still struggling to torture the language of that book into meanings utterly unwarranted by the text, and which, but for the discoveries of science, they never would have thought of ascribing to it.

Nothing is more common than to hear these would-be harmonizers attempt to reconcile the teachings of geology, regarding the vast lapse of time occupied in the formation of the earth, with the Bible account of "creation," by claiming that the days mentioned in Genesis meant vast periods of time, that "stretched back into the bygone eternity." That such an interpretation of the language is utterly unjustifiable is shown by the following candid letter from that eminent Hebrew scholar and professor of "sacred literature," Moses Stuart of Andover Theological Seminary. This letter was printed in some of the early editions of Comstock's Geology, but for reasons best known to the publishers has been dropped from the later. It has been suggested that since what were once considered "speculations" have now been demonstrated to be facts, it may have been deemed justifiable to turn aside the language of Moses to get rid of the difficulties which these stubborn facts present; and hence the omission! But hear the learned professor:—

"The inquiries you make concerning the word yam in Genesis i., I will briefly answer. It does not signify an indefinite period of time, but always a definite one, when employed, as it is in Genesis i., in the singular number. It sometimes means a specific day of the week; sometimes to-day, that is, this day; sometimes a specific day, or season of calamity, joy, particular duty, action, suffering, etc. It is only the plural yamin which is employed for time in an indefinite way; as, 'in many days to come,' 'days of my life,' etc. But, even here, the plural in most cases is a limited one,—limited by some adjective, numerical, etc.; and yamin signifies, therefore, a limited portion of time; often it stands for a year. . . .

When the sacred writer in Genesis says the first day, the second day, etc., there can be no possible doubt—none, I mean, for a philologist, let a geologist think as he may—that a definite day of the week is meant, which definite day is designated by the numbers first, second, third, etc. What puts this beyond all question in philology is, that the writer says specifically the evening and the morning were the first day, the second day, etc. Now, is an evening and morning a period of some thousands of years? Is it in any sense, when so employed, an indefinite period? The answer is so plain and certain that it need not repeat it. . . .

If Moses has given us an erroneous account of the creation, so be it. Let it come out; and let us have the whole. But do not let us turn aside his language to get rid of difficulties that we may have in our speculations."

Without comment, which would be superfluous, will add these few words on the subject by the late Prof. Hitchcock of Amherst College:—

"There is no evidence that the word 'day' is used figuratively in the first chapter of Genesis. . . . It seems from Gen. ii., 5, compared with Gen. i., 11, 12, that it had not rained on the earth till the third day. If the days were only of twenty-four hours, this would be very probable, but altogether absurd if they were long periods. Such a meaning is forced and unnatural; and, therefore, not to be adopted without a very urgent necessity." Q.

PRAYER.

Believing as I do, with Jeremy Taylor, that "prayer is the effect and the exercise and the beginning and the promoter of all Christian graces, and the consummation and perfection of man," I read the somewhat skeptical communication on "Prayer," by Mr. W. J. Lloyd, in THE INDEX of May 13, with much interest. After sundry remarks he says: "But if God is omnipotent to execute his will, and answers our prayers only when they are in harmony with his will, then the same things will be done whether we pray or not; and I do not see wherein the efficacy of prayer consists. . . . If God's will be free, then in any given case there is nothing to compel or to hinder his answering or not answering our prayer; and, as He is supposed to be omniscient, there is nothing to compel or hinder his giving us what we need without our praying for it."

Apparently, Mr. Lloyd has not a clear view of the province of prayer, and his conclusions in the above quotation place God and man in very novel relations. If "the same things will be done whether we pray or not," then it is equally possible that next week's INDEX will be set up and printed whether the compositors distribute the dead matter, and set up the paper or not; that the farmer will harvest a plentiful crop of potatoes next fall from his field whether he plants any or not. Because we cannot measure the spiritual results of the labor of prayer with a material measure, such people as Mr. Lloyd "do not see wherein the efficacy of prayer consists." He apparently believes in "an infinitely wise being" (who) is necessarily an infinitely good being, to whom the very best course for us and for the universes is ever present in thought." If this being, God, possesses these infinite attributes, then he must of necessity possess all the other possible qualities of an infinite being—he must fill all space, and know and direct all things. Whether we place ourselves in harmony with the laws which govern our physical system and the world around us, or whether we totally disregard them, has a great influence for good or evil on our body. Yet in this particular we act in a great measure very recklessly, and the baneful results are both seen and felt more or less everywhere, and by all. Our spiritual nature is subject to certain laws and conditions. It may be asked, How can I satisfy myself of their efficacy and reality, if I do not believe in prayer? If you believe in a God, there is no valid reason why you should not have entire faith in the efficacy of an earnest and zealous prayer. Not in prayer, however, for material favors contrary to the common course of Nature; such a prayer cannot be made by an earnest child of God who values the growth and perfection of his moral and intellectual nature more than money and rail road stocks. To advance Christ's kingdom of love and charity, and to become more like his Maker, of whose perfections he has a dim picture in his mind, is the great object and aim of his prayer. Ask any devout praying person, who is not blinded by dogma, and he will tell you that the strength and consolation which he has received from prayer is greater than he can express. He would not part with it for anything. He feels that the great moral power of the universe is in harmony with his spirit. A thousand blessings are continually showered upon his soul from that beneficent force according to the laws of which he is shaping his conduct. Being ever present with him, he joyfully communes with it, and en desires to be freed from all earthly trammels, that he might be in complete harmony with it. d's spirit tells him that he is a child of God. This saying overshadows all temporal things. He daily lks with God. God does answer his prayer andantly.

A devout Christian, therefore, does not place temal blessings foremost. And how can he, unless he either a fool or a hypocrite, ask God for temporal s, when he, without being asked, has given him many means by which he may attain his earthly ires? That man has a very stupid, weak-minded d, who prays for objects which he is himself capa- of attaining. Ignorance or hypocrisy cannot im- e on God. He reads our hearts, he helps only se who manfully help themselves. "God is on side of the heaviest batteries." If prayer had "physical value," as Tyndall calls it, selfish peo- would make such a constant use of it, that a asely settled community of praying people would me a chaos. They would pray for sunshine, n, wind, dew, fog, clouds, light, darkness, new on, full moon, wet season, dry season, storm, calm, at the same time. Instead of such prayers being lessing, they would be the greatest of curses. No elligent Christian will pray after this idiotic fash- . That we will receive the spiritual blessings, eever, when we pray for them, we feel in our soul. e do not ask for them, we will not receive them. f Mr. Lloyd will apply himself as earnestly to yer as he does to his studies, he will find the ad- nition of that flower of humanity, Christ, whom es does not seem to think much of, to be an infalli- rule: "seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall open up to you."

have no superstitious reverence for prayer. When n in a situation where great bodily harm may e- me, my best and most acceptable prayer is to use at means may be in my reach to save myself. ould I let all depend on a listless, resigned prayer, h folded arms, I should commit an act of great pshemy. God gave me mental and bodily faculties, e means by which I may fulfil my destiny, and it y bounden duty to use all material and spiritual ns in a legitimate manner. I. LEMAHEN.
EADVILLE DIVINITY SCHOOL, May 18, 1875.

THE CENTRAL TRUTH OF CHRISTIANITY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In the various discussions about Christ- and anti-Christian attitudes some confusion es, it seems to me, because of a failure to state in licit language just what is meant by the term. r. M. J. Savage in his "Christianity Notwith- ding," asserts the Golden Rule to be its central th, claiming it to be in no wise responsible for the ay traditions and dogmas, such as Total Deprav- Vicarious Atonement, the Trinity, and the like, h have been wrapped about it during the greater t of its eighteen hundred years of existence. He ms to admit the infallible inspiration of the Bible e the source whence Orthodoxy has spun this oon about the living germ, nearly destroying its . He admits that the Christian world to-day, and ing all the previous years of its history, has been nly concerned in fashioning this cocoon, instead attending to the development and growth of the ng organism. But he insists that Unitarians, or al Christians, have succeeded in getting rid of e traditions and dogmas, and have come back to position which was originally taken by its founder. o completely has this living principle been hidden, t Christianity through all the period of its history failed, for the most part, to make known its ex- nce to the world. Love of God and love of man ot be truthfully claimed as having been its mov- spirit up to the present time. The equality of an rights, the abolition of capital punishment, amelioration of the condition of prisoners, and in e whole body of humane legislation legitimate- owing out of this precept, have forced their way ong mankind in spite of its continued opposition. e leaders in these conflicts have usually been men ide of the Church, against whom it has frequent- fulminated its fiercest anathemas. How has ristianity, then, been the main factor in civiliza- n, if the very central principle of its founder has n inoperative among its adherents?

rant that Jesus, after re-stating and improving Golden Rule of Confucius, gave a new life-im- se towards its realization,—the fact that so-called al Christians are obliged to discard all the dis- guishing characteristics of Orthodox Christianity, h has possessed the field eighteen hundred years, er proves it not to have been a central truth of e teaching, or that the impulse given by him has n exaggerated. Else the world long ere this ould have become intensely Unitarian and there- "essentially Christian."

s it not true that the central principle of Christ- ianism was rather the Messianic idea, and the other incidental statement of an ethical truth? Sup- e all idea of Jesus as the Christ, as God, or the ne Son of God in some exceptional and supernat- sense, were eliminated from Christianity. Will e contended for a moment that its hold and influ- e in the world would have been the same as it has ce Jesus proclaimed himself, and not the Golden le, as "the way, the truth, the life"?

suppose, again, the Golden Rule to have been itted from his teachings, and he had still pro- med himself as the expected Messiah,—had ough miracles, healed diseases, died on the cross n risen again on the third day, thereby bring- and immortality to light. Is it not probable that ristianity would have still attained a position in world similar to that which it now occupies?

Jesus taught his followers some of the grandest ths ever promulgated, both moral and spiritual, new and old; but the record gives indubitable evi- dence, scattered through all the writings of the apos- tles, that it was not the beauty of those truths which most strongly impressed their minds, but the idea of his Messiahship, and the thrilling expectation of his second coming, and their consequent speedy triumph over their enemies. By the time this idea had passed away, Christianity had become encrusted with tradi- tion and dogma, and its spirit so perverted as to be mainly disavowed by liberal Christians of to-day; and therefore its subsequent history need not be traced.

But Mr. Savage says "he emphasized that which was central, and thenceforward it became central in human thought." Then how can he deny that Orthodoxy in its intensest form is Christianity? Has he not assumed the existence of two facts which first need demonstration? According to him, it is only within the present century that the central principle has become sufficiently emphasized to find a lodgment in men's minds, and even now with a very limited number only!

There is some fatal defect in this kind of logic which both includes and excludes; which reaps where it has not sown, or, having sown and getting cockles instead of barley, insists that the seed was pure, but some vicious tendency in the soil has pro- duced the inauspicious result. On no other subject are we allowed such latitude. Mohammedanism is held responsible for its general results, and cannot escape its history by pleading that it contains the seeds of the true methods of human life, which have hitherto remained dormant while weeds and nettles were growing in their place.

Christianity is the result of a combination of forces. Says Castelar: "Athens with her arts, Rome with her laws, Alexandria with her science, have contrib- uted as much to the Christian revelation as Jerusa- lem with her God." It is a revelation because it is a development, a growth; but so was Judaism, and Buddhism, and the other religions. The law of evo- lution is not a continuous development of the same organism, but the ever-increasing perfection of suc- cessive organisms. Christianity must submit to the same processes. To insist that it is the universal religion is logical only for those who claim its founder to have been the very God. Admit this, and it is a fair presumption that his work was perfect and inca- pable of improvement. Deny it, and put him on the plane of our common humanity, and there is no more reason for calling universal religion Christianity, than for calling philosophy Baconism, or astronomy Copernicism. M. L. HAWLEY.

MARATHON, N. Y.

IN THE CITY OF Constance, on the lake of the same name, among the relics may be seen the spider swallowed by Saint Conrad, when taking the wine at mass,—the spider seems to have made good his claim to mummification by making his exit from the thigh of the saint, without having done any harm during his residence within!

Two lambs belonging to Saint Francis of Assisi distinguished themselves immensely by pious acts; one of them went early to wake a lady whom he afterward conducted to mass, and the other lamb at- tended mass every day, remaining on his knees during the entire service!

In the curious legend of Saint Julian encounter- ing a deer in a wood, there is a trace of the Eastern belief in transmigration. The saint went hunting deer in a forest, when suddenly the animal he was following stood at bay and spoke thus: "Do not kill me, for, in so doing, thou wouldst kill thine ances- tors."

Saint Rock, or Roque, is always portrayed with a dog in close company, to commemorate the story, that, being struck down by the plague when far from all human aid in a wood, he was discovered by this dog, who brought him food till he was entirely re- stored to health.

The Cock of Saint Peter is said to have been car- ried into Spain by the Apostle James; feathers were sold at great prices to the pilgrims who visited Com- postella. The poet Southey gives the story with some unimportant variations in his humorous "Pil- grimage to Compostella." The name of that city is said to be merely a corrupted pronunciation of "Sanctus Jacobus Apostolus."—Scribner's Monthly.

THE WILD PEOPLE OF THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY. During last season, Mr. Bond, an Indian surveyor, while at work in the Madras Presidency, to the south- west of the Palanei Hills, managed to catch a couple of the wild folk, who live in the hill jungles of the Western Ghats. These people sometimes bring honey, wax, and sandalwood to exchange with the villagers for cloth, rice, tobacco, and betel nut; but they are very shy. The man was four feet six inches high; he had a round head, coarse black woolly hair, and a dark brown skin. The forehead was low, and slightly retreating; the lower part of the face pro- jected like the muzzle of a monkey, and the mouth, which was small and oval, with thick lips, protruded about an inch beyond the nose; he had short bandy legs, a comparatively long body, and arms that ex- tended almost to his knees. The hands and fingers were dumpy and always contracted, so that they could not be made to stretch out quite straight and flat; the palms and fingers were covered with thick skin (more especially the tips of the fingers), the nails were small and imperfect, and the feet broad and thick-skinned all over. The woman was the same height as the man, the color of the skin was of a yellow tint, the hair black, long, and straight, and the features well formed. This quaint folk occasionally eat flesh, but feed chiefly upon roots and honey. They have no fixed dwelling-places, but sleep on any convenient spot, generally between two rocks, or in caves near which they happen to be benighted. Worship is paid to certain local divinities of the for- est.—English paper.

IN THE stray counties of Pennsylvania now enjoy- ing the fifth generation of solid prosperity, they build a stone barn before they build a house of stone; and though the houses are usually good enough, the barns are generally better. "To be thus is nothing," says the strong man, "but to be safely thus." This feel- ing is very powerful in men who conquer the world; it is weak in the men over whom the victory is gained. Christophe, black emperor, used to say, "Put a bag of coffee in the mouth of hell, and a Yankee would be sure to go after it." Of course he would; why not? The happiness of a human being rests upon three pillars: first, a clear conscience; second, good health; third, a sound pecuniary condition. If that bag of coffee is necessary for the attainment of that third main stay of happiness, let us by all means go where it is found.

Of course there is such a thing as going too far for your bag of coffee. Some men do really forget that, after all, business is only a means to an end. Their minds run entirely to business. A Harvard profess- or told me that he went down to one of the beaches on the New England coast to bathe one stormy day, but the men in charge refused to let him go in on ac- count of the dangerous swell. On his way back he expressed his disappointment and indignation to the driver of the omnibus. "Well, I'll tell you how it is," said the driver; "we don't like to have strangers come down here and get drowned. It hurts the beach." This man evidently had business on the brain.—James Parton.

MOHAMMED was of middle height, rather thin, but broad of shoulders, wide of chest, strong of bone and muscle. His head was massive, strongly devel- oped. Dark hair, slightly curled, flowed in a dense mass down almost to his shoulders. Even in ad- vanced age it was sprinkled by only about twenty gray hairs, produced by the agonies of the "Revela- tions." His face was oval-shaped, slightly tawny of color. Fine, long, arched eye-brows were divided by a vein which throbbed visibly in moments of pas- sion. Great, black, restless eyes shone out from under long, heavy eye-lashes. His nose was large, slightly aquiline. His teeth, upon which he be- stowed great care, were well set, dazzling white. A full beard framed his manly face. His skin was clear and soft, his complexion "red and white." His hands were as "silk and satin"—even as those of a woman. His step was quick and elastic, yet firm, and as that of one "who steps from a high to a low place." In turning his face he would also turn his full body. His whole gait and presence were dignified and imposing. His countenance was mild and pensive. His laugh was rarely more than a smile. "Oh! my little son," reads one tradition, "hadst thou seen him, thou wouldst have said thou hadst seen a sun rising." In his habits he was ex- tremely simple, though he bestowed great care on his person. His eating and drinking, his dress and his furniture retained, even when he had reached the fulness of power, their almost primitive nature.

A WELL-KNOWN Catholic priest of New York has incurred excommunication from the pope by follow- ing the example of Father Hyacinthe. Rev. Henry Lake, of St. Ann's Church, in Twelfth street, and who was, during the first few years succeeding his accession to the priesthood, fierce in denouncing the public-school system, and warm in supporting the papacy, has abandoned the pulpit. During a visit to Lorraine, some time since, Father Lake made the acquaintance of a wealthy French lady. He mar- ried her and left with his bride for California, where they are at present sojourning.

POUGHKEEPSIE Eagle: he's home—the dog. He "swooped" in through the kitchen door about ten o'clock yesterday morning, knocked over the baby, kissed him till he couldn't breathe, and then, to the question of "Where have you been?" retreated to a corner. One eye was bunged up, a piece of his tail was gone, and he limped in the off hind leg. He was about as fat as a lead pencil, and looked as if he'd been hustled out of a primary meeting. The girl looked at him, and exclaimed, "Now, that dog's been in bad company." He had been "on a bust" just one week.

A VERY TALL and shabby-looking man, a fellow that reminded you of a vagrant letter from a font of forty-line-paragon extra condensed, stepped up to one of our bars, last week, and, after heaving a glass of liquor into his long throat, blandly asked the bar-tender if he could change a twenty-dollar bill. That gentleman informed him that he could. "Well," said the tall one, with a sigh of satisfaction, "I'll go out and see if I can find one;" and he plunged out into the cold world on his mission.

BOOTMAKER (who has a deal of trouble with his customer).—"I think, sir, if you were to cut your corns, I could more easily find you a pair—" Chol- eric old gentleman—"Cut my corns, sir! I ask you to fit me a pair of boots to my feet, sir! I'm not going to plane my feet down to fit your boots!"

AT VENICE, in Italy, there is now a woman's paper published called La Donna. The editor is a delicate young lady of twenty-three years, who is self-educated, having risen from the people. The paper is widely circulated all over Italy.

BELIEVE in God, not on Sundays only, but on all days.—Thomas Carlyle.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. HIGGINSON, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. WASSON on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. WASSON on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. CHENEY on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. HIGGINSON on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. CHANNING on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. POTTER on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. CHADWICK on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. MILLS on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. HIGGINSON, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and HIGGINSON of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. WASSON.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. CHANNING. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. POTTER. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. PARTON. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends OF THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
BERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50
BARLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
ARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
ASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BOOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
UCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CHARLEY'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CHAPMAN (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.08
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Friends of Society. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
LODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
CALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly Conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch.....	1.25
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.50
The Spanish Gypsy.....	.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gottinger Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by John Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Effective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	4.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Eye.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance," to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versifications, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	4.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts collected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVAT (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith, or Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philosophy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrine and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.30
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Back-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unre-printed Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.0
Letters.....	2.00
On Sleep in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound in Canada.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX!

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion,—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN

HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FOR MUSIC TEACHERS.

Now examine and select books for the next season's campaign. In our catalogue (sent free), you will find all you need, and of the best quality. We now remind you of our

SONG MONARCH,

(75 cents). Unequaled as a class book for singing schools.

American School Music Readers.

Book I. (35 cents), Book II. (50 cents), Book III. (50 cents). Excellent graded books for schools.

Richardson's New Method for Pianoforte.

($3.75), the greatest and best of Piano instruction books.

Clarke's New Method for REED ORGANS.

($2.50), which occupies very nearly the same position with respect to books of its class as Richardson's does to other Pianoforte Methods.

And if, as is likely, you are a leader of a choir or musical society, you will find excellent material in our new books, Thomas's Quartets and Anthems ($2.50), or Perkins Anthems ($1.50), or Four Part German Songs ($1.50), or Four Mixed Voices, or Dank's Anthem Services, (Episcopal), $2.50.

Sent postpaid for Retail Prices. Sold by all principal music dealers.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heresies and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOK,

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 356, worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1872.

Whole No. 257.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMAND OF LIBERTARIANISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in private armies and all other institutions supported by public money, be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished, and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether recited or read, or of verses or books of religious teaching, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the Federal war in the courts and in the various departments of the government shall be discontinued, and that ample information under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be stricken, and that all laws which discriminate against non-protestants of various sects, creeds, and denominations shall be repealed.
9. We demand that no aid be given to the construction of the United States Capitol or to the United States Court House in the present building at the corner of Congress and Independence streets, and that the completion of the same shall be suspended until the completion of the other great public buildings, and that the same shall be completed and administered on a purely secular basis, and that whenever changes shall prove necessary in the said shall be consequent, unimpaired, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republicanism is imperilled, the advance of civilization retarded, and the most sacred rights of man endangered by the most iniquitous of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution will mark the present administration of the public schools, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the nation; and

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this association shall be THE LIBERTARIAN LEAGUE.
- ART. 2.—The object of the League shall be to secure the removal of all laws which "demand" of citizens "Christian" observance of the Sabbath, and especially to—
- ART. 3.—It is the purpose of the League to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be held in New York City in the month of June, 1872, to be held in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the removal of—
- ART. 4.—The members engaged in working for these objects shall be bound to contribute, from their own means, money, influence, and all such other means as are pecuniary, literary, and moral.
- ART. 5.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 6.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 7.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of five members, and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be elected by ballot at the National Convention of Liberal Leagues, and shall be elected together.
- ART. 8.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided the question of the proposed amendments shall have been put to every member at least two weeks previous to said meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUPPLEMENT TO THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

- SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or forbidding any person from holding religious opinions, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or depriving any person of the free exercise of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for redress of grievances.
- SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or forbidding any person from holding religious opinions, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or depriving any person of the free exercise of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for redress of grievances.
- SECTION 3.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or forbidding any person from holding religious opinions, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or depriving any person of the free exercise of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for redress of grievances.
- SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

JOHN QUINN's advice to the Young Men's Association at Richmond, passed in one of the "transmissions" in another column of this paper, is "remember their thousand battles, their armies and camps," might as be specially noted and well understood by all who value the principles of religious liberty and secular government. How many eyes there are, but how few that see.

"It is my hope and prayer," said Gen. Burnside in Music Hall, "that these memorial days may be so observed as to kindle in all feelings of duty and make which were engendered by the late war. I am free to say that I am ready to do anything on the face of the earth to accomplish this. I will do anything but to acknowledge that we were wrong in what we did to suppress the rebellion." Amen to every word of this!

The Francis Thompson have won a great victory, according to the London Times, in the university admission bill just adopted by the Assembly. The Times says that "in gross the death-blow to a system of educational hegemony, under which a secular and religious body has hitherto shaped the higher teaching of young men who filled the professions." In other words, the Catholic influence is hereafter to "shape the higher teaching" to suit itself; and this, we presume, is considered "educational freedom" by the Times. But our Schools are blind to all signs of reason everywhere.

The following provision, reported as the eighth section of the Bill of Rights in the Constitutional Convention of Missouri, would be approved by Bishop Doane: "That every gift, sale, or devise of land to any priest, minister, public teacher or preacher of the gospel, as such, or to any religious sect, order or denomination; or to, or for the support, use, or benefit of, or in trust for, any minister, public teacher or preacher of the gospel, as such, or to any religious sect, order or denomination; and every gift or sale of goods or chattels, to go in succession, or to take effect after the death of the donor or donor, or to or for such support, use or benefit; and also every devise of goods or chattels to, or for the support of, any minister, public teacher or preacher of the gospel, as such, or to any religious sect, order, or denomination, shall be void."

THE SEVENTH OF JUNE was commemorated this year as never before in Boston. One hundred years ago the battle of Bunker Hill; now the centennial celebration of it by a great nation at peace. Remembering that the thing celebrated was the heroism of those who loved liberty enough to fight for it, and who thus superseded the "gospel of love" by the gospel of human rights, it is a pertinent inquiry to ask whether this is indeed a "Christian nation" or not. All who look beneath the surface will see that the Christian ethics of "sympathy" would have forbidden the Revolution, and taught slavish submission to the powers that were. Fortunately for mankind, human nature is nobler than all systems which claim to govern it: the sterner virtues on which everything valuable depends shatter their scraw fetters in an instant when the crisis arrives.

THE MAGNIFICENT and graceful act of the Fifth Maryland Regiment will be henceforth associated imperishably with the Soldiers' Monument at Charleston: "The Marylanders came to the Common from Charleston, which they visited very quietly, notifying nobody beforehand, and going entirely without escort. They carried with them a magnificent floral shield composed of white and carnation pink, and marched straight to Winthrop Square, in which stands the beautiful monument erected by Charlestown in the memory of her sons who fell in the military and naval service during the war. Here the regiment halted, formed three sides of a square around the monument, the band played a dirge, and the regiment stood at parade rest while the shield was reverently laid on the monument—Maryland's tribute to the dead heroes of the Bunker Hill day. Then the words were given: 'Attention?' 'Carry Arms?' 'Present Arms?' and after this simple, beautiful ceremony the regiment departed."

AFTER THE BATTLE has been fought and won by great principles, the claims of sympathy are never long neglected. When the Fifth Maryland Regiment, in the afternoon of June 16, quietly marched over to Charleston, and laid their spontaneous tribute of a beautiful floral shield on the Soldiers' Monument in Winthrop Square, they performed an act of touching and exquisite nobility which will never be forgotten. The great conflict over chattel-slavery is settled forever, because it is settled right; and we trust and believe that Massachusetts is as ready to honor Maryland's valor as Maryland has been to honor hers. The victory of freedom was won for all alike; and now it is time to recognize that mistaken heroism is heroic still. For me, although the precious blood of a brother was shed on the field of Gettysburg, we are ready to lay a wreath of flowers on the grave of the unknown rebel whose mortal bullet spilled it; for who shall say that the rebel served his now "lost cause" less honestly than the young Union officer served a better cause for whom all hearts that knew him must bleed till they cease to beat? In the immortal memories of Bunker Hill and the other great days of yore, let all true Americans be henceforth united soul to soul in common devotion to their common country, and in deeper fidelity than ever to the universal principles for which that common country stands. It is time to-day to remember—and also to forget.

WHOSE heart did not beat quicker at sight of the old damask "Flag of Bunker," borne peacefully through the streets of Boston in the great procession of the Seventeenth of June by the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, S. C.? In 1857 the widow of the heroic Col. William Washington of the Revolutionary army, wishing to assign the battle-day of her husband's famous cavalry troop to one of the military companies of Charleston, selected the Washington Light Infantry. This day was borne by Col. Washington's command through the thickest of the fight in the battles of Eutaw Springs and the Cowpens in South Carolina. Now nearly a century old, it is believed to be the only one of Revolutionary date in possession of a military company. It is a small, square piece of crimson damask satin, with a laurel wreath woven in the centre, and is worn and faded, but is dearly cherished by these soldiers. The venerable lady made a formal presentation of this banner to the company from the steps of her ancient mansion on South Bay Street, in Charleston, and the incident was a notable one at the time. An interesting story is told of the origin of the Flag of Bunker. It is said that when Col. Washington was galloping with his troop to the battle-field, he halted for an instant at the house of a planter. The beautiful daughter of the planter, noticing that the regiment had no colors, ran into her boudoir, and, tipping the rich damask back from one of those great old-fashioned chairs which the weather-colonists were accustomed to import from Europe, speedily fashioned it with her dainty fingers into an ensign, which the patriots promptly bore into the combat. Col. Washington returned the compliment by going back after the war and marrying the fair donor. This ancient flag will be carried in the procession to-day, and form a new link between the Revolutionary battle-fields of Massachusetts and those of her sister State, South Carolina.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kuschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SACK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Religion at all Events.

AN ESSAY READ BEFORE THE ESSEX CONFERENCE, AT DANVERS, MAY 19, 1875, BY J. H. CLIFFORD, MINISTER OF THE UNITARIAN CHURCH AT NORTH ANDOVER.

The irrepressible conflict of opinions is one in which the same ground is contested time after time, as the championship of beliefs descends from sire to son; and, in fact, latterly, from mother to daughter. Indeed, so familiar and ancient are the battle-words and sounding sabre-strokes that ring in our ears, from invisible as well as visible fields of space, that we may almost fancy the spirits of our fathers, like those of the slain Huns and Romans, in the old legend, met in the air to fight their battles over again.

Nor shall we be likely to shift the scene much to-day. If debate is battle, forces are ever the same. Generalship only differs; there is marshalling thus and otherwise; not often comes decisive proof which way is superior; to-day's victory may be to-morrow's rout. There is a saying that God can cause even the wrath of man to praise him. It is but another way of saying that the universal makes the partial bear constant testimony to itself; or that truth ever has a witness even in falsehood. So, I think, has religion a witness in half-religion, in unreligion, yes, in denial itself; while on some hands it is even thought to be the strongest proof of its existence, as a genuine fact, that it survives the blundering defence of its most conscious and forward defenders. Thus we have the saying of Boccaccio, that "religion exists in spite of its ministers,"—a far-reaching, if somewhat cynical, acknowledgment, signifying more than many martial arrays of homily, and ponderous batteries of dogmatic theology.

Yet so well-satisfied are we, for the most part, with the work of organized armies of religion, with their regimented forces and Briarean arms of service; so well assured are we of the safety of the cause in such keeping,—that instead of talking much, or doing much, for religion itself, as a thing damageable by our personal neglect, we are rather given to saying and acting, spasmodically or systematically, on behalf of our favorite notions of generalship, and other minor things, relating to the aforesaid armies.

So long as it is thought that religion is thus in the hands of military authorities, to be deployed at will for whatever special service, there is no call to talk of anything besides the manual and its execution.

But if it be imagined that religion, like human character, far from being such a well-disciplined actuality, is only an infinite potentiality, capable of being made actual by degrees, but always to some extent at the mercy of human anarchy, the no-government of blindness, passion, and spiritual vagrancy,—then, upon this idea, one may take his stand outside of all uniformed ranks; may say to drill-sergeants, "Put your gallant boys through the manual; call your targets the devil, though they be only harmless effigies of the devil; let your valor expend itself in burning powder, and wounding no wrong, since it has nothing better wherewith to divert itself. I, not being so sure of the cause committing itself to such defence, nor much in love with your splendid evolutions, will use myself as a free lance, to fight as I can, not for any foregone conclusion of religion, but for such religion as may discover itself to me through all the dust of battle-fields and sham battle-fields in this world."

Religion must outlive not only its foes but like wise not a few of the friends of its own household. It must survive not only deniers, but also purblind affirmers, whose merely partial affirmation is denial in effect.

It is because I believe it both existed before, and will survive these deniers and half-affirmers, that I confidently call my subject "Religion at all Events."

To show, if possible, how it does, and must, survive denial and partial affirmation, how it silences the former and transcends the latter, is now my necessary though not easy task. Not easy, not because the fact itself is not clear, but because of the danger from its very clearness, that I shall, by saying anything, obscure it.

The whole question resolves itself into one of faith and unfaith, under whatever various aspects these may be viewed.

We have several positions to consider, which I enumerate and shall treat in the following order:—

1. Scepticism. 2. Denial. 3. Special religions—Christianity. 4. The anti-Christian position. 5. Supernaturalism. 6. Religion.

Of course here is laid out work enough, if it were worth doing, for the making of so many books that the world could not contain them; and it will therefore hardly be expected that in a single hour I can do more than sketch an essay—that is, an attempt—of toiling through these five miry negations to solid ground of affirmation. We begin with

SCEPTICISM.

Here is a specimen of what is called the eighteenth-century sort, from the poet Byron:—

"Even gods must yield—religions take their turn:
 'Twas Jove's—'tis Mahomet's; and other creeds
 Will rise with other fears, till man shall learn
 Vainly his incense soars, his victim bleeds;
 Poor child of Doubt and Death, whose hope is built on reeds."

The former part of this remarkable verse contains, as we shall notice further on, both history and prophecy; for "gods" do "yield, religions take their turn," as we know. So it has been; so shall it be.

But that the pessimism of the latter half has any foundation in the truth of things, it can be no part of our business to admit. Neither truth nor shadow of truth is in it. Yet we must admit that this sentiment, however untrue, is representative. It challenges, with a voice of mingled despair and scorn, all the world-wide utterance of yea and amen of religious faith. So sullenly challenged, religious faith must, on no plea of the serenity of its own temper, refuse to answer as it can now, or, if need shall be, until the end of the world.

But first let us listen to the challenge of a certain sort of nineteenth-century scepticism, differing from the other, and having a greater importance, as being less emotional and more intellectual. Its mouth-piece for us is John Stuart Mill, of whose scepticism no one who has carefully read his Three Essays on Religion need lack a fair understanding.

In the short essay upon "The Utility of Religion," Mr. Mill appears to measure its duration by its usefulness. To ask if religion will survive is tantamount to inquiring if it is useful to mankind. Without knowing how it may have seemed to others, I must confess that for myself Mr. Mill's trumpet gives in answer to the question he has raised a most uncertain sound. "Did he think religion useful, or not?" is the involuntary question that rises as the book is finished. Not to pronounce any judgment upon the nature or importance of his peculiar test, let us see, if we can, what is the result of his own application of the test. But we find this seeming to be very difficult. Blown about by the contrary winds of a scepticism which does not seem to be of that natural sort out of which all inquiry is born, but rather of a conscious and pre-determined kind, his mind appears to struggle between the effort, on the one hand, to keep out of all well known harbors, and on the other the more hazardous task of risking an original landing-place. In this perilous conflict the reader at first finds him, and I wonder if there is one to whom he does not appear, at the final glimpse, to be just making off from some lonely cove where he had seemed about to be casting anchor and taking possession, in the name of faith or unfaith,—who shall say which?

Of course Mr. Mill did not regard himself as in any recognized sense a religious man. His scepticism is open and avowed. And apart from their value as the inquiries and suggestions of a highly trained and philosophical sceptic, what importance do his fragmentary posthumous essays possess? It is because in spite of their diffuseness and equivocation they yet challenge, in the true sceptical spirit, every religious theory and assumption, that they are undeniably, if not helpful to faith, or promotive of happiness—the supposed aim and end of human being, according to Mr. Mill's school—at least a spur to thought and an aid to discrimination.

Following Mr. Mill through this essay, we find that his scepticism leads him towards denial rather than towards belief. Thus, he concludes I think, not only that "the belief in religion considered as a mere persuasion, apart from the question of its truth, is" not "really indispensable to the welfare of mankind;" but also that the usefulness of the belief is not "intrinsic and universal," but rather "local, temporary, and, in some sense, accidental;" and that "the benefits which it yields might be obtained otherwise, without the very large alloy of evil by which, even in the best form of the belief, those benefits are qualified." He even proceeds to assume the improvement of religion, which he allows to be taking place, to be complete; supposes it "to have accepted the best human morality which reason and goodness can work out from philosophical, Christian, or any other elements;" and to have "freed itself from the pernicious consequences which result from its identification with any bad moral doctrine;" and having thus made the ground "clear for considering whether its useful properties are exclusively inherent in it, or their benefits can be obtained without it," he throws the weight of his opinion, somewhat decisively, into the scale opposite to that in which he places religion; which, thus weighed in the balance, at its best, he seems to declare is found wanting.

Perhaps there is no better illustration of the most intelligent scepticism of our times than the religious essays of Mr. Mill. That it is superficial, as shown in this case, may well be said, in spite of the author's reputation as a philosopher. But it remains for us to show, if we can, further on, that its superficiality is but the counterpart of that which characterizes the current religion itself, or that which passes under the name of religion at present; and that, unless the whole sphere of religion can be more fully comprehended than it generally is, the most honest and earnest scepticism must issue in denial and not in belief; while with a fuller comprehension of religion there would also come a reconciliation between scepticism and faith.

DENIAL.

But although Mr. Mill's scepticism takes the direction of denial, rather than that of belief, at every critical passage of his essays there yet appears to be a very considerable class of thoughtful people for whom his views are quite too favorable on the side of religion. As confessed by certain of his old associates, who may be regarded as speaking for a multitude, at the point where Mr. Mill divulges even his slight religious predilections, they and he "have come to the parting of the ways." Strict secularists, for whom no such thing as religion exists, and who will have nothing to do with the name, except to discredit it, are a class whose voice is heard to-day wherever there is speech or language. This class may perhaps be assumed to represent what is called denial in its most intelligent aspects. Denial is indeed very differently interpreted and classified by different bodies of religious sectarians. By some it is denounced as being identical with anti-Christ; by others it is characterized as the spirit of Mephistophiles, "the devil of knowledge." On the one hand it is regarded as a positive force of evil; on the other as the stolid negation of goodness. On all hands it is equally regarded as in some sense, moral or intellectual, the satanic foe of religion. We shall have occasion presently to show, if we can, that, according to our idea of religion, it can point confidently to this much-dreaded denial as one of its vouchers.

SPECIAL RELIGIONS—CHRISTIANITY.

It has always been the case that, when religion has been spoken of, some special religion has commonly been meant. In considering the nature and relations of special religions, it will be best for us to confine ourselves, for obvious reasons, to one,—Christianity. What is in general true of this is also true of every other special faith. As to the nature of a special religion, enough for our present purpose is indicated by the very term special—pertaining to a species, a subordinate class. The antithesis of this would be the genus, inclusive of all species. I shall here regard Christianity as a species, and not as being identical with the genus; as a special religion, not the universal religion. As a species it has relations to all other species, and also to the genus itself. I hope we shall manage to make a protest of some sort against the common habit of ignoring these relations, whether on the side of Christianity or on the anti-Christian side. To identify Christianity, on the one hand, with the absolute religion, or to deny, on the other hand, that it is truly a religion at all, is a fatal error.

But under this particular head we have to deal with the "Christian position," which just now is so desperately defining itself, in certain quarters, and in such extraordinarily conflicting ways. If all those who lately have been so conspicuously in pose for the sake of their Christianity could be accurately photographed, while the diversity of attitudes would be interesting for comparison, the task would be difficult for the most finished connoisseur to declare a preference. I do not think there would be even one adequate representation among them of real Christianity. These self-offered models of the Christian type are as gross caricatures of the subject, to say the least, as any that are painted by non-Christian, or even anti-Christian, artists or bunglers. But if there are any in these days who approximate fidelity, they are those, I think, who hold fast by the original Christian revelation, not those who freely translate it to suit their own heretical tastes, vainly trying to conceal the new thing by the old name. "When I say I am a Calvinist, understand that I mean I am what Calvin would be if he were living and were what I am to-day" is a form of elucidation to monopoly of which even the great Brooklyn explainer, with all his child-like simplicity, cannot pretend. For the like rehabilitation of mummified dogmas in the clothes of modern rationalism is a process by which certain Christians beguile themselves, while they stickle for that worthy name by the which they would be called. These would fain persuade us that Christianity is but another name for religion. And, in order to make the persuasion easy to swallow, they are under the necessity of straining out sundry original ingredients which would be rejected by many palates. But if those are real ingredients they are parts of the Christianity, and cannot be strained out, and Christianity be left notwithstanding. They may be specific, and are, indubitably; nevertheless, they are Christian, and must be included in the system, if the system is to remain intact.

Among other eliminated ingredients, I notice that certain well-styled neo-Christians have no difficulty in bringing themselves to dispense with one which hitherto has been held to be of considerable moment—I mean THE CHRIST. How very easily, in the new dispensation of the new dispensation, this once essential element is remanded to the limbo of silence, it is truly astonishing to mark! With what perfect coolness and unconsciousness of subtlety, the man JESUS is brought forward as the substitute for the redeeming CHRIST—himself once the substitute for condemned man—it is bewitching to see! If we have long had for a rhetorical stroke “The play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out,” we may now have the more consummate theatrical omission of Christianity with the Christ left out.

The writer of the essay entitled “Christianity Notwithstanding” takes account of the ethical and personal qualities of the man Jesus, and calls these Christianity; utterly ignoring that Christ-dogma which is the corner-stone of the system, without which it would not only never have received its name, but would never have existed. This is manifestly as unfair as anything the editor of THE INDEX has ever said, by way of restricting the definition of Christianity to certain of its uglier features. They better represent, I think, the true position for Christians to occupy to-day, and always, who retort to “Christianity Notwithstanding,” “Christianity without a notwithstanding,” giving appropriate and necessary emphasis to the supernatural and authoritative, as well as to the ethical and human elements of the system. The author of “Christianity Notwithstanding” claims that Christianity is truthfully epitomized in the phrase “Love to God and man.” But Paul, who had an earlier acquaintance with the religion, and whose formative hand is so visible in it, who is called by many, not without a degree of justice, the real founder of the system, said: “If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain,” and Christians have reiterated the saying from Paul’s day to our own; and when they cease to reiterate it they cease, in any literal or doctrinal sense, to be Christians, however they may profess and defend the name or the thing. Christ and Jesus, although treated so by neo-Christian usage, are not interchangeable terms. Around the personality and teachings of Jesus gathered heavy accretions of the supernatural, which, together with the teachings, came to be called Christianity, from his official or supernatural title, after Jesus had gone.

Beyond this identification of Christianity with the person and teachings of Jesus, which is so evidently unhistorical, to say the least, there is also much said with equal unfitness to the effect that the superiority of Jesus, in character and insight, constitutes him the natural leader and religious head of mankind. Young Liberal Christians now begin to make known their loyalty, not to the redeemer or savior—the plain old Christian titles—but to “Christ the ideal,” a very indefinite substitute, which Christian Orthodoxy, it is safe to say, will never accept. “No one,” says Mr. Savage, “is able to rob Jesus of the glory of having possessed and exercised, in a more comprehensive and far-reaching manner than any other being who ever lived,” “the highest form of greatness of which we can conceive,” that of “giving life to the world.” Well, no one wants to rob him of this glory, that I know of, if it is his. But I think it is less his, according to his own doctrine, as well as other people’s, than humanity’s; less humanity’s than His from whom and to whom “all glories are.” It is not enough that Jesus was the greatest man in this respect—humanity is still greater; and no name less than its own will suit humanity’s religion. To be an authoritative leader of the race, Jesus must be, as proper Christianity conceives him to be, somewhat more than a man. Only a man, he may, if not already equalled, be equalled by other men.

“Has earth no more such souls within her breast?
Let those who dare, say ‘None.’”

Christianity, we have said, is a special religion. “It is the special religion,” say its adherents, “designed for universal acceptance. At the name of Jesus every knee shall bow in some fashion or other.” “It is the Absolute Religion,” say the whole Christian party, with many quarrels among themselves as to what it is, even then. “Not at all,” reply our non-Christians, not much organized yet, free lances mostly; but pretty well agreed in the new protestantism, and in the attempt at a new and larger affirmation. Christianity absolute and permanent, or Christianity conditioned and temporary, seems to be the real question. I hold that it is conditioned and temporary.

But this is not the worst to be said of it. It is also false in that principal element, its assumed authority. I must quote from a book called Christianity the Science of Manhood, by the same author as “Christianity Notwithstanding”: “The love that follows a guide, though it may lack wisdom and power, does yet have all it wants in the love that links it to him who possesses all. A little child may be utterly incapable of navigating a ship from New York to San Francisco. Yet, loving, trusting, and sailing with his father, who is a navigator, gives him as safe a voyage as though he knew and did it all. The timbers of the hulk, the sails, the rudder, the compass, the quadrant, the winds and the stars, all become servants to his trusting love. Just herein is the peculiarity of Christianity, and here is its fitness for universality. Any being who can love has access to all the needed knowledge of God.” Such reasoning is very pretty, but it is a fatal logic. The writer indeed truly remarks that this ignorant, trusting love is “the peculiarity of Christianity,” but I think him woefully wrong in inferring from this peculiarity its “fitness for universality.” Unfitness rather, shall we not say? “Needed knowledge of God,” as though our necessity had limit, and could be satisfied! No, every man must be a navigator; and every boy must not trust, but learn. Suppose a son of Capt. Thomas had been with his father on the ill-fated Schiller! We need to know all. The ship and the sea serve not love, not trust, but knowledge and will. If these fail, it will infallibly make wreck of the others. But when these succeed, then those are safe and happy passengers. But the powers of Nature only mock the most trusting love, when it is ignorant. The more it ignorantly trusts, the more they mock. The boy may learn navigation from his father; but he must learn it that he may voyage without his father, and perhaps in seas to the latter unknown. A man is not a mere atom, to follow in the wake of some force of a superior man or atom. He is a unit of force.

Christianity, thus affirmed to be the perfect, will, I believe, at length prove to be but one of many partial things, all which in the gradual coming of the perfect, will be done away. The verse, so familiar, will occur to you all; therefore it belongs here:—

“Our little systems have their day,
They have their day, and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord! art more than they.”

This question of Christianity or something else has brought opposing parties into close quarters of late. Where the dispute waxed hottest is at the outermost verge of the Christian stronghold, as we have already indicated. It is a point at which it becomes doubtful whether the defenders of the Christian standard, valiant and vigilant as they are, are really loyal soldiers of the cross, or unwitting members of the vanguard of the enemy. It is a point of great dubiousness, both to the enemy and to the main body in the Christian encampment; requiring much onset of asseveration, and quick manoeuvre of argument—on the whole, a nice set of tactics, but withal a high and proud sense of honor—on the part of the doubtful ones. On the one hand, the non-Christians will accept them with no divided allegiance; and on the other, the officers of the king’s army are always in watching to shoot deserters, without so much as that apology for justice, a “drum-head” court-martial. This interlinear position, in danger of a cross-fire, is a somewhat precarious one, as many know. Meanwhile, the Holy Catholic Church throughout the world, or so much of it as deigns to take notice of this hot little fight at all, seats itself on its ecclesiastical throne, planted on a safe eminence, like Xerxes viewing the battle of Salamis, and looks on, with full confidence in Christian watchwords, even dubiously shouted, as against Free Religious carnal reasonings; even as Xerxes reposed his confidence in Persian numbers as against Grecian valor. There are some who think it will fare much the same with the ecclesiastical spectator as it did with the Parthian monarch, who, seeing the issue of the battle, then packed up his regal effects, and made good his imperial retreat back to his empire of eunuchs and serfs.

“With rueful cries he rent his royal robes,”

Beyond what we have here tried to examine, the Christian argument cannot go. At the point we have now reached, if anywhere, it must make its victorious stand, and erect its everlasting trophies; or here, if anywhere, it is to be met and vanquished, by a declaration larger, with a more exceeding and eternal weight of truth and glory.

And though there may be mourning over the apostasy of once faithful believers, and the mothers in Israel sorrowfully say of their children, “They love [Christianity] thee least who owe thee most,” yet I doubt not that every just measure even of affection and gratitude shall be duly filled.

THE ANTI-CHRISTIAN POSITION.

If, however, any think that, instead of a stronger affirmation, another mere negation will relieve us of Christianity the partial, and give us religion the universal, I believe they fall into an error quite as fatal as any of which we have spoken, or could speak. If the Christian ignores the very characteristic of his religion, which we have called its specialness, and thereby fails to see its relations, the anti-Christian ignores another real feature of it—its religiousness, and fails to recognize its relations not less. Its special element, its universal element, both must be admitted, and kept in mind; its mere tradition, but also its truth; and truth and tradition are not entitled to the same regard. If this must pass, that must remain; and is the anti-Christian’s no less than the Christian’s. No man would profess to be anti-truth; and no man can be anti-any-whole-system, without being anti-some-degree-of-truth. There is no possible way to escape the difficulty, which no philosopher, it is safe to say, would permit himself to lie under, except by renouncing the anti. The time has come, when no position is so creditable to thinkers as, if I may so call it, the anti-anti position, the negation of all negations for the sake of the perfect affirmation. “For,” as the great preacher to the century says, “men’s hearts ought not to be set against one another, but set with one another; and all against the evil thing only.” Nothing is plainer than that the editor of THE INDEX is wholly incapable of meeting the arguments which have been so well made against his anti-Christian position. He is a splendid knight, gallant and true, and is doing a righteous work in many ways; but he rides a mad steed, which carries him on Quixotic raids, full tilt against foes even less dangerous than wind-mills; unless indeed it should be said of him, and of most of us in these days, that we are not riders at all, but ridden.

“Things are in the saddle,
And ride mankind,” wrote one thirty years ago, or more. To-day, perhaps, he would say that names instead of things are the riders.

If Mr. Abbot’s definition of Christianity were true, then I should be with him anti-Christian. But all the way through he identifies Christianity with those elements in it which are special and false, rather than with those which are universal and true. He labors hard to show that all non-Christians, whether they know it or not, are in fact anti-Christian; but as I think wholly without success. His favorite illustration appears to be, indeed, one by which he feels certain that he saves himself the unpleasantness of acknowledging that, in opposing Christianity as a whole, he is opposing, in its universal element which he confesses it has, somewhat that is true. But I think the illustration palpably defective, as any illustration of so utterly illogical a position would be sure to be. As this illustration, however, seems to be the strong tower of Mr. Abbot’s anti-Christian fortress, it would look cowardly for us not to assail it, even though we may be unable to take it; in which case it need not be deemed impregnable. It is this: Mr. Abbot says (INDEX April 22, 1875): “All living tissues are composed . . . of one and the same life-stuff. The universal element of all organisms is protoplasm, without which there can be no organism at all. Now suppose a traveller is assailed in the forest by a panther, which is a peculiar organism composed ultimately of the same protoplasm of which the traveller himself and all other organisms are composed. What shall he do? He has no quarrel with protoplasm; in fact, he could not conveniently get along without it. But this particular aggregate of protoplasm which now threatens to assail him with teeth and claws is something that he must quarrel with, or else be digested by. He is not anti-protoplasm, but he is certainly anti-panther so he concludes not to be perplexed by the coexistence in the beast of both universal and special elements, but to shoot it as a whole. He cannot possibly kill all protoplasm, but he must kill this form of it or be killed himself.” Mr. Abbot continues: “Now this is a crude representation of the fact as respects Christianity,” wherewith I fully agree, as to the crudity, though not as to the “representation of the fact,” very distorted misrepresentation, I should rather say. How unfair in the first place, to represent Christianity as a wild beast threatening to devour mankind! But it quite agrees, let us remember, with Mr. Abbot’s former definitions of this religion. Might not Christianity more justly be represented as a mis-shapen man, in whom beauty blends with deformity, and whose spirit is engaged in a vain life-struggle for emancipation from its environment of ugliness into perfect stature and grace; one who is indeed imperfect enough in himself, with numerous shortcomings, injuring his neighbors sometimes, but quite as often benefiting them; not wholly bent upon destroying his kind, though not wholly capable of blessing them? Not a being deserving of capital punishment, but entitled to live till in the course of providence, or evolution, he must pay the debt to Nature, emancipate himself through death; while all his good works will follow him, the ill he has done gradually getting interred with his bones.

But this is not directly assailing the fortress, but rather the cause of war which it is intended to maintain. In the second place, we have to see what is the weak point in the illustration itself as an illustration. There may be, for aught I know, several weak points; but I think I discover one which is entirely fatal. It is this: Mr. Abbot says his hypothetical traveller is not anti-protoplasm, but he is anti-panther. Now as an organism composed of protoplasm, the panther is as innocent as the protoplasm itself; as a form of creation, the special organism is as truly an object of respect as the universal substance which composes it. The traveller is no more anti-panther than he is anti-protoplasm. So far as he is opposed to anything, it is not to the special organism panther, but only to the disposition of that organism to devour him. He is not anti-panther, but only anti-panther appetite; and not even that in a general sense, but simply as that appetite threatens to appease itself with his own special organism, protoplasm and all. And I do not know but the object of his antagonism might be diminished still further; in fact, I think it might easily be reasoned out of sight, until it should appear that, far from being anti-anything, the man was only self-preservation, with all Nature behind him. This is what the traveller really is; and this is based on the universal law of affirmation, not that of negation. If he were really anti-panther, he would take his gun every day, as the editor of THE INDEX does (who certainly does not wait for Christianity to assail him), and go out to shoot one of those ravenous beasts; failing to find which, in these populous districts, he might exterminate some ferocious lamb, and report another panther slain, and claim the bounty. But being only for self protection, as regards the panther, he goes on his journey, and never shoots except when attacked by the beast. Wherefore I think he is not anti-panther.

It is unnecessary to pursue the argument further. The application is plain enough. No really philosophical thinker can ever be anti-Christian. Such an one will have respect to the truth rather than the error of any and all systems. Nothing lasting can ever be built on a negation, least of all anything on a hostile and aggressive negation. The substance, life, order, growth of the universe do not rest on an eternal No, but on an eternal Yes. Nor can the human soul live, and expand, and aspire on an absence or a denial, but on a presence and an everlasting Yea. “Epochs of faith,” said Goethe, “are epochs of fruitfulness.” But when was there ever a wholly unfruitful epoch? If none is unfruitful, neither is any unfaithful. Let the same large judgment be applied to the creeds and systems of the world, of which epochs are largely made. When they become unfaithful and unfruitful, they decay and give place to better. They need not to be hewn into atoms. Better use our tools in shaping the new than in unshaping the old. Disintegration is best carried on by Nature; let man do his work more, and make less idle interference with hers.

"When the old world is sterile,
And the ages are effete,
He will from wrecks and sediment
The fairer world complete."

"Life is too short to waste
In critic peep or cynic bark,
Quarrel or reprimand:
'Twill soon be dark;
Up, heed thine own aim, and God speed the mark!"

SUPERNATURALISM.

Say what we will, all questions of religion and no religion, of this religion and that religion, resolve themselves at some time into the one question, "What is religion?" If it be really anything, any human or divine fact, then the question of its permanence answers itself. If it is only some chimera, airy nothing, then the latter question also answers itself, but in another way. And the difference of ways deeply concerns us all. The inquiry must be a process in reduction, ascending or descending. To one sort of intellect, reduction ascending is adding to the term religion all kinds of supernatural terms, with miracles and dogmas, and formalism the most complex. To this intellect, the reverse of such a process is reduction descending; that is, bringing religion down from the regions of phantasm to a basis of human experience, and from supernatural complexity to natural simplicity. I think this intellect has had its day, and is gradually giving place to the other, which sees just the reverse, in many things of what it sees; to which the reduction proceeds also in the reverse way. Not that I like to bring the terms natural and supernatural before you in antagonism; because, let me define them for myself, and I have no quarrel with either of them, though one alone is sufficient for every purpose of mine. But as they have been and still are currently employed in theology, they are in antagonism. They are not used each to denote a single side of one and the same thing, but to denote two separate and, in fact to some extent, hostile things. It is with this sense of supernatural, as eternally opposed to natural, instead of being one with it, that we must here quarrel; and with this antiquated supernaturalism people are quarrelling more and more. Hence the present outgrowing of ancient organizations, now in this century first really perceptible for some thousand years. Latterly there is so much discovered in the natural world, that discoverers scarcely bethink themselves of the need of any supernatural. It dawns on them that Nature is a thing not to be got above nor below, nor outside of, by any means. Call the ultimate what you please—Force, God, or Power that makes for righteousness—it is all here, in this compact, comprehensive universe. Hence comes, somewhat rapidly of late, abandonment of supernatural dogmas and theories in general. Not much in them but confusion, irrationality, and verbal apologies for want of insight into Nature. They served their day, like the Book of Genesis, but are antiquated now as matters of implicit belief. Religion must henceforth take on some meaning which will sufficiently clothe it, allowing it to discard the fig-leaf with which it endeavors to cover its vast inanities, else the number will increase of those who will not profess, but rather renounce and deny religion altogether, as they think. We need not much wonder at "indifference" to religion, so much complained of in these days; to hear men say: "We are not ready yet, with our practical way of looking at things; to make much investment in that which you call religion; perhaps, for the courtesy of the thing, we take a pew, or perhaps not—not valuing courtesy above conviction of some sort. That which you call religion appears to be a very sick patient, sadly in need of doctoring, yet only made worse by learned treatment; for there is no likelihood that the doctors will ever agree about the case; and at present they are far more likely to kill than cure."

Sometime ago an aged woman died in France, leaving a large and well-secured box to her respected physician, by whom she had preserved to a good old age. On being opened, the box proved to contain a legacy consisting of all the medicines prescribed for her by the respected doctor, unopened, and gratefully returned by the discreet patient. In like manner are the prescriptions of religious doctors, professors as well as quacks, prudently let alone, to be returned, or to disappear, untaken and unopened. And people live the longer, and perhaps the better, for their abstinence. Men cry out, "Dismiss your doctors; show us your religion, itself the type of perfect vigor, itself the great physician of man, and source of saving health among all nations. Then we will not be indifferent to that; we will consent to a large investment of our most practical energies in its behalf." I say we cannot wonder at present, that practical men, the embodiments of the shrewd good sense of this world, should talk in this way, as they do. And this shrewd good sense is rather more important to the world, better worth saving and providing for, than the whole sum of its pious folly, of which, the more the amount, the less its value. Good sense does not want to build on delusion; nor on pretence; nor on cant. It will rather build on a practical understanding; perhaps on legal tender; on materialism. In fact will rather try, though it is ever vain; to build on scepticism, on denial, on atheism; on anything that has or may seem to have foundation on the earth, even though being of the earth it should be earthy, before building on anything that has no existence save in the clouds, mere atmospheric phenomena, idle winds of empty doctrine.

There is no permanence for supernatural religion, in any sense of the term hitherto authorized by general acceptance. I think there is no permanence for the word at all in any sense, in religion or out of it, no call for it henceforth; men being resolved to build on fact, who know what is fact, and can teach others, and not to accept dream for the want of fact. At all events, however it may fare with the supernatural, even though it should continue to hold a nominal place in religion, it is by this time clear enough that it can be no longer forced as dogma upon unwilling minds, made a necessary condition to one's personal religiousness. Religion must hereafter be so defined, or so conceived, that one can be religious without supernatural beliefs—in good and regular standing, good as the best, among religious souls. Religion cannot henceforth be identified with supernaturalism, and in that shape dogmatically enforced. If that attempt is continued, true religion will flee, as hitherto, to the refuge of outcasts and protestant souls. And if these could be exterminated, then religion would with them depart out of this world, as with such it has well-nigh departed, more than once. Supernaturalism, whatever it is, however it may be defined, is not religion; and religion may exist without so much as a sign of it, perhaps more purely than with one. In a word, if the alternative must be between supernaturalism or no religion, then no religion there will be, as man grows more enlightened; of which there are even now tokens enough.

To refer again in this connection to Mr. Mill, I remark that if the result at which he arrives in his essays could be stated in a single sentence, it might be this: he renders an almost unqualified judgment against supernatural religion, and a slightly qualified one in favor of the religion of humanity.

In support of this judgment, he points out the fact that "religion has been powerful, not by its intrinsic force, but because it has wielded" the "additional and more mighty power" of "human opinion"; that morality and its maxims have in all the religions, except the religion of humanity, been represented as of supernatural origin; whereby, he says, "morality is stereotyped"; its assumed origin consecrating the whole of its maxims, and protecting them "from being discussed or criticised."

The hopeless break then in his case, which I have cited as representative in a high degree, is of scepticism with supernaturalism. It is with this and with nothing else that all modern scepticism, so indiscriminately denounced by the so-called religious world, is at issue. It is this and nothing else, so far as I know, and as I firmly believe, that modern denial, so furiously scourged by theological whips, denies. In which case, both scepticism and denial have a sufficient and inevitable reason for being. Christianity itself, being a religion of supernaturalism, is in that character opposed by anti-Christianity, which is only a more aggressive form of denial. In short, supernaturalism itself is in part scepticism and denial; it is to a degree anti-religious, and, so far as truly a negation, as antagonism in other forms. It doubts the natural, denies the human, and opposes both. The quarrel then is really between supernatural negation and anti-supernatural negation; and, on either hand, the negation of the negation presupposes the eternal affirmation, which we call religion. Let these quarrellers have it out, as they will. Let those who can go for religion at all events.

Forms of unfaith are not absolute denials of true faith. They are only failures to grasp it. As for any one's denying the faith, it is impossible. No matter how he may deny a faith, nor how many so-called faiths he may deny; he cannot deny the faith. It is not in him to deny that. The faith! that goes deeper than creed and formula, deeper than anti-creed and anti-formula; so deep that there is no denial of it possible to a rational soul. This universe, the eternal truth of things, is something that cannot be denied. Men may try to deny it; may think they do; may be accused and abused for denying it; but they end with denial of nothing but their own denial, or attempt at denial. The truth of the Infinite endureth forever; and there is no heart and no tongue in the universe that can or will gainsay that.

RELIGION.

With a better comprehension of religion, as we said, the reconciliation comes. Scepticism is answered; denial is silenced; and on all hands these become vouchers for the true faith—the faith that is even in supernaturalism, and the most rabid anti-supernaturalism to some degree, as life is sometimes seen in the most hideous organisms. It is true, as pessimistic Byron said, that "even gods must yield, religions take their turn." But the hope and the assurance of man remain. Men may go about, as Tyndall says, wringing their hands over the loss of their ideals; but no ideals can be lost that are worth keeping. On the other hand, men may go about sneering at the very essence of religious faith; but it is something that cannot even be sneered out of the world. All upspringing of the soul to meet the infinite is worship; all faithful devotion to life's virtuous ends, however imperfectly figured to the understanding these, is worship, let men call it what they will, or refuse to call it what they may.

No one ever saw this more clearly than Mr. Mill himself. Had he dared or seen fit to declare for a religion of human ideals and duties, he had been no sceptic, though the self-styled religious world had still called him one. To those who represent such a religion to-day, it may well be a matter of regret that Mr. Mill did not, while pronouncing against supernaturalism, unequivocally affirm his belief in the natural religion which he incidentally described. His argument, some portions of which we have given, might be summed up in this: "Supernatural religion is not useful or needful to mankind. All the benefits which it confers, and many which it does not confer, can be obtained without it, and by other means. If these other means might be accepted as a religion, then mankind would have a faith about whose utility there could be no question." Did Mr. Mill err, in common with so many others, in deferring to the general habit of associating religion with supernaturalism? And might he not, had he possessed anything like spiritual conviction, have bravely asserted, what there is no doubt he saw, the identity of religion with the best human sentiments, endeavors, and highest relations? In nothing is it more true than in religion that, as Mr. Mill himself remarked, in the opening of his book on Political Economy, "It often happens that the universal belief of one age of mankind—a belief from which no one was, nor without an extraordinary effort of genius and courage could at that time be, free—becomes to a subsequent age so palpable an absurdity, that the only difficulty then is to imagine how such a thing can ever have appeared credible." As we have seen, it has already so happened with the notion that religion is itself of supernatural origin, and the mother of a supernatural morality, to such a degree that Mr. Mill would scarcely have anticipated the latest movement in religion if he had boldly proclaimed as the faith of the future that at whose essence he hints in more than one place in his essay. Is it possible that even he unconsciously bowed himself before the august power of "human opinion," to which he ascribes such a vast potency?

But in fact, he does venture to say what many to-day will heartily accept, that "the essence of religion is the strong and earnest direction of the emotions and desires towards an ideal object, recognized as of the highest excellence, and as rightfully paramount over all selfish objects of desire." Again: "The sense of unity with mankind, and a deep feeling for the general good, may be cultivated into a sentiment and a principle capable of filling every important function of religion, and itself justly entitled to the name." Had this come without so much hesitation and equivocal timidity, and been put with the positiveness of a real religious conviction, Mr. Mill, instead of being regarded rightfully on all hands as the prince of sceptics in his time, might have been hailed as the leader in the change of opinion out of which is coming the religion of the future.

Especially in these times—whose worst fault, perhaps, is that they are too much like other times—when superior power of thought is to such an extent engaged with superficial questions, is it needed to have general attention directed to the fundamental questions. It would seem that the human soul, the essence of religion, the humanities of life, are the things to talk about, instead of sectarian integrities and fellowships. It is too true that most talk is just now about matters that lie quite on the surface of thought. With every sort of argument and all degrees of vehemence men are striving over half-truths and palpable falsehoods, covering up truth with the slain victims of logic-chopping. We thought the age of logic-chopping had gone by, vanished with an effete scholasticism; the well-used hatchet, with its blunted edge, forever buried; but now the evil days are upon us again, the fatal hatchet is dug up once more, cleaned of earth and rust, sharpened on the grindstone of modern acumen, and resounds in all quarters from cleft and battered crowns.

Men, too, are talking about liberties as never before; a good theme, unless the talk is to little purpose, as it is when it runs to worst forms of individualism, which it too often does. When every man flies his flag, and plants his cannon, if not real metallic ordinance then some sham-log, to appraise all others of his intention to defend his particular freedom, we are moved to ask what then has become of the solidarity of the race and of the practical social duties of life? By all means I believe in freedom, and, when necessary, in fighting for it. But in a state of things where discussion degenerates into poor quibbling over the mere name, it may be surmised that the thing freedom is no longer in request.

If men have not much to boast, they certainly have not much to ask, in the way of freedom, who employ their wits in the effort to bring each other to a realizing sense of bondage. If my neighbor finds himself free enough to go about his business, why must I, because I should be a slave in his place, neglect my business in the needless and vain desire to make him feel that he is a slave? Let him alone; he will feel them when the chains begin to gall, and will free himself. When he gets ready, perhaps I can help him. Two parties who wrestle in the same hopeless manner with giant non-essentials, both sure to get thrown, are alike in need of being instructed as to the nature of discretion, and equally incapable of imparting anything to each other. Neither by driving one another from pillar to post in verbal encounters, can champions make a large place where the world may settle down to the secured enjoyment of liberty.

Until we give over saying to the world, whether from our well-furnished mansions of ecclesiasticism, or from the lonely moors of individualism, "Come live with us, else die as the fool dieth;" until we learn to say to all men, "See what firm impartial ground is under foot of you and of us, let us put our hand to its cultivation where we stand, instead of climbing into theologic roosts or on to individual stilts,—until the prevailing tone comes to something like this, we shall not be free from minor distractions to attend in earnest to our principal affairs.

But, let us remember that, under all present controversies about special liberties or special loyalties, under all diverting conflicts of consciences, perceptions, and obediences,—below all these lies the eternal fact, an infinite sea of truth, wherein all partial things, now so absorbing, shall finally fall and disappear. One by one must our little barks sink to this other sea, till truth shall be all in all, and we become one in it. Religion is of this ultimate fact the permanent expression.

But always we are confronted with monstrous difficulties and confusions concerning the nature of this expression. Chaotic notions of religion; identification of it with error and absurdity; infinite irreconcilable contradictions,—how shall we extricate ourselves or it from these, so as to see it in its simple distinctness?

To bring this chaos into order must come a more informing voice than the former ages have uttered. Men have spoken heretofore, but with their individual articulation; prophets have spoken, but always with some limiting dialect; priests have spoken, but in the interest of their craft; powers and principalities, thrones have spoken; things past have spoken, things present still speak, but the things to come must speak yet; and for them remains the divine obligation and the unprecedented glory of proclaiming the hitherto undelivered word of humanity, the message of the mind, the intimations of the heart, deep calling unto deep and answering again.

Whoever will tell the truth of the matter must speak entirely from his humanity, not from his individuality, not from any individuality. The Holy Ghost speaks but one language. Men fancy that it is the language of their own nation, Hebrew or whatever; or the language of their own religion, Christian, or some other; or the language of their own inarticulate minds; and hence the confusion of tongues among us. But it is now and evermore the language of the universal soul of things, which only the soul can understand and repeat. Shall we not maintain this against all special pleading, whether in the name of creed or anti-creed?

And while one side claims to hold up a mirror to truth, which another calls a mill-stone; while disputants flounder and stumble over ifs, buts, and notwithstanding, break their arguments over conjunctions that connect nothing, and miss all good of substantives or substance,—let us be happy, though we must keep silence, so long as we have assurance of mind concerning the religion which can stay in this world, because it belongs here; was never dreamed, revealed, imported, manufactured, conjured, missionated, or logicized into the world; but from of old was here with virtue, intelligence, and order, with which, in which, and through which it still abides and will abide forever.

The sooner we all plant ourselves, away from all partial positions, upon the universal ground of simple religion—I even like it better without the prefix “free,” which is suggestive of bondage somewhere—and the sooner we get our preaching and practice conformed to this, the better it will be for the now and for the hereafter.

Meanwhile let us use, if we can, with all our analysis, a grand synthesis; find the synthetic chord which binds together all the members of truth in one indestructible whole. Let us look for spiritual identities. Let us seek for the permanent element in religion; and, if we go deep enough, we shall find it everywhere, under all transient elements. “See deep enough, and you see musically,” says Carlyle. See deep enough, and you see religiously, we may say with equal truth. Philosophy and morality blend in harmony with spiritual insight and devotion, to make the soul’s perfect faith and knowledge and worship.

Religion, as truly as physical force, is persistent, and under all changes one and the same. It is everywhere the “Thou shalt” to the soul, and its instant fulfillment. “The best feature of our present life,” says that very religious sceptic already so often quoted, Mr. Mill, is, “improbability by our own efforts.” “The essence of all religion,” says Mr. Emerson, “is the sentiment of virtue.” Let us not discredit our sentiments any more than our knowledges. Because we scientifically look more without, let us not therefore look less religiously within, for truth and fact. In the noble words of Prof. Newman, “Let us not deal more slightly with the testimony of the soul than with that of the touch or the taste.” Let us have, as a younger writer says, “intuition and experience.”

By such means shall we arrive at a religion which needs neither priest-craft nor state-craft, nor will permit either. By such means shall we come to fulfillment of that true saying: “Neither in this mountain, nor at Jerusalem”—not in any fixed place—shall the true worshipper worship, but only “in spirit and in truth.”

“Nor fix on fond abodes to circumscribe thy prayer.”

Nor will it be in any special name that we shall feel constrained to worship.

“Names, and sects, and parties fall;
Thou, our God, art all in all.”

Nor shall we yet commit that error of working as though to that end we had come into the world, against a mere name or system rather than for the essential thing. We shall be enlightened enough to know that what is wrong or what is partial will pass away, and that by the very being partial or wrong is its doom foregone. As Miss Aikin wrote to Dr. Channing, concerning French “Infidels”: “They do not write against Christianity, I remarked to one who knew Paris. ‘No, they think that’s settled; they do not write against Jupiter!’”

Those French infidels were wiser than some among us.

Religion has survived all the evils, as well those in its own organization as those without, which have infested it; those of superstitions, hierarchies, pope-doms and priestcrafts, and those of scorn, false science, and false criticism. It ever comes uppermost, as it is ever undermost, asserting itself as the master-force in human affairs. Doubtless it will do and be the same hereafter; for “What is excellent, as God lives, is permanent.”

BISHOP WHATELY illustrated a certain form of attack with this question: “Yes or no—have you stopped beating your father?”

PROSPERITY AND PROGRESS OF JAPAN.

The census of the Japanese Empire for the fifth year of Meiji, the 2532d year from the accession of Jimmu Tenno (that is to say A. D. 1872, in our calendar), has just been published. It is, so far as known, the first official census of the empire ever taken; and that fact itself reveals the progress which Western ideas are making in the East, while the census establishes the fact that Japan is in a condition of enviable prosperity. How great that prosperity is can best be shown by a comparison between the Japanese census of 1872, and the United States census of 1870.

The arrangement of the Japanese census is somewhat different from that of ours, and, while much less explicit, is probably more methodical. The political division of the empire is into Fu and Ken (cities and townships), there being three of the former and seventy-two of the latter recognized, besides one colony. The geographical divisions embrace 1 colony, 3 Fu, 1 Han (tributary, Loo-Choo), 72 Ken, 86 provinces, 717 Kori, or departments; 6862 Ku, or city parishes; 70,443 Mura, or rural parishes, and 12,535 towns.

The total population of Japan is 33,110,825, or about 5,000,000 less than that of the United States. Of these, 9,056,308 are under fourteen years of age, against 15,000,000 of the same years in the United States; showing a much larger proportion of births here, and a juvenile population of thirty-nine per cent. of the whole, against only twenty-seven per cent. for Japan. Between the ages of twenty and forty there are for both the United States and Japan thirty per cent. of the population surviving; but between forty and sixty the population of the United States is only 5,763,165, while that of Japan is 7,355,000; showing a survival of over twenty-two per cent. for Japan, against fifteen per cent. for the United States. At eighty, Japan has 75,530 men and 118,248 women still living, a survival of six per cent.; while the United States has only 72,045 men and 82,368 women, a little over four per cent. This shows a less fecundity, but better health and greater longevity in the Japanese.

The population of Japan is divided into princes, nobles, higher and lower grades of armed class, priests, and Shinto officials, and common people. The nobility and gentry aggregate about 2,000,000, the priestly class about 300,000. The commonalty, about 30,800,000 strong, are notoriously thrifty, and reflect upon our people by their superior industry; 19,000,000 persons being set down as having occupations in Japan, against 12,500,000 in the United States. Of these 10,563,357 are males, 8,447,198 females; while in this country 10,669,635 men have occupations against no more than 1,836,288 women. That this difference in labor-forces tells upon the respective industrial conditions of the two countries there can be no doubt. Japan is a country without machinery, without commerce, and without capital, yet she maintains herself, and an onerous feudal system, and an oppressive royalty, without pauperism and without famine. Of the population, 14,870,426 are agriculturalists, against less than 6,000,000 here. The artisans number 701,416, and the “merchants” (tradesmen), 1,309,191.

Proofs of the prosperity of the people are found in the fact that they have 7,107,841 houses to live in, a house for every 4.7 persons, against 7,042,833 houses in the United States, or one for every 5.4 persons. There are 89,914 Buddhist temples, and 128,123 Shinto shrines, ministered to by 225,000 priests, nuns and officials. This shows a greater proclivity to worship than exists in the United States, where there are only 63,000 churches and 43,874 clergymen. The statistics of Japan show that there are 101,587 persons crippled, blind, deaf and dumb, etc.; of deaf and dumb, blind, insane and idiotic, the United States has 98,484, and 116,102 paupers besides. Our prisons in 1870 contained 32,901 convicts; Japan in 1872 had in prison in penal settlements at hard labor a total of 6464 criminals. It is not proper, however, to compare our criminal statistics with those of Japan. There the hari-kari and the headsman’s axe make short work with a large number of persons whom we, with superior humanity, imprison, pardon, and frequently send to Congress.

The foreign trade of the treaty ports of Japan in 1873 amounted to $50,322,539 in gold, and Japan showed her superiority to us in sweetness and light by collecting only a little over $1,000,000 duties upon $29,105,057 imports. The same goods imported into New York would have been taxed $12,000,000. Upon this large importation the warehouse rents, entrance and clearance fees, fines, penalties, and miscellaneous charges were only $47,276, all told; or less than .002 per cent. against port charges here at least a hundred times as great.

The silk trade of Japan seems destined to attain a great and sudden importance. While the silk export of China has fallen off, that of Japan has kept very steady. In spite of the decline of business, and the injury which fashion has temporarily inflicted upon the silk trade, Japan exported last year (June, 1873, to May 31, 1874) 910 bales of waste, and 13,678 bales of raw silk, besides 6784 cases of silk-worm eggs. The Chinese silk trade is imperilled by the dishonest practices of Chinese producers and merchants, by careless and bad reeling, and false packing. These abuses are so great that the Lyons Silk Association and the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce repeatedly warned the Chinese against them, but without effect. The result has been “what was predicted, that China silk has fallen in value very heavily, and to a far greater extent than that of other countries. The increasing production of silk has caused a fall of 10 to 15 per cent. on well-reeled descriptions, such as those of Europe and Japan; but China silk, instead of declining in the same proportion, has fallen in value 25 to 40 per cent.” It is considered as an established fact that the improvements now being generally adopted in Japan will drive the Shanghai re-reeled silk entirely out of the market. As Shanghai ships annually between 50,000 and 60,000 bales of raw silk, or nearly 7,000,000 pounds, worth $5 to $6 per pound, the importance of this accession may well be imagined.—N. Y. World.

THE FIRST impression that a stranger gets, on entering Chicago, is that a majority of the people must have been born with “black eyes”; but a little greater familiarity teaches him that they are the result of frequent religious controversies.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

IN MEMORIAM.

A tender face, most like a flower
Whose eyes of gentian blue
Looked up to us from hour to hour,
So dear the baby grew!

And with him grew all thoughts that make
Fond hearts both strong and brave;
Yet thought we not that Life could break
The promise that it gave.

A low, green mound, whose springing grass
Is wet with rain and tears;
A hope, whose goal has onward passed
Beyond these earthly years.

Our hearts by grief and doubt are torn,
Both Life and he so sweet!
So dear! And shall another morn
Our happy spirits greet?

What comfort brings unreasoning faith
Beside the couch of Death?
No other answer Sorrow hath;
“He lies, devoid of breath!”

Yet rather trust the Power who brings
The seasons hour by hour,
That sometime, moved by unknown springs,
Our bud shall bloom a flower,—

Somewhere, at length, the flower, the fruit
Of Life without an end:
We trust the Love whose hidden root
We do not comprehend.

SENECA, Mo. MAGGIE STEWART SIBLEY.

THE CITY OF GOD.

SUNG AT THE FREE RELIGIOUS FESTIVAL, MAY 29, 1875.

BY MRS. D. H. CLARK.

We are told of a City whose marvellous day
Hath no need of the beams of the sun,
For the clearness of opal sheds light on its way,
And the shadows of gloom are unknown.

Not its amethyst, beryl, nor chalcedon wall
Hath more honor than jasper or sard,—
In that fairer New Salem is entrance for all
Whose brows with its seal have been starred.

Shall the beautiful essence of meaning be lost?
Can we fail its bright clue to unfold?
Ah, not one gate, nor twelve, for the entering host
Which those limitless mansions may hold!

But that City of vision, that realm of the air,
Lifts no burden of tears from the earth:
If the perfume of effort blend not with our prayer,
‘Tis faint plea for humanity’s worth.

There are weary and homeless to shelter and feed,
There are wrongs to set right at our door;
And love’s deed, prompt and fruitful, though slender the creed,
Shall outweigh all the Rabbins’ deep lore.

Thus, eternally founded in Truth, shall arise,
Amid marts and the toiling of men,
A more beautiful City,—a Salem that lies
In wisdom and healing of pain.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 19.

H. S. Bacon, $3.20; N. Paine, $3.20; A. B. Tuttle, $3; John Mead, $3.20; C. W. Seaver, $3.20; Anna T. Wood, $3.20; J. O. King, $3.20; Mrs. O. Gillett, $3.20; L. F. C. Garvin, $3; W. G. Whitmore, 15 cents; R. A. McKenzie, 25 cents; Jas. C. Smith, $3; Francis Kelsey, $1.50; Wm. M. Mackay, 50 cents; R. Scales, 10 cents; Lewis Boutelle, $3.20; T. L. Mann, $1.50; D. D. Lum, $3.20; Calvin Griswold, $3.20; M. T. Jones, 25 cents; S. J. Logan, $3; J. Gist, 20 cents; J. M. P. Bachelder, $4.40; H. A. Mayer, $3.20; S. B. Brillhart, $3.20; W. L. Garrison, Jr., $3.20; John G. Walker, $3.20; B. F. Underwood, $3.20; C. F. Wellington, $2; L. T. Ives, $20; David Remington, $2; F. A. Angell, $1; Cash, $1.03; M. G. Gage, $2.50; Cash, 80 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 24, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

THE Fourth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association was held according to announcement at Toledo, Ohio, on the fifth of June. The old board of directors was reelected, and other business transacted. A report of the meeting will be sent in due time to the stockholders. It was very pleasant to meet old friends once more, and to find that the thrifty Lake city is growing and prospering in spite of the dull times.

BEING so unwise, last week, as to notice an anonymous note written on a memorandum blank bearing the imprint of the Nation, I have been condignly punished therefor by receiving, this week, another note of the same character and with the same imprint,—both in reference to my first allusion to Mr. Godkin. If the editors of the Nation, be they who they may, wish me to take any further notice of this matter, they will please address me a responsible communication; for THE INDEX office is in possession of a waste-basket which is the repository of all anonymous letters. A. W. S.

THESE excellent principles are a part of the platform of the Republican party in Ohio, and, if carried out faithfully, would make the Liberal League in that State quite superfluous:—

Fourth—We stand by free education, our public school system, the taxation of all for its support, and no division of the school fund.

Fifth—Under our republican system of government there should be no connection, direct or indirect, between the Church and State, and we oppose all legislation in the interest of any sect. Upon this subject we should not fail to profit by the experience of foreign governments, where the efforts of the Church to control the State constitute an evil of great magnitude, and endanger the power and prosperity of the people.

A FRIEND of the Liberal League writes as follows from New Orleans: "I am disappointed in my expectations regarding assistance from the educated blacks. Those not elected to office have little influence, and those in office cater to the people they represent, trying to keep in their good favor. As a result, the blacks in their religion follow the lead of their half-educated preachers, who are steeped in superstition. I find nearly every colored official attends the popular religious churches of the day. I had hoped to get subscribers to THE INDEX from some of them. But, alas, their political education has well-nigh ruined them; they would sooner give Brother Jones' church one hundred dollars, and get their names in the papers and before their constituents, than give three dollars for THE INDEX; and yet they know that Christianity was the backbone of slavery."

REV. S. P. PUTNAM, who has so manfully severed his connection with the Christian Church, and thrown himself boldly on the world with a noble confidence that the truth he has to utter will be heard as hospitably and received as gladly as if he still occupied the vantage-ground of the Christian pulpit, has returned to the West to work on in the cause for which he has made a greater sacrifice than sneering sectarians are willing to admit. With all our heart (and we have a bit of that, too, even if we do believe in ideas as supremely important) we bid him good-speed, and commend him most sincerely to the kind offices of all with whom THE INDEX finds a welcome. It would be a shame if a young man so earnest and so brave, so cheery and so full of enthusiasm for all that is fair and free, should be driven from the field because he refuses to wear longer the yoke of the sects. He has a live word to speak; may it be heard and helped by the live men and women of the mighty West!

THE BIBLE AS A SCHOOL BOOK.

The Bible is used in the public schools; and its use is defended by the Catholics, the Protestants, and a number of the most distinguished Radicals. As an advocate of the principle of absolute secularism in all political institutions, and in all educational institutions which are supported by general taxation, we are obliged to dissent from the views of these three parties, and for reasons which we will now succinctly state. First let us inquire what the use of the Bible means, as thus defended on widely different grounds.

The Catholics desire that the Bible should be used in the public schools in religious worship and instruction, as a book containing a Divine Revelation. But they desire it to be used there only as interpreted by their own catechism, taught by their own priests and teachers. The Church, on the Catholic theory, is the sole authorized interpreter of the Bible; and the use of the Bible in the public schools, if interpreted exclusively by Catholic priests and Catholic teachers, would mean the supreme dominion of the Catholic Church over our educational institutions, and to that extent the political recognition of Roman Catholicism as the established religion of the State.

The Protestants desire that the Bible should be used in the public schools in religious worship, also as a book containing a Divine Revelation. If they were more powerful, they would seek to supplement this use of the Bible, as formerly, by dogmatic instruction based upon it and their own catechisms; but, on account of the warring sects into which Protestantism is split, they are obliged to content themselves with Bible-reading "without note or comment," which is at once a recognition of the divine authority of the Bible and of the right of private judgment as its sole interpreter. This is the use of the Bible now almost everywhere maintained in the public schools; and it means the supreme dominion of the Protestant churches over our educational institutions, and to that extent the political recognition of Protestantism as the established religion of the State.

Many Radicals desire that the Bible should be used in the public schools, simply as a text-book. In the very last number of THE INDEX, this was the view expressed by Mr. Frothingham, Mr. Stevens, and Col. Higginson. Mr. Frothingham, in a special article on this subject, objected to the total exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, because, as he said, "the Bible is the great English classic, and should serve for English students the same uses that the Greek and Roman masterpieces serve for students of the dead tongues." Mr. Stevens approved Mr. Frothingham's view of the matter as "an admirable suggestion as to the rational use of the Bible in our public schools." The report of Col. Higginson's address to the Radical Club, accepted by himself as accurate, represents him as advancing contradictory opinions on the subject, stating on the one hand that he "gave his voice in favor of absolute secularization of the schools," and on the other hand that he "took ground against the entire exclusion of the Bible from the schools," which he held should "be admitted as a text-book in English literature and in ancient history."

Now we venture to say that these eminent gentlemen do not seem to have considered all the bearings of the policy they recommend. Let us suppose that they were able to have their own way, to discontinue the use of the Bible in the schools as a book of worship containing a Divine Revelation, and to permit its use only as a text-book in literature or history: what would be the meaning of this policy? Plainly, that the Radicals had succeeded in securing supreme dominion over our educational institutions, and to this extent the political recognition of Radicalism as the established religion of the State. There is not a sincere Catholic or Evangelical Protestant in the land who would not be grievously oppressed in conscience and outraged in feeling, at seeing the book which he considers the Word of God cast down by State authority from this lofty pinnacle, and degraded to the mere rank of primers and spelling-books, in schools which he is taxed to support by the State which is all the while professing to protect the equal religious rights of all. To put the Bible to such a use in the public schools as would be a direct denial of its claims to be a Divine Revelation,—an avowed attempt to "destroy completely the power it has over the imagination" and "disarm it of all strength for mischief" by means of this denial,—would be to flaunt the flag of so-called "infidelity" in the faces of all the Christians in the nation, and to tax them all to keep it flying. The purpose of these gentlemen is doubtless generous and kind; they mean to pay public respect to the Bible by not insisting on its total exclusion from the schools. But they apparently fail to see that they propose to retain it on terms which are the greatest possible insult to the sincere faith of Christian believers, and that their intended generosity is in fact harshness, cruelty, and intolerable oppression. To use the Bible as a mere historical or literary text-book, on a level with all other school-books, perfectly suits their own individual feelings and opinions; but can they not put themselves in the place of the earnest Catholic or Protestant, and perceive how his very soul must shrink from such "profanation" and "blasphemy"? Not until every citizen has become a Radical will such a policy as is proposed be anything else than tyranny, exactly as gross and grinding as that of which the Protestants are now guilty because they have the power, or that of which the Catholics will be guilty if ever they get the power. We have no more right than they to stamp our private opinions of the Bible on the public school system; we must acquire that self-restraint which dictates to Radicals, as well as to Catholics or Protestants, to let that system alone, on peril of destroying the republic; we must learn to understand more thoroughly what the separation of Church and State, by which this nation must stand or fall, really demands. No alternative is left but to protest against the proposal to use the public school system for the propagandism of any views whatever respecting the Bible.

It is true that Mr. Frothingham intimates that the employment of the Bible as a text-book is not likely to be approved of "by any Christian community, within any assignable period of time." But the practical question concerns the present time: what shall be done now? If we understand him, he would at present either leave the Bible in use as a book of Divine Revelation, or else have it used as a literary text-book; for otherwise he would certainly favor the proposition for its immediate total exclusion, which he seemingly criticises as extreme. We agree with him that the time may come, nay, will come, when the Bible can properly be used in the public schools as a text-book—we should say of mythology rather than of literature or of history. But that time is too remote to be now considered; and meanwhile, so long as a single tax-payer believes in the Bible as the Word of God, it ought to be totally excluded from the public schools.

For nothing less than that total exclusion is what the "absolute secularization of the schools" must mean. To use the Bible merely as a text-book would be to use it as the symbol of the political supremacy of religious rationalism. The principle of secular government condemns that supremacy just as much as it condemns the supremacy of Catholicism or Protestantism. The secular idea requires that, just so long as the Bible is the subject of religious controversy among living sects or parties, so long it shall be totally excluded from the public schools; on the ground that the schools are supported by taxation of all alike, and should be employed by no party for purposes of religious propagandism. No other principle than this is either just, tolerant, or kind; and justice, toleration, and kindness alike demand its rigorously logical application. It leaves the controversy touching the Bible to rage elsewhere without interference; but in the school-room, which is devoted simply to the teaching of such things as all citizens, Catholic, Protestant, or Radical, need to learn, it is an offence against equal rights to introduce that controversy at all, much more to decide it in favor of any one of the conflicting parties. There is more true generosity and "breadth of sympathy" towards all classes of citizens, and more true reverence for whatever is good and noble in the Bible, in the "Demands of Liberalism," than in any of the substitutes for them which have been or can be devised. Exact universal justice is the loftiest and tenderest kindness towards all; and it is misrepresentation itself to stigmatize as adoption of the "method of antagonism" the efforts of those who would establish kindness through justice by seeking to complete consistently the now partial separation of Church and State. That Catholics and Protestants should be warped from justice by their faith in the Divine authority of the Bible and the Church, is no matter for surprise; but the future historian of religious progress in this century will marvel that even an excess of generous sympathy should blur in Radical eyes the clear lines of equity drawn by the principle of absolute secularism in politics and education. For centuries, probably, the just use of the Bible as a public school text-book will be impossible; and meanwhile its total exclusion from the schools is the only method of establishing even-handed justice, and therefore the highest and purest kindness, among Christians and non-Christians of all grades of belief or disbelief.

But we are very glad to see this discussion opened, and trust it will not be dropped until the truth is made clear to all eyes. As a help to this discussion, the following extract from the Rochester Democrat of June 8 is an interesting and cheering indication of progress in the right direction, the resolution of the Board of Education here recorded having been passed by a vote of twelve to four:—

"We are proud of the record which this locality is making upon questions connected with the relations of Church and State. Last fall the Board of Supervisors passed strong resolutions in favor of taxation of church property, upon the same basis with other property. Shortly afterwards the Democrat and Chronicle took occasion to obtain the opinions of leading clergymen of the city in regard to the propriety of reading the Bible in the public schools, and, to its surprise, it must be confessed, found them nearly unanimous in favor of a discontinuance of the practice as unnecessary as an exercise, and anti-democratic as a principle. And now we have the gratifying news to communicate that the Board of Education last evening adopted the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That all religious exercises of any nature be prohibited in the public schools."

"Not less gratifying is the manner of the passage of the resolution than is its substance. It was introduced by a member of the board, an Israelite in religion, and it met with a cordial reception. Members of various theological views assented to its justice; and it finally received a nearly unanimous vote. The Board of Education has thus conformed its regulations to the enlightened views of the functions of our common school system, and has distinctly declared itself in favor of the American idea of secular education by the State. It need have no fear that its action will not be overwhelmingly indorsed by public sentiment. Whatever may be opinions elsewhere entertained, Rochester is sound upon this issue. The pulpit and the press have clearly enunciated themselves. Laymen, of all creeds, have announced themselves as upholding the principle which now has authoritative expression. The Board of Education but represents the popular will—a will which everywhere is conquering, as the thought which inspires it becomes more and more dominant. Soon will all the schools in the State be conducted in harmony with the democratic principle, and theantage ground be reached from which all assaults upon them can be successfully resisted. They will then be neither more nor less godless than they now are—their moral standards will not be lowered—but they will rest securely upon their basal idea and thus truly subserve the purposes of their being."

RECONSIDERATION.

Since our return from the West, we have very carefully reconsidered our objections to the resolution of the Free Religious Association, responding to the resolution of sympathy sent to it by the Western Unitarian Conference. The criticisms on this action which we expressed in our editorial of June 3 seem to us now hasty and not altogether sound; and, while we cannot confess to any "ragged edge" emotions in consequence of an honest mistake, we do confess to a great sense of relief at no longer feeling constrained to differ from our brother-members of the Association on an important point of practical action. We desire to recall those criticisms now, and to say frankly that we committed a mistake in making them. This was partly due to imperfect recollection of the wording of the two resolutions, which we had heard, but had had no opportunity of reading, and partly to the press of preparation for a long journey, which rendered it impossible to wait for a copy of them from the Secretary. It would have been wiser, if that course had occurred to us, to postpone all criticism till our return; but it is distressingly easy not to be wise, and the report we were making of the Annual Meeting seemed to necessitate notice of those resolutions. In the light of Mr. Potter's admirable article of June 10 and a private letter on the same subject (to which it is a great pleasure to acknowledge our indebtedness), it has become evident that a somewhat different view of the whole matter should in justice be taken and avowed in these columns.

The case seems to stand thus. The Western Conference, a Christian body, expressed its "heartly sympathy" for the Free Religious Association in its "endeavors to promote the cause of truth and religious liberty." Such action by a Christian organization, in our view, is totally inconsistent with the Christianity it professes; and nothing can now render the position of the Conference consistent except the explicit renunciation of the Christian connection. If, as we believe, Christianity and "religious liberty" are utterly irreconcilable, the Conference has only planted itself on both sides of a contradiction. But we are now satisfied that the Free Religious Association may forbear to take any notice of this inconsistency in the case of an organization as well as in the case of an individual. No one has been more strenuous than we in maintaining that the Association asks no question concerning the private opinions of its members, or the mode in which many of them individually reconcile their membership in it with their retention of the Christian connection; if they have enough sympathy with the Association to join it, the latter welcomes them without the least inquisition into their private beliefs or disbeliefs. It may with pertinence be asked: Why should not the same principle apply to such organizations as may become conscious of sympathy with the Association? Why should they be required to be consistent in offering such sympathy? Why not accept and reciprocate it as a fact, without inquiring whether it is logically consistent with other professions or sympathies on their part?

There is sufficient force in this view of the case to modify materially the opinion we expressed. The analogy between the individual members of the Association and the nominally Christian organizations which may choose to declare themselves in sympathy with it, although not completely satisfactory, is yet strong enough to make us withdraw our objections to the vote of acceptance. If a majority of the Association can honestly reciprocate the sympathy of a Christian organization as such, there is no cause to object, when, as in this case, the sympathy offered and accepted is expressly confined to "endeavors to promote the cause of truth and religious liberty." Mr. Potter is right, when he says: "Two religious bodies may interchange expressions of sympathy on certain points, though widely differing on other points." The wording of the two resolutions in question is such as to permit naturally this construction of them, though it seemed otherwise as we heard them read; and, since the Free Religious Association is thus not really committed to the Christianity of the Conference, we waive our objections to the vote of acceptance, and dismiss the purpose of bringing up the matter again next year.

At the same time, it is necessary to say that our own negative vote on the resolution of acceptance would not have been changed by these considerations. Others may accept such dubious sympathy, going out to Christianity and "religious liberty" at the same time, but we cannot. We must unreservedly say that we should respect the Western Conference more, and sympathize with it more, if it stuck consistently either to its Christianity or to its "liberty." This is true of the organization as such, which would command respect in proportion to the clearness and coherence of its organic principles and the consistency with which it followed them; though it is not true of the individual members, who are something better than Christians, being men, and therefore entitled to all the more personal respect when obedience to their humanity makes them disobedient to their Christianity. Accepting and reciprocating, consequently, the sympathy in the pursuit of "truth and religious liberty" which these forward-faced men personally entertain for the Free Religious Association, we could not do the same to the organized Conference, which neutralizes its sympathy by still occupying the incompatible ground of Christianity; just as we could not value very much the sympathy of the Russian empire, if it tendered its congratulations to the United States on the success with which they resisted despotism a century ago. "How about Poland?" would rise involuntarily to our lips, just as "How about Unitarian Radicalism?" rises in the present instance. If the vote of the Conference means much, it will follow it up by other votes meaning still more; and when its position is no longer ambiguous, but thoroughly self-consistent in devotion to freedom, the sympathy it tenders will be welcomed without even one dissenting voice.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Ecclesiastics are just now embroiled in a pretty quarrel upon a question of their exclusive right to the title of "Reverend." The first act in the drama is now closed by the judgment of the Chancellor of the Diocese of Lincoln. The facts of the case, no doubt, you have already heard; but as some of your readers may not be acquainted with them I will briefly state them.

The little daughter of a Wesleyan minister died, and was buried in the parish churchyard of Owston Ferry, and her father desired very naturally to put up a memorial tablet. He worded the inscription thus:—

"Daughter of
The Reverend Henry Keet,
Wesleyan Minister."

The vicar of the parish refused to allow the tablet to be erected unless the word "Reverend" was struck out.

On a loud and indignant complaint being made, through the press, against the vicar for his unkindness and bigotry, he appealed to his diocesan, the Bishop of Lincoln; who entirely supported him in what he had done, and upheld him in his refusal of the Wesleyan minister's request.

Mr. Keet then appealed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who answered him very kindly, saying that he could not interfere, and addressing him as "the Reverend" Henry Keet. Action was now taken in the consistory Court of Lincoln, and to my amazement the chancellor has given judgment for the vicar and against the Wesleyan minister. The chief ground being that Mr. Keet belonged to a schismatic body, was not in holy orders, and that to allow such an inscription would be tantamount to a recognition by the Church of what she distinctly condemned. From this judgment Mr. Keet has appealed to the Court of Arches, after which the case will probably wend its slow course to the Privy Council for final decision. Meanwhile we may draw certain inferences from the case which is full of warning:—

1. How comes it that any objection to allow Mr. Keet the title of "Reverend" was ever felt at all?

It is not pretended that the title is a scriptural one, or enjoined by church authority, or by any canon law. It is admitted to be mere custom for clergy to be so styled; and not only custom, but modern custom,—not long ago the clergy being addressed as "Sir," a title now only given to baronets and knights and some legal functionaries. It is therefore absurd to object to follow the universal custom of modern times (which gives the title of reverend to all ministers of religion of every denomination), when it is only on the ground of custom that clergymen themselves are so styled.

The objection is really made through nothing but the most petty jealousy; the Vicar of Owston Ferry wanting to create a distinction which did not previously exist, in order to magnify himself and those ministers who belong to his own particular sect of the Christian Church.

2. Next, it is assumed that the genuine clerical article must have been duly ordained by a bishop; and that, without such regular ordination, men have no right to teach or preach, and are in fact nothing but clerical impostors, having no "authority from Christ to speak in his name."

Now this very Vicar of Owston Ferry, while refusing to allow Mr. Keet to style himself "Reverend," would not only call me so, but would deem it a violation of his own church principles to do otherwise. For I have never been excommunicated, or "unfrocked," or deprived of my "holy orders," even though I am the most determined heretic, and snap my fingers at the absurdity of Episcopal ordination. Poor Mr. Keet agrees with nearly all the creed of the vicar—certainly in all essentials—and yet is treated with gross discourtesy and unkindness, simply because he was not "regularly ordained."

You in America seem not to care for any titles; and yet this one of "Reverend" is in common use in your country. Why is this? I confess I am curious to know how the titles of "Lord" and "Duke" and "Sir," etc., should be repudiated, while "Reverend" and "Mr." and "Captain" and "Colonel," etc., should be retained. As an Englishman, I see no objection to titles, and there are many grounds on which they can be defended; though like everything else they may be perverted or made too much of, yet their use works well in the main. So the title of "Reverend" seems to me to be useful and good, as that of "Colonel" or "Doctor," to indicate what a minister's occupation is. You may just as well repudiate them all, as any one of them. But because I would admit the title of "Reverend," I would apply it indiscriminately to the clergy and ministers of every church and every sect. To apply it exclusively to one is equivalent to calling all the rest "quacks"; is to assume in the most impudent manner that no one is right but ourselves; that there is a virtue in the fingers of bishops, by which a man may be endowed with spiritual or supernatural powers.

If the High Church party, with the Bishop of Lincoln to back them, succeed in establishing their exclusive right to this title in law, they will find nothing in all they have done for years past has been so damaging to their own interests, so likely to rouse resentment and indignant opposition to their claims.

But such a success is about the last thing probable from the court of final appeal. Whatever blunders that court may make on theological and even legal matters, it takes good care to make its decisions accord with popular feeling. This it is sure to do in such a delicate question as that which the Reverend Mr. Keet has raised; and I shall be utterly astounded if he does not easily obtain a verdict in his favor from the supreme court of final appeal.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., June 5, 1875.

Communications.

REGARDING GRASSHOPPERS, FASTING AND PRAYER.

"We demand that the appointment, by 'the President of the United States, or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.'—Demands of Liberalism.

Probably no better illustration of the wisdom of the above requirement, as one of the steps towards a complete separation of Church and State, could be found than in the late proclamation of the Governor of Missouri.

It is to the credit of the secular press that they have not let the matter pass without a vigorous protest, as the following article from the St. Louis Globe of June 3 will attest:—

"It is one of the evil effects of that lack of contradiction which surrounds clerical teaching that, when the clergy step down into the arena of contradiction and discussion, they find themselves in a strange world; and, handling strange weapons, do sometimes damage their adversaries, but invariably damage themselves,—they place themselves at a disadvantage and do injustice to their cause, which, under more judicious advocacy, would show to better advantage. This oft-repeated truth is illustrated afresh by the Christian Advocate, which takes 'the secular papers' to task for having spoken 'flippantly, not to say sneeringly, of the Governor's proclamation, and equally so, at least indirectly, of the idea of prayer for the removal of such calamities as those referred to'—to wit: grasshoppers.

"Hereupon the Christian Advocate intimates that this is 'a sneer at our holy religion.' If the Governor's proclamation is a part of anybody's holy religion, it is certainly a sneer at that religion to sneer at the proclamation; but we beg to assure the Christian Advocate that, in the selection of this new article of faith, it has neither the warrant of Scripture nor the consent of its subscribers. And if its position is true, and if a Governor's proclamation, either against grasshoppers or any other infliction, is to become, either ipso facto or by the consent of any religious body, a part of the religion of that body, then either the body or the Governor ought to be abolished. The objections to a union and incorporation of Church and State have been so strong that they have hardly seemed to need new reinforcement, but it is certainly a novel position and a novel objection when the identification of Church and State is so complete that one cannot criticise a silly message as it deserves without being told that it is an insult to somebody's holy religion.

"Here we can afford to let the Christian Advocate drift out of notice, and further criticise the Governor's message, on the ground that, no matter what may be the status of the prayer question, or the efficacy of the prayer remedy, the purely civil Governor of the State is, under no circumstances, the proper authority to solve the question, or to apply the remedy. If one Governor, by right of his office, shall tell us when to pray or what to pray for, then another Governor may, by right of his office, tell us when we shall not pray, and shall recommend to us the things that we shall not pray for. This would be only carrying out the principles of the Christian Advocate, yet we should doubtless find the Advocate protesting quite as zealously against such an irruption of the executive into the domain of religion, as it now protests against objection being made to an irruption of the very same kind,—a usurpation of functions not provided for in the Constitution, nor sanctioned by any of its provisions.

"We trust our position is so clear that there is no possibility of its being misunderstood, even by a clerical journalist. As one of the secular papers which have spoken flippantly, not to say sneeringly, against the proclamation, we feel free to say that we do not believe that the locust plague is one of those afflictions against which it is reasonable to pray; at the same time we are fully aware that many devout and conscientious Christians differ from us, and, in their daily habit of lifting up their hearts to God and referring all things to his will, they often are moved to pray for his direct interposition to remove these causes of human misery. But with these good people we have neither discussion nor conflict; on the contrary, they would be the first to agree with us in the assertion that the Governor is not the proper person to set them to praying by proclamation; and that in assuming a religious authority, as he has done, he has intruded into a domain where he is not wanted. He is not only the Governor of those who believe in the direct efficacy of prayer, he is the Governor alike of the just and of the unjust. The Protestant and the Jew, the Catholic and the Infidel alike recognize him as Governor, and claim an equal right in his official acts; and they claim also an equal right to protest against his carrying out, in this cosmopolitan principle, the religious observances which are fitted only for the homogeneous little communities of the early Colonial days."

The sequel, however, shows up that unfortunate proclamation in a still more ridiculous light. This the Springfield Republican refers to, calling the Governor's attention to the report of Prof. Riley, State entomologist of Missouri, and to the Professor's prediction.

The Republican's article is as follows:—

"W. M. Grosvenor writes from St. Louis to the New York Tribune that the grasshoppers are Rocky Mountain locusts, whose home is on the high and dry plains; and that the insect which appears this spring in Missouri is merely the hatching out of the eggs deposited last year. Fortunately the stock is not improved by transfer to a moist climate; but, on the contrary, thousands of eggs have been rotted by the spring rains, and thousands of insects have perished and are perishing by the same cause. The insects hatched are wingless for the first forty days, and hence their progress about the country is very slow; and long before the forty days are over they will all have perished. There is a parasite, also, which kills vast numbers of them. In short, the locusts have got too far east, and can't stand it. Prof. Riley, the State entomologist of Missouri, comes out of the campaign with vastly more credit than Gov. Hardin; and, if the latter had taken occasion to look over the professor's last report, in which just this state of things was predicted, he probably wouldn't have issued such a proclamation. It would have been very sensible, on the contrary, to have informed the people what to expect, and to have advised them to go on with their spring's work, without fear of devastation."

The closing lines of the above articles show that the proclamation was the cause of direct injury to the people. Scaring them with the idea that they were again to be devastated by the plague, and that there was no hope but in falling down on their knees and imploring supernatural aid, many were of course deterred from work.

How much better would have been a public reference to the scientific report of the State entomologist, encouraging the people to be hopeful, and to labor on!

W. F. P.

NEW ORLEANS, June 6, 1875.

AN OPEN LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CHRISTIAN STATESMAN."—

Dear Sir,—I have to thank you or some kind Christian friend for a copy of your paper containing a couple of marked articles, one on "Catholicism," the other on "Prohibition," which I read with interest; but my attention was chiefly attracted by the leading article, the address of Rev. R. H. Pollock, D.D., on the "Christian Amendment," endorsed by you. This address contains such remarkable statements that I am tempted to challenge some of them.

First, however, it would be desirable to ascertain whether you "Christian patriots" invite or tolerate discussion: whether you are willing that the other side should be heard at all, or whether you are resolutely bent on an ex-parte exposition of the case. Hoping that, like Milton, you are willing to "let truth and error grapple," I venture to make a few inquiries, and pen a few thoughts suggested by the address in question.

The writer (or speaker) says: "There is no plank between these opposing platforms, which is either broad enough or strong enough for a single man to stand on"—meaning the Liberal platform and the Christian Amendment platform.

Ever since the development of the "uniformitarian" theory of geology by the late Sir Charles Lyell, and its startling application to the cosmogony of Genesis, I have been reading in numerous works of which Hugh Miller's Testimony of the Rocks and Herbert Morris' Science and the Bible are specimens, that there was no conflict between the Bible and Science, or in other words between Christianity and Secularism. But here in the Christian Statesman the "irrepressible conflict" is openly acknowledged; those who do not see it are censured, the danger is pointed out, and a remedy is suggested,—i. e., the placing of "all Christian laws, institutions, and usages in our government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the nation." "Such an amendment to the constitution as shall suitably express our national acknowledgment of Almighty God as the source of all power and authority in civil government; of the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, and of his revealed will as of supreme authority." Then he complacently adds: "We do not ask that anybody shall make this his personal creed,"—in a word, that the proposed amendment is a perfectly harmless affair.

I observe that this same conflict is recognized by another party,—I mean the Church of Rome. We read in the preface to The Infallible Authority of the Pope, by F. H. Weninger, a Jesuit priest (1869) as follows: "The armies of Truth and Error are drawn up in sight of the whole world, and prepared to meet in a decisive combat for the very life of Christianity." It seems that the holy Father, equally with the Rev. R. H. Pollock, recognizes the situation. He also proposes a remedy, and censures those who do not approve of his policy. His remedy was the promulgation of the dogma of the Infallibility of the Pope; and the following year (1870) the Council of the Vatican at the dictation of Pius IX. declared: "Consequently such definitions of the Roman Pontiff are of themselves irreformable, independent of any consent of the Church;" and in his Syllabus the Pope condemns as pestilential errors the following propositions:—

"Every man is free to embrace and profess that form of religion which, guided by the light of reason, he holds to be true." "The Church has no power to employ force, nor has she any temporal power."

These extracts show the purpose for which the dogma was promulgated; namely, to give to the Catholic Church absolute spiritual and temporal control. Laying aside all disguise, Father Weninger proceeds:—

"It is time to define our position more accurately, and let our enemies feel our strength, and the utter impossibility of engaging us in any compromise."

That is certainly candid. Rome means to crush out all liberty of conscience, and openly avows it.

The following frank confession is earnestly recommended to your consideration: "It is worse than useless to disguise our real sentiments in the face of facts which stamp themselves upon our whole outward deportment, and which reveal to reflecting minds the real nature of our conduct."

Now I would in all kindness desire to ask you Christianizers of the Constitution a plain question. Why not emulate the example of this Jesuit priest, and honestly avow your real purpose?

It would at least gain you the respect of your opponents, and that is a consideration not always to be despised. Why keep up the flimsy pretence that you do not intend to make unbelief "odious," when all the world knows that you and Rome are aiming at the same result? She through the infallibility of a man, you through the infallibility of a book,—she through traditionary "apostolic succession," you without even that pretence to authority.

To notice all the assumptions and specious fallacies contained in the Rev. Pollock's address would be an endless and comparatively fruitless task; a few must suffice.

1. "We do not ask a union of Church and State. We do ask that there be a union between the State and Christian morals."

Query. Is not this creating a distinction without a difference? In what does Christian morals differ from Secular morals, except in the observance and enforcement of church dogmas? True, you do not propose a union of Church and State; you simply propose to make the State the slave of the Church.

2. "We do not propose to disfranchise those who cannot adopt these principles." Then he proceeds to prove it by asserting the readiness of Jews, Infidels, and Atheists to perjure themselves for the sake of the spoils of office. Shame on such argument! A cause that requires it must be sadly deficient in better material.

3. "The laws and constitutions of most of the States contain these principles more or less distinctly stated."

Then why not be satisfied? Why this solicitude about the Constitution of the United States?

Do you see the sceptre departing from Judah, and does desperation whisper in your ear that your only safety lies in the coup d'etat proposed?

4. "Is it a fact that Jesus Christ is the Ruler of Nations? Is the revealed will of Jesus Christ of supreme authority in the nation? If these questions must be answered in the affirmative, there would be an end of controversy."

Certainly; but it so happens that there is not an absolute necessity for answering them in the affirmative, and in point of fact a very great number of American citizens do not so answer them. Yet these same parties under the Constitution as it is have some rights that you are bound to respect. Is it because you do not wish to respect these rights that you want that instrument changed?

5. "Are we a Christian nation?"

Certainly not, and the fathers never intended that we should be. "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification for any office or public trust under the United States."

6. "Contrast the social life of a people under the influence of Christianity with the morals of a country without it; Paris with any city where the gospel has moulded society."

New York, for instance, or even Brooklyn, the "city of churches" (and scandal). Had the reverend gentleman any statistics before him when he made the above felicitous comparison?

7. "The acknowledgment of the Bible as the supreme law is necessary to secure the rights and liberties of the people." What kind of liberty? Liberty to be stoned to death for gathering sticks on Sunday (Num. 15: 35)? Or liberty to be butchered by one's own brother for a defection of faith (Ex. 32: 27)? Or the right to murder one's dearest friend if he preaches the "God of Science" (Deut. 13: 6)?

When the Constitution is pruned and grafted to your satisfaction, and subordinated to the Bible, I am just the least bit anxious to know who are to be the interpreters of the new "supreme law." Will it be Bishop Simpson & Co., or will it be Cardinal McCloskey & Co.?

Then, too, will it be King James', or the Douay version? I anticipate a lively time while these points are being settled. Do you imagine that the millions of Liberals, Spiritualists, etc., of this country are going to submit quietly to the stamping-out process? If you do, you have read history to little purpose. Christianizing the world so far has cost the lives of about 20,000,000 people. How many do you propose to add to this number in order to Christianize the United States?

You certainly must see that "a severe and irresistible logic connects" your project with such consequences as these.

Listen to the pious Archbishop Manning. He says: "The right to depose kings, excommunicate individuals, and lay kingdoms under an interdict, is the essence of that royal authority of Christ with which his vicegerents on earth are vested."

What the "royal authority of Christ" means, when interpreted by Catholics, the world knows to its sorrow. What will it mean when interpreted by Protestants? Time will tell.

Yours inquiringly,

HARRY HOOVER.

CURWENSVILLE, Clearfield Co., Pa., May 1, 1875.

[We are informed that the above article was refused publication by the Christian Statesman.—Ed.]

SIGNIFICANT.

MR. ABBOT:—

Permit me to make a few extracts from Judge Ould's address of welcome at the Christian Associations' International Convention at Richmond, Va., May 26:—

"I do not propose in this address of welcome to suggest the various topics of discussion that will probably arise, but I cannot refrain from mentioning one or two whose importance is grave enough to justify their consideration. . . . I refer to the observance of the Sabbath in our cities and towns, and to the effort now so formidably made to drive the Bible from our schools. . . . The Sabbath is a civil as well as religious institution; it has its terrible penalties in both directions. The nation which disregards it cannot prosper; nay, cannot live. . . . As to the exclusion of the Bible from our schools, it seems to me to be sufficient to say that it is the Word of God; and why His articulate utterances should be kept from the youthful mind in the course of its tuition, while the doubtful and uncertain voices of Nature are to be studied and pondered to ascertain the duty and destiny of man, is beyond any honest comprehension of mine. These two matters, and perhaps others which might be named, are peculiarly within the sphere of action of the Christian Associations of our land, and of the lay members of which they are chiefly composed, if therein the cause of your Master is put to any peril. On your return to your homes, convert your thousand Association Halls into as many armories and camps, wherein will be fashioned and polished the weapons of your warfare, and where your legions will gather to lock their shields together against the threatening hosts of unbelief; and may He, in whose cause you put on the armor, grant you the victory! . . . Soldiers of the grand army of the Captain of our Salvation, all hail!"

Who will say this does not mean fight? Will our friends who have no fears of further encroachments upon our rights, and a determined adherence to those already gained, still assert there is no danger? Will they not heed this warning? What makes this matter all the more significant is: this is the first convention of the Young Men's Christian Association held in the South since the war, and the cordial reception of the numerous delegates from all parts of the United States and British Provinces, and the enthusiasm manifested, shows the cost of the effort and the rejoicing over the successful reunion of the rebel Christians South and the Union Christians North in putting down the rebellion of infidelity. They have met with that intention; they have organized for that purpose. They mean business. Shall we not profit by their example, and organize the liberal forces for the contest, and put our armories in order? Shall we not have a thousand Liberal Leagues, all in good working order, wherever to meet them, as early as July 4th, 1876? Read the signs of the times, O ye fearless liberals, and awake to the true condition and position of both parties! A word to the wise is sufficient.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

ELWOOD, Atlantic Co., New Jersey, June 9, 1875.

SHALL WOMEN HAVE THE BALLOT?

MR. EDITOR:—

This question of woman suffrage seems no nearer a solution than when it was first raised, and I see no reason why it should not be, when the way appears so clear. If, as your correspondent F. H. G. thinks, only one in eleven desire the ballot, why should she not have it? And if she had it, how are the remaining ten compelled to bear any "grievous burden"? Women would be happier, if they knew they had equal rights with men, and could vote when they chose. Her claim to the ballot is not based alone upon the right, if she desires; but the matter of "taxation without representation" is a very important point.

To come down to the essence of the question, there are too many voters already. If the present number was cut down one-third, at least, the welfare of the nation would be just as well, if not better; secured. Taxes are raised by the vote of some miserable, ignorant beings who know nothing, and care less, of what they are doing, save that they have voted. The German lands upon our shores, and in a short time is pronounced an American citizen, provided his religious views are Orthodox; and he has a word to say, and an influence to exert, in making the laws of our country. The English and Irish come, and in due course of time are installed as American citizens, and in their blustering manner tell us what we must do.

And latterly the African is thrust before our face, and we are told that he too is our superior. His ignorance is of no consequence; but, as soon as he votes, he is considered an intelligent American, and stands on an equal footing with the best men of our country. If all these take precedence of the enlightened women of our land, what may we not hope for? I do not advocate female suffrage in the general sense in which it is considered. I would have it limited, and at the same time I would limit the number of male voters. No man should cast a vote unless he could read and write, and was subject to taxation, and fully understood all that pertains to our national government. I know no reason why such wholesale liberty is given to the reckless and unprincipled portion of the country, as it present is the case.

Beings who call themselves men reel past the "wrongfully disfranchised ones," and wantonly vote out of their purses such an amount as they see fit, while they themselves go "scot free," thinking meantime that it is worth something for women to be in a country where they are protected. Glorious privileges! Are such things right? Are they just and equal? It can be made just and equal by prohibiting such men from voting; and, if the franchise be extended to women, let it be only to such women as are free-holders, intelligent, and honest.

If our girls must attend the same schools with our boys, if they are to be admitted to all the colleges and all branches of learning, why not educate them to be equal participants in every avocation of life, practice law, medicine, preach if they wish, hold office, make laws, and vote? If the one of F. H. G.'s eleven that desires the ballot is capable of voting for the protection of the ten, why deny her the right any more than the "lords of creation"?

I would say to all men that what is mine is mine, and what is yours is yours, and that I have just as much right to say to you that you shall pay your money to build this schoolhouse, as you have to say that I shall pay my money to build that town hall.

Equality is equality; but the term is wofully misconstrued sometimes. If, then, as Gail Hamilton once said, "the ignorant, drunken, and stubborn rustic has been voting as long as the scholar and gentleman at his side," why in Heaven's name refuse the intelligent women the same right? Let those vote who desire to, and those who do not can remain at home, as they now do; there would be nothing compulsory in the matter, while at present there is.

ALBION, Wis.

MARTHA J. ATWOOD.

CHURCH ENTAILMENT.

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, June 10, 1875.

The truth of any proposition, it is often said, "lies in a nutshell." Our forefathers thought the safety of republican institutions required that property be not entailed; therefore they abolished the laws of primogeniture and entailment of property. Why did they do so? Plainly, to prevent the accumulation of large estates in families, judging from experience that such accumulations were dangerous to governments except in the hands of the governing class. To secure the permanent existence of our republic, they prohibited entailment, and gave the ballot to the people.

If property largely accumulated in the hands of individuals is dangerous to our republic, even when taxed to its equal share, will not the accumulation of property in churches be much more dangerous, especially when exempt from all taxation? The Massachusetts Commission argue that, because property once given to the church can never be reclaimed by the giver, being entailed to the church by the giver, therefore it should never be taxed! If our forefathers were right, no property should be entailed to any church; and, if entailed, it should be taxed the heavier. We know history proves that accumulation of property in churches is dangerous to governments. We have full demonstration in Italy and Mexico. I wish the Commission, or some one, would undertake to demonstrate that property entailed in a church is less dangerous to governments than when entailed in families.

By so doing, they will oblige many, I know; for I have heard many express a desire to hear such demonstration. Or, if they can, let them show such entailment is a blessing to any one. E. L. CRANE.

SHALL WE SPEAK OUR CONVICTIONS?

Although the profession of heretical views does not cost every radical the "salary" that is so frequently spoken of, as one of the pleasant associations which the progressive minister finds it so difficult to surrender to the requirements of free thought, yet few who live in the country, where public opinion on the subject of religion exercises despotic sway over the private reason and conscience, can express unorthodox principles without suffering a social ostracism which is not less hard to bear than the loss of pecuniary favor.

Many readers of THE INDEX, who live in cities of intellectual culture, where free thinking is respected and liberal opinions prevail, have perhaps no adequate idea of the feeling with which an "infidel" is regarded in communities where the Orthodox religion is inculcated by ignorant and bigoted preachers, whose illiterate and credulous followers have no higher oracle than the incoherent utterances of the pulpit. My first impressions of an "infidel," received from this source, were horrid. The mere thought of "Tom" Paine chilled my whole being, although the ministers from whose revival exhortations I had received my idea of his character had perhaps never read a word of his writings. He was delineated to my youthful mind as a monster of such enormous wickedness that even the God he had defied could not determine the full extent of the punishment he deserved till the "end of time," when the total influence of his pernicious work could be estimated. The term "infidel" was made comprehensive enough to embrace all degrees of unbelief, from the mildest form of scepticism to the most radical atheism. We had no distinction and classification of heresies in our rustic community; the hideous word "infidel" characterized all who dared to question the dogmas of the church; and those who persisted in rejecting the tenets of the traditional religion which had shackled the reason and conscience of our fore-fathers were represented as wretches from whom the "wooding spirit of mercy had forever taken its flight," who were "given up to hardness of heart to believe a lie that they might be damned."

To be thus thought of is what it costs now to be an infidel of any degree in some communities. What I wish to ask some of the older advocates of free thought who read THE INDEX, and who have battled long against the pertinacity of conservatism in religion, is whether it is better to declare one's views boldly in such a community, and suffer the misrepresentation and persecution that would inevitably follow an avowal of scepticism, or to be non-committal on the more radical points of unbelief, and attack only the grosser forms of superstition; waiting for the progress of general intelligence to render the less patent absurdities of Orthodoxy more vulnerable.

I could derive but little personal benefit from the solution of this question, for I have already "crossed the Rubicon" in defining my religious views in this community. I have already "burned my boats" on this hostile shore, and there is but one way for me to return to the cherishing and respectable patronage of Orthodoxy, and that is through "faith and repentance." But I should be glad to hear from some of the veterans of the cause on this subject.

OZARK, Mo.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

CHRISTIANS WITHOUT CHRISTIANITY.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 25, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I think that James Freeman Clarke can consistently call himself a Christian, as there seems to be but little material difference between his position and that of Orthodoxy; but how people claiming to be radical Unitarians can so style themselves is beyond my comprehension. Yet we have them here in St. Paul, as well as elsewhere. They would say: "I am a Christian, but do not believe in the divinity of Christ." "I am a Christian, but do not believe in hell or a personal devil." "I am a Christian, but do not believe in vicarious atonement." "I am a Christian, but accept only such parts of the old and new Testaments as seems to me to be of intrinsic worth." "I am a Christian, but do not believe in a triune God." After all this, what is left but natural morality, or at most "love to God and love to man"? though Christ was the originator of neither. As well to say, during the war, "I am a republican, but a free trader, a pro-slavery man, opposed to the vigorous prosecution of the war, and a believer in State sovereignty." When the "Christ in the Constitution" Amendment is adopted, we shall see whose definition of Christianity will be the standard; the "radical" Unitarian will, I fear, stand no better chance than the "anti-Christian." In the meantime, is it not "whistling against the wind," trying to convince them of the inconsistency of their position? The fact seems to be, they have not outgrown their old reverence for the Christian name. Christianity is respectable; if consistency forces them outside it, they will not be consistent. Therefore, say I, let them alone. You have stated your position; to me it seems unanswerable; anything they have offered thus far seeming more of the nature of apology than argument. Truly,

W. H. D.

A FRANK CORRECTION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As between yourself and Mr. LeSueur, I think you are right. When I read Mr. LeSueur's article headed "Words, Words, Words!" I supposed the heading to be his own selection, and any person competent to understand his criticisms must have seen the thing in the same light. But while I can conscientiously support your position, I have to regret that mine in relation to "motives" is not defensible. The only thing I can offer in extenuation is that it was my Christian experience that had begot in me the habit of questioning motives, when I was pressed uncomfortably hard by argument. I therefore receive Mr. LeSueur's slight rebuke with a desire to profit by it; and, if he will read my communication again, substituting the words "erroneous conceptions" for "unworthy motives," I think he will admit that the logical force of the article, so far as it bears on the main question involved, remains intact; and that he is wrong in his inference that I could see no other way of turning his position than by imputing unworthy motives. Z.

"LABOR COST" THE "LIMIT OF PRICE."

MR. ABBOT:—

Many writers, like Mr. Linton in THE INDEX long ago, suggest and urge "labor cost" as the proper "limit of price." To me the thing is unjust, absurd, and impossible in practice.

For twelve years I and my neighbor worked land of like soil and like richness. I raised carrots for less than half the "labor cost" that he did. Which of us should determine the price of carrots? The first year his carrots cost him less labor than mine. He saved many days of labor at the expense of three times as many in the years following. I urged him to adopt my plan, and let no weeds go to seed on the lot. He laughed, but never adopted it. This literal and truthful statement is a sample of what may be seen every day. I got fair wages for my labor. He did not. Could he justly demand a part of my money? But which of us should have determined the "labor cost" of carrots the first year? and which after that?

AUSTIN KENT.

STOCKHOLM, N. Y., June 2, 1875.

TAKE LIFE EASY, and don't always be trying to beat the sun up. You may win for a while, but in the long run you are sure to be beaten, and some morning it will rise when you don't.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

PROP. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

F. W. NEWMAN, England.

CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shaw-Straps. A Compendium of Ethics. Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTLETT (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroic and Heroic War, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	2.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformation of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Berman. In French. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy. A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer. Essays.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—Both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Sanskrit Language. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Cr. paper, 3 vols.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eekos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. G. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.70
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.75
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.90
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I, and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Sauntering.....	1.00
Sauntering.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Girls.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEENReligion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 5c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,SERMONS,*ESSAYS,*and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,

BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FOR MUSIC TEACHERS.

Now examine and select books for the next season's campaign. In our catalogue (sent free), you will find all you need, and of the best quality. We now remind you of our

SONG MONARCH,

(75 cents). Unequaled as a class-book for singing schools.

American School Music Readers.

Book I. (35 cents), Book II. (50 cents), Book III. (50 cents). Excellent graded books for schools.

Richardson's New Method for Pianoforte.

($3.75), the greatest and best of Piano instruction books.

Clarke's New Method for REED ORGANS.

($2.50), which occupies very nearly the same position with respect to books of its class as Richardson's does to other Piano-forte Methods.

And if, as is likely, you are a leader of a choir or musical society, you will find excellent material in our new books, Thomas's Quartets and Anthems ($2.50), or Perkins Anthems ($1.50), or Four Part German Songs ($1.50), for Mixed Voices, or Dank's Anthem Services, (Episcopal), $2.50.

Sent postpaid for Retail Prices. Sold by all principal music dealers.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money a week for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREEIN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O KCard,

—AND—

JobPRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published. He has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 1, 1875.

WHOLE No. 288.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———. Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

TWEED seems likely to get out of jail, but not out of the pillory of public disgrace, which is worse.

WHY was not Gen. Robert Toombs at the Centenary, to "read the roll-call of his slaves on Bunker Hill"? Even he would have been cheered, with a quiet smile at the memory of his prophecy.

THE "Keeley motor," which promised to supersede the steam-engine, is denounced by the Scientific American as a juggling exhibition. The prospect is that the new invention will soon be scuttled with a hole in its keel—eh?

THE JURY in the Father McGlew slander case, already noted in these columns, disagreed in their verdict. Two votes [were for the plaintiff and ten for the defendant. But the only noteworthy result of the trial is that a Catholic priest admits the "validity" of a merely civil marriage; which is a concession, however, that binds nobody, and would not be made by the Pope.

THIS is a specimen of the gospel preached by Rev. Dr. Webb, of Boston: "If a Vigilance Committee should, from a beam stretched from yonder belfry, hang high as Haman the murderer of Mabel Young and the murderer of the South Boston children, the effect would be salutary." When the pulpit thus openly incites to mob violence and Lynch law in a civilized community, it does but abridge its own influence and shorten its own days.

A NEW Liberal Association has been formed at Cleveland, Ohio, its object being, "by an untrammelled interchange of opinion, to promote right thinking upon all subjects of vital interest to mankind as individuals or members of community." President, E. D. Stark (an old friend of THE INDEX); Vice-President, Mrs. A. B. Copeland; Secretary, Thomas Lees; Treasurer, J. D. Varney; Librarian, Miss M. H. Lees; Directors, Joseph Gillson, E. D. Stark, C. H. Merrick.

THE PREDICTION of a "split" in the Free Religious Association, to which Mr. Frothingham very properly replies in another column, was not a very wise one. Nothing was less in our own mind, when we overhastily objected to a recent vote of the Association, than that such a result could ensue. We have never desired an "anti-Christian plank" in the Association's platform, and have repeatedly said so. All we desire is that it shall contract no "entangling alliances"; and the moment we became convinced that the sympathy-resolutions did not involve that consequence, we at once withdrew all objections to them. But there never was the slightest danger of a "split," so far as we know; that would be too absurd altogether.

THIS ebullition of petty tyranny shows that Catholicism would bite as sharply as ever, if it had not become nearly toothless under the forceps of American secularism: "A case which is interesting New Haven people is that of a man in that city who owned a lot in the Roman Catholic cemetery, in which two of his children were buried, and was also an Odd Fellow. Last week he died; but the priest denied him burial in his own lot, on the ground that he forfeited his right of burial in consecrated ground by joining a secret society. His widow complained of this, when the priest offered to make it all right if she would sign over to him all the money she should receive in aid from the society; but this she refused to do, and thus the case now stands."

GENERAL POPE'S report on Indian affairs brings to light most shameful neglect by the Department of the Interior to furnish the Indians with the stipulated supplies. Responsibility for Indian outbreaks must henceforth rest where it belongs. Contractors and rings have plundered the Indians beyond endurance; border roughs play Ahab to Naboth and steal his vineyard; the people of the whole West, with apparently few exceptions, are in favor of extermination, and rejoice to see starvation goaded into a warfare that can end in nothing else; while the government has connived at this cumulative wickedness till every honest citizen is made to feel himself an involuntary murderer. At last the army officers have united in protest, and forced an exposure which lies and tricks cannot any longer suppress. Is it too much to expect that justice will be done at this late day?

THE NEW YORK Independent thus notes the action of the Rochester Board of Education which was mentioned in THE INDEX of June 24: "The Rochester Board of Education last week passed a resolution by a vote of twelve to four declaring 'that all religious exercises of any nature be prohibited in the public schools.' The Rochester Democrat says that before the adoption of the measure the opinions of the leading clergymen of the city were obtained in regard to the propriety of reading the Bible in the public schools; and, as a matter of fact, it was found that they were nearly unanimous in favor of a discontinuance of the practice, as unnecessary and anti-democratic in principle. It further says that the resolution is approved by the general sentiment of the people. Rochester has thus planted itself squarely upon the American idea of secular education by the State; not by any means implying or claiming that such education is all that children need, but taking the position that it is all that the State can furnish at the public expense. Who should complain? Nobody. Who will complain? Religious sectarians, and these only. Whether the sectarian be a Protestant, a Catholic, or a Jew, makes no difference in the character of the complaint."

THERE is no possibility of mistaking the spirit of the Bunker Hill Centenary, or that of the comments on it by the Southern press. It is like the hearty handshake of two school-boys who have quarrelled, have had their fight bravely and fairly out, and, the cause of quarrel being removed, are drawn to each other more than ever. Any one, however, who should infer from the recent demonstrations at the North that the South could now with impunity renew its mad attempt at secession would be very obtuse. General Sherman spoke bluntly but kindly, on the evening of the Seventeenth of June, what it is very well to have explicitly understood on all hands. At the Loyal Legion's reception at the Parker House, he said: "I have been struck with one thing since I have been in Boston, and you must excuse me if I look at things in a very plain sort of way. There has been a most extraordinary purpose, it seems to me, to attract our friends of the South. You have not only held out to them the right hand of friendship, but you have coaxed them to come. There was always a kind of sympathy between Boston and Charleston, I think. Extremes meet always, and sometimes they show, like weathercocks, which way the wind blows. I think these two cities, Charleston on the one hand and Boston on the other, show which way the wind blows; that there is a general feeling in the North to encourage the South to come in and be a hail fellow, well met. It is very much like the Scripture parable of the prodigal son. You not only give them the right hand of fellowship, but you kill for them the fatted calf. I say that is all right, gentlemen, but, if General Fitz-Hugh Lee be here, I tell him not to draw an unfair inference from that fact. If we come here as we have, and work side by side with each other in the national cause, with like energy and force, they must not presume upon this kindly feeling. Good friends make good enemies. I profess to be a Yankee myself; and those of the old Yankee stock can make first-rate friends, but they make devils of enemies. With this preliminary I can give a hearty welcome to any one who fought in the South against us, provided he promises never to do so again. [Tremendous applause.]"

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSBORNA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaulx, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Buihan, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

New Thoughts and True Thoughts.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

The writer of the book Ecclesiastes begins his lament over the vanity of things by affirming that there is "no new thing under the sun." The author of Revelations closes his prophecy of the better time by the declaration, "Behold, I make old things new." The first is a backward looking man, tired evidently with his experience of the past, and hopeless of what may be before; a man of low temperament, sceptical, distrustful, unbelieving, of small motive power, dull relish, and feeble anticipation, who sees nothing but monotony in existence. The other is a man of eager heart, forward-looking, sanguine, full of bright anticipations, ready to believe in every fresh promise and to seize every waiting occasion, sure that, whatever the past may have been, the future must be more. There are these two classes of men, the believers in the old without being happy in it, the believers in the new without comprehending it. They differ sometimes in temperament, sometimes in fortune, sometimes in mental training; but, howsoever they differ, they disagree in this at last, that, where the one looks backward for truth, the other looks forward for it. The backward-gazers are well-known. They love old things because they are old—old pictures, old books, old furniture, old manners, old customs, old prejudices, old ideas, old beliefs. They have a respect, sometimes an unreasoning respect, for old things of all kinds, seeming to think them more solid, sincere, and serviceable than new things. It is an impression of theirs that men used to be more truthful than they are to-day,—were less vain, pretentious, and greedy. They will not undertake to prove this by facts or argument, but they are persuaded of it, and the persuasion is too deep to be altered. It is a mood of mind. The forward-gazers are distinguished by the opposite qualities. They welcome every novelty. They adore freshness; the last fashion is the prettiest; the last discovery the most important; the last invention the most useful and remarkable. They are apostles of newness, and are hard to convince that anything was ever quite so good, so happy, so desirable, as the last thing. We need not press either of these classes of people to a declaration of the philosophy on which they proceed, or the principles from which they reason. In most cases they have no philosophy; there are no principles; reason is not employed. It is matter of taste and feeling, of association and animal spirits. They are both right and both wrong.

Philosophy, however, does come in when antiquity and newness are made tests of truth. Here feeling is much less active and prominent than thought. There are those who deliberately maintain that mankind tend by nature to degenerate, that the race was in better condition once than it is now, that we only repeat the lessons of other ages, weakening them in our repetition, and only rehearse the practices of past generations, doing mechanically what they did with purpose. There are those, on the other hand, whose faith in progress is so strong that what their neighbors call "newfangled notions" are in their view revelations; every new idea is, from the reason of things, an inspiration, and every successful attempt to substitute a new belief for an old one is another step from darkness into light. The comparative merit of these two philosophies, if such they can be called, I have no intention to discuss, or even to pronounce upon. I am aiming at a single point; namely, the value of either antiquity or novelty as tests of truth. Is a belief more likely to be true for being new or old? Or does its truth depend on other considerations entirely, which do not, except indirectly, imply either? The beliefs we are concerned with here are beliefs in religion; not in politics, society, philosophy, art, but in sentiment and faith.

There are two views of Christianity, for instance. On one side men affirm that a special revelation was made through Jesus Christ and his apostles. To them it was imparted in its fullness. To them was committed every idea, every sentiment, every essential belief. There is the faith in its purity and wholeness. There, in record, tradition, memorial, it may be found; and thither to find it you must go. Get as near as you can to the apostolic age, and you approach the sources of the religion; for, after the apostolic age was ended, the corruptions began; debates, controversies, speculations, infusions of idle philosophy, divisions, opposing sects, jealous churches followed rapidly, as time went on, till the unity of the faith was broken, the harmony disturbed, the truth filtered away. The religion became several religions. The supremacy of the Church of Rome was one calamity, the disintegration of it was another; the Protestant reformation shattered the already bruised and dismembered body; Protestantism fell asunder into a multitude of conflicting parties; doctrine after doctrine was disputed; belief after belief was infringed upon; rite after rite was discredited,—the original substance was by degrees attenuated and diluted, till Universalism came, then Unitarianism, then Rationalism, and only a shadow remained of the mighty form that descended at first from the skies. To recover the faith, we must, say these Christians, go backward. The further back we go, the closer we shall be to the original sources. The oldest belief will be the truest. Fix the date of a doctrine, and you decide its worth. The latest belief is, by that mark alone, condemned.

Under the inspiration of this theory, the worshippers of antiquity have industriously ransacked the stores of the past. They have re-edited the fathers of the Church. They have brushed up their Greek and Latin, their Syriac and Arabic; they have pushed their researches into archæology; they have reproduced, as far as was possible, the features of the primitive age. The Ritualists live in this persuasion, ascribing virtue to symbols, colors, emblems, ceremonies, according to their remoteness from modern times. A custom that would seem meaningless, a form that would be called insignificant, a dress that would be pronounced tawdry, a ceremony that would be ridiculed, if exhibited by men and women of their own generation, is regarded as beautiful and venerable because brought from some distant period. They may not understand it; they may not profess to understand it; still, if it is old, they cherish it. Nay, if it is very old indeed, they deem it presumptuous to try to understand it. The mystery of it is too sacred to be pried into by vulgar eyes. The veriest trumpery is treasured as truth, if the forefathers' forefathers prized it as such.

These people test truth by antiquity. There are other people who, with equal sincerity and obstinacy, test truth by novelty. They reason in this way: "Grant," they say, "that at a certain point a revelation may be given; grant that Jesus and his apostles were its organs. Still what they received was the soul of it, not the body; the germs of it, not the full fruit and flower. The stream took its rise at that point, but it did not confine its flow to that space; it did not empty into its fountain. The stream was destined to pour its regenerating flood across continuity, to broaden through centuries of time. Like every river, it widened and deepened as it flowed on. Its sentiments took form; its thoughts assumed shape in doctrine; its beliefs developed by the action of the human mind; its suggestions were carried out in usage and rites; its faint glimpses at truth brightened into splendid theologies. The Greek Church, the Roman Church, the English Church, were separate branches of the immortal river, determined in their course by the territory over which they flowed. Protestantism exhibited the intellectual capacities of the religion,—its numerous sects, emphasizing, each in its way, a special doctrine, and all together giving complete expression to all the possible phases of opinion, drawing out in clear phrase and with exhausting ingenuity all the latent insinuations of thought. Gradually these dogmatic forms, inevitably hard at first, soften and yield; larger interpretations are given; the heart claims its proper share in the development of the original substance of faith. First Universalism lays stress on the fatherhood of God, a point which in the unfolding of the divine attributes had been overlooked. Then Unitarianism brought into prominence the dignity and capacity of man, which had been forgotten in the effort to render justice to other aspects of human nature and human life. Then Rationalism had its word to say, respecting the prerogative of the human mind to apply the laws of reason to the records of the religion, to sift the knowledge from the ignorance, the truth from the error, and exhibit the full reasonable beauty of the faith in the view of thoughtful men. Each step," say these Christians, "was a step in the direction of a perfect disclosure of the truth first communicated to Jesus and the apostles. Each reform was an improvement; each innovation was a discovery. Each generation added purity and richness to the thoughts which expanded as they entered on wider reaches of the human mind. The last term is the most satisfactory. The most complete interpretation of the religion is that offered by the newest and most free-thinking men. The last moment is the supreme moment."

The friends of this theory are on the watch for new discoveries in opinion. They are of Pastor Robinson's mind, that more light may be expected to break from God's Word; and they are not satisfied with the old word, but listen to catch new utterances from other quarters than Judea and Galilee. They accept the last opinion, however strange, uncouth, unreasonable it appears in the light of pure intelligence. It may be an opinion that, if found in an old book, in a volume of the Fathers or the Schoolmen, they would repel. It may be an opinion that, if encountered for the first time in the writings of a Romanist divine or a Calvinistic theologian, they would laugh at as absurd; but, being, as they think, new, a discovery of modern thought, they hail it with enthusiasm. To these people fancies, whims, the creations of raving imagination, are received as revelations which, as having the seal on them of the latest moment, they are pledged to accept.

The peculiarity of these two classes is that they make chronology the test of truth. They try beliefs by dates. For their opinions they refer to the almanac. It is this peculiarity I wish to call attention to, and to raise question upon.

And, first, I wish to show that the test is wholly deceptive and illusory; in either case worthless. The antiquity or the novelty of a belief may have an incidental connection with its truth or falsity, but only an incidental connection; essentially they have no bearing on it whatever. An ancient opinion may be true or false; a modern opinion may be true or false; and the truth or the falsity will be judged on grounds with which the dates have no concern. We may say that all beliefs, whether old or new, are at the same time both true and false—true in relation to the age and the people that held them, who did their best to believe rightly according to their ability; and false in relation to other ages and people who, having more light, could see further. The most grotesque, outlandish, and obsolete opinions must have seemed true once, or they would not have been entertained. It is hard to conceive that millions of people believed in an everlasting hell, and in the damnation of infants unbaptized, because they enjoyed it. They must have seen what to them was sufficient reason for such atrocious doctrine. The belief in total depravity is scarcely such a belief as men would press to their bosoms, unless they felt constrained to by what were to them impregnable facts. If they took them on the assertion of priests, they must have felt constrained to put confidence in the assertion of the priests. To us such things are intrinsically incredible, because our minds are confronted by facts and arguments with which they were not acquainted. Is it said that in our age these facts and arguments are apparent, while in an earlier age they were not, and consequently it is a matter of chronology? I reply, it is not time, but the action of the mind in time, that makes us cognizant of the new grounds of belief; and there are questions, and momentous questions, too, in which the attitude of the mind is everything.

Speaking as a rationalist, I say that it by no means follows that, because a doctrine is new, it is therefore true. The older doctrine is often the truer. For example: We hold that a noble theism, intelligent and moral, free from superstition, airy, sunny, sweet, is truer than tritheism, with its incarnations, mediators, saviours. But the first was held by enlightened Hebrews some centuries before Christendom; the latter was held by Christian teachers some centuries after. The first is held now by believers in the faith of Israel, who read the Old Testament Scriptures; the latter is held by members of the faith of Christ, who make appeal to the Scriptures of the New Testament. In our minds, there is no question that the belief in the divine forgiveness is truer than the belief in the pitiless doctrine of an implacable wrath. But the former belief was written in the Jewish Talmud at the time Jesus was born, and the latter became the dogma of the Christian Church more than a hundred years after, and continues the doctrine of the Church to this day.

To multitudes of people now, the doctrine that in the hereafter character will unfold itself gradually under experience and discipline is more rational, and therefore more true, than the doctrine that probation closes at death for all persons, and that their everlasting destiny is decided in a moment once and for all time. Yet the former doctrine has been held by the Roman Church for hundreds of years under the form of Purgatory, or the period of purification, while the latter has distinguished the later system of the Protestants. On other points, moral freedom, for instance, and human ability, the doctrine held by the older creeds is more rational than the doctrine held by the more modern. In these cases the newer opinion was not the truer, and answered less to the demands of correct thought. The Greek philosophers, who had faith in the action of the healthy human mind, seem to us nearer the truth than the Christian theologians, who placed their faith implicitly in the inspired letter of the Bible; but the former faith is credited to the old world, while the latter is peculiar to the modern.

Antiquity and newness constitute no test whatever of truth. Antiquity and newness are themselves relative terms. The oldest beliefs were once new; the newest beliefs will one day be old. Heresy changes fast into Orthodoxy; Orthodoxy once was stigmatized as heresy. Unless belief has something to recommend it besides its antiquity, its antiquity will presently become its tomb; unless belief has something to recommend it besides its novelty, it will probably never grow venerable by becoming old. The solemnity of truth is quite abolished by the habit of trying it by such flimsy tests. The opinions are worth nothing that are allowed to rest on such foundations. For in the one case they are prejudices, stubborn in proportion as they are stupid; in the other case they are whims, conceited in proportion as they are fantastical. There is no sense of the importance of opinions, no feeling of their sacredness, when they are put at the mercy of a time-table. The Conservatives who accept doctrines because they boast a long pedigree, and the Radicals who accept doctrines because they are of to-day, are alike and equally foolish. They who repudiate beliefs which were never heard of a generation ago, and they who repudiate beliefs which were entertained a generation ago, can scarcely be said to hold beliefs in any earnest sense. The test of truth is more exacting than that.

By what title, then, are we ever justified in claiming for our beliefs the august designation of truth? Let us consider this point a moment.

1. I should say, first, that every belief worth holding must accord with the best certified facts of knowledge. It must be more than a speculation, however plausible; more than a surmise, however ingenious. This is the primary significance of truth,—accordance with what is established; that is, with facts; for they alone are entitled to be called established. Prophecies cease and "knowledge" passes away; but truth is ever the same. The old derivation of truth was from trou, to think or opine. The truth is what one troweth,—what I trow, what you trow, what anybody happens to trow. It is reduced to guess work, notion, fancy; to a matter of speculation. But, since we have known Sanscrit, and have been able to go to the root of the matter, we have discovered that the word comes from dhru,—that which is fixed or certain; not by usage or habit, but by the author of Nature. Would you know the truth about God, let the theologians go; never heed what the Church says, or the Scripture, or the rule of tradition. Read the tablets of the earth, listen to the silent speech of the stars, ponder the order of the world, collect as many data as possible from the experience of human life, and draw inferences from those. Your theory of God, though it satisfied every proof text, and fell in line with the theologians of every communion, would be worthless, if it could not face an earthquake or a rattlesnake, or adjust itself to the economies of a rose-leaf. A hundred texts will not outweigh a single fact. Mr. Talmage thinks to deal a deadly blow at Universalism by showing that it is not countenanced by the Bible. What if it is not? If it explains the sense or soul of the order under which men live, it can dispense with such biblical applause; if it cannot explain that order, all Scriptures of the nations will not save it. Mr. Mill decides that the facts of the world, so far as we discern them, do not warrant the belief in a God perfect in goodness, wisdom, and power; the misery of mankind makes it evident, he says, that He is wanting either in justice and benevolence, or in the ability to carry out the dictates of His true and loving nature. If so it be, so we must confess, though the confession be a scandal in the view of the Christian world. Ludwig Büchner contends that the facts of the universe do not justify an intelligent belief in any God outside of humanity; and Schopenhauer was of opinion that the only deity the facts of the case imply is the kind of deity who usually goes by the name of de il; inasmuch as, on the whole, this is the worst possible world. These are all very modern opinions, in their new shape. Some of them must be untrue. But they have this merit, at least, that they do claim to be sustained by facts, and the men who promulgate them are earnest in the study of facts.

And this is the most remarkable peculiarity in the advocacy of new beliefs,—a disposition to seek and find warrant for them in Nature. The belief in providence, the belief in human nature, the belief in a hereafter, the belief in moral laws and moral ends in the aims and purposes of creation,—one and all, refer to this as their ultimate guarantee. It is a hopeful sign for the future; for it indicates that, in the coming time, we shall know what we believe, and why we believe it.

2. Another test of true thought is that it tends to increase human happiness. It may be a question whether happiness be the end and aim of life, but at all events unhappiness is not. To make men happy may not be the highest achievement of a religious system, but a religious system that has no effect to make men happy will scarcely stand justified in the regards of mankind. If it could be proved that the Roman Catholic faith had in its palmy days blessed its portion of the human family with the consolations that all men crave, quieted their fears, raised their hopes, quickened their affections, allayed the poignancy of their sufferings, healed their animosities, promoted domestic unity and social fellowship, strengthened the bonds of amity between orders and classes, mitigated the evils of violence and rapacity, and created a garden where there had been a wilderness before,—if it could be made to appear that it had lightened life's burdens, and taken from death its terrors, we should be inclined to accord to it, so far, our cordial sympathy. We should not wrangle over the form of a government that produced an orderly, peaceful, prosperous, thriving, improving society; that opened the sources of plenty, set on foot measures for the general recreation, and removed the causes of penury, suffering, discontent, and dissension. Whether it were called despotism or democracy would matter little. If any government could promise these good things with fair hope of realizing them, it would be universally acceptable. If any religion could promise this, and give ground for thinking it could accomplish it,—call the religion what you might, Brahman, Buddhist, Hebrew, Mohammedan, Italian, Greek, English, German,—the name would signify little. If Calvinists could produce a happy family as the result of their system, the speculative horrors of the system would be excused, as we excuse the ugly look of the surgeon's instruments, as he spreads them out to be handy for an operation that is to save a precious life. The chemist says that the blackest substances produce the brightest flame.

The light that nightly illumines our dwellings is a product of noxious gases which men cannot inhale and live. The most delicious fragrance is from flowers that have their roots deep in ooze and mire. So if peace of spirit, loveliness of disposition, tranquillity of mood, could be shown to proceed through some fine alchemy from total corruption, eternal decrees, vicarious suffering, everlasting damnation, we should marvel at the law which brought such delightful effects from such hideous origins, but should gratefully take the result, washing our hands of responsibility for the causes.

What if religious systems were to vie with one another in their endeavors to make the world happier, accepting heartily this test of their value! Put all other considerations aside, drop all other lines of defence or advocacy, and see what you can do, with the tools in your hands, not to relieve want by almsgiving, not to deaden pain by stupefaction, but to make men's lives more sunny, their week days less painful, their Sundays less dismal, their toil less harassing, their joys less infrequent and unsatisfactory, their apprehensions fewer, their outlooks pleasanter. We will look on with impartial regard, and will honestly award the prize to the successful champion. And if it be the Pope of Rome who shows us first an Italy sunny with song, and a Spain glowing with vineyards and gorgeous with a beauty it has only dreamed of in the past, then in his favor we will lay our prejudices aside. But it will be of no use to show us the reverse of all this, and then point to his dim antiquity in justification of his claims. For whether or no men ought to like happiness better than anything else, they unquestionably do, and with or without leave of the almanac will accept the sunniest faith as the most rational.

3. A third test of a true system is its effect to make men human, to repress crime, discourage violence, disconcert fraud, reduce the caste spirit to its lowest terms, promote the sympathy of kindness, and substitute equity for injustice. A system that alienates, separates, erects barriers between classes, foments strife and division, arouses jealousies and antipathies,—though it had every sanction of antiquity and authority on its side, though it could quote the whole of Scripture for its purpose, and point to long lines of priests and the allegiance of races of men—would have no claim to the attention of thoughtful people. What can a doctrine say for itself that claims by virtue of its divine superiority the right to put down other doctrines by force, and so keep up a perpetual war of opinion, a war raging over the whole area of human nature, war of spirit and brain, and very likely of blood too? Is not that pretension alone sufficient to condemn any system, new or old, and to consign it at once to the limbo of obsolete errors, fictions, and superstitions? What can a doctrine say for itself that fosters a sectarian spirit, creates a new and insolent aristocracy on the basis of Orthodox belief or conduct, establishes an order of nobility whose badge is membership in an evangelical church, and grants to this nobility the privilege of looking down with scorn on people whom, without the least regard to their intellectual, social, or personal character, they choose to call heretics, infidels, or atheists? Is such a system to be sustained on the ground that it is extensively believed and is accepted by the best fashion of the modern world? I do not mean to say that opinions may not be true in reason without reference to their social consequences. But their social consequences come in as part of the mass of considerations which justify them to reason. They are that portion of the considerations which touch us most nearly, the portion with which, being in immediate contact, we are immediately concerned. By applying them to systems of opinion, applying them honestly and wisely, how many beliefs that agitate and perplex mankind would disappear forever!

We have found ourselves in the number of those who profess the newest style of opinions. Not because they are the newest; that on the whole makes them suspected. They have no weight of authority from general consent or wide experience behind them; they are untried; criticism has not subjected them to its laws. It is quite possible, nay, it is more than possible; it is probable, it is more than probable; it is certain, that passion for novelty, restless love of freedom, conceit, flightiness, and lawlessness, have a share in their making. The company in which we find ourselves is not in every respect the most desirable, in as far as it comprises so many who have broken away from intellectual restraint, and, like school boys, forget everything serious in their pleasure at having a holiday. The mental atmosphere is thick with wild speculations, fanciful theories, visionary dreams, born of the simple exuberance of liberty, the ecstasy of emancipation. The newness excuses everything. Philosophies multiply in the teeming brains of men and women who, having clipped the shells of their new birth, soar like butterflies, assuming their sunny day to be an eternity, and the fields they fly over to be the world. Without knowledge, or culture, or training in the schools and methods of thought, ignorant of the commonplaces of information, and of the first principles of reasoning, they fling out upon the air their bubbles of conjecture, and fancy them, as they float away brilliant in the sunshine, to be precursors of the aerial vessel that is to carry us across oceans and mountain ranges, annihilating the time and space which have so tormented common minds. Heedless of the practical tendencies of their speculations, or rather taking the beneficence of those tendencies for granted because the speculations themselves look so fair, they scatter their seeds of feeling about, careless whether they fall on rocks, or on thorn-bushes, or on sandy ground; believing in fact that, as they fall, they will pulverize the rocks into soil, and transform the brambles into rose-bushes, and convert the sand into rich loam.

The thoughtful will remember that truth is a serious thing, found with trouble and kept with cost, a treasure that they are no more likely to have than the Spanish mountaineer, the Italian monk, the Turkish devotee, or the Indian Yogi, unless they dig for it, and are not likely to commend to others except they can make it really commendable by its purity. Ours is a position of peculiar danger from carelessness and lightness of mind. If any people should be in earnest, they should be who, applying new methods to an old world, suggesting new interpretations of an old problem, gazing with new eyes into the face of the "Ancient of Days," with no support but their sincerity and no cheer but their faith, undertake to draw fresh water from the "Rock of Ages."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE PRACTICAL TEACHINGS OF THE "NEW PHILOSOPHY."

This title fairly belongs to that system of which the First Principles began to appear by instalments in 1860, and of which the earliest and but rudimentary statements were made by its founder, Mr. Herbert Spencer, in 1852. Taking the latter date, we can say that this system, being but twenty-three years old, is plainly not materialism, which, going back only to Democritus and Leucippus, boasts of full as many centuries. The whole tenor of the writings of Fiske, Huxley, Tyndall, and Spencer should however be sufficient, even without their frequent and earnest disclaimers, to satisfy every intelligent and candid reader, that these great thinkers are not defending any form of that ancient, and we are tempted to say obsolescent, theory, but a new one, standing midway between it and its almost equally aged rival, with which the names of Plato, Coleridge, and Emerson have become so famous. Neither transcendentalism nor materialism can claim any part in Mr. Spencer's discovery, that the law of progress is evolution, which in his own words "is a change from an indefinite incoherent homogeneity to a definite coherent heterogeneity, through continuous differentiations and integrations." In other words, progress is a change from that which has sameness of nature and is indefinite and unstable, to that which varies in nature but is definite and stable; a change consisting not only in the increase of differences, but, what is yet more important, in the multiplication of individualities. Such paraphrases are necessary, because the new theory needs new and peculiar terms.

And two of the other most important principles of the new philosophy are shown to hold the golden mean between idealism and materialism, by the ease with which they may be expressed in familiar words. Materialism holds, as its name implies, that matter is eternal; and mind, its outgrowth and product, is dependent on it. Prof. Moleschott says: "Thought is a movement of matter." Mr. Underwood, in his "Plea for Materialism," published in THE INDEX of July 13, 1872, declares that—"We have no acquaintance with, no proof of, anything in the universe except matter." It needs no quotations to show how justly the idealists are called so from their fulness of faith, that mind is eternal and has created matter, which depends upon it. Indeed this faith can sometimes with difficulty be restrained from declaring that ideas are the only realities. The new philosophy agrees with both her venerable sisters, so far as to recognize that both matter and mind exist, and each of them depends on the other. She differs from them both, in not claiming to have measured eternity, though she asserts that both matter and mind are, so far as she can see, permanent in substance in spite of their changes of form, while she finds no reason to believe that either of them has created the other, and therefore accepts them as different manifestations of one unknown reality, or, in Tyndall's words, as "two opposite faces of the self same mystery."

And, again; our ideas of God, duty, and immortality are asserted by transcendentalism to be invaluable and inexplicable intuitions. Materialism denies their value. Evolutionism asserts it; and, what is still better, proves it, by explaining their origin. These ideas we inherit from early generations, when they were but rudimentary and indefinite inferences from experience, through later generations, in which they were continually enlarged, revised, and strengthened, so that they appear innate, intuitive, and transcendental; and indeed are so, as far as our individual experience is concerned, though in reality they are just as much a heritage from our forefathers as is the shape of our insteps, or the color of our eyes. If we can realize how slowly and toilsomely these ideas have thus been formed within us, we shall value them most highly.

And these three principles of progress through differentiations and integrations of the equal importance of mind and matter, and of the formation of our highest ideas by inheritance, have, in many respects, much practical worth.

As we learn how necessarily differences increase with progress, we shall know how to love those who disagree with us, and how to honor all who teach patiently and sincerely as our fellow-workers for the truth. The consistent evolutionist will not merely tolerate his adversaries, but rejoice in all that they are doing to widen that knowledge and strengthen that mental activity, through which alone can we hope ever to reach clear and stable faith. Perhaps the new philosophy can here merely claim to embody and justify the best usage of our age. But this claim, if not a higher one, can also be made in regard to those important reforms in education, which can be defended only on the ground of the equality of matter, or body, with mind. One of these changes is the use of object-lessons, botanical analyses, laboratory work, and drawing on the blackboard, in place of the old way of going round and round inside of the text-book. Even an idealist, like Bartol, knows that "he that can sketch an object with a pencil understands it better than he who recites all its titles in every tribe under the sun." And every good speaker or writer knows the value of illustrations drawn from what is visible and tangible.

A second change, also, in harmony with the dependence of the mind on the body, is the increasing sense of the necessity of healthy surroundings to intellectual, moral, and religious development. We are beginning to see that the student must bathe sufficiently, and have plenty of good food, fresh air, out-door exercise, and sound sleep, or his study is likely to defeat itself.

And recognition of the complementary fact, that the body depends reciprocally on the mind, will help us to realize that hard study not only is compatible with sound health, but, when it does not hinder proper sleep and exercise, is even wholesome in a high degree. College statistics and biographical records show that diligent students are unusually healthy and long-lived. There are plenty of such facts as that Wolf, the great transcendentalist and mathematician, lived to be ninety-five, and Hobbes, the great materialist, to be ninety-one; while Evelyn was eighty-six, Newton eighty-five, Voltaire, Franklin, and Bentham eighty-four, Goethe eighty-two, and Wordsworth eighty; a date already surpassed by one who differs from him nowhere so much as in that sympathy with all progress which keeps Bryant ever young. And in still other fields of thought we find Sir Charles Lyell reaching seventy-eight, the elder Herschel almost eighty-four, and Alexander von Humboldt almost ninety; all three among the hardest students on record.

As activity of body benefits the mind, so activity of mind benefits the body. The new philosophy is likely to establish respect for an active mind in an active body, as one of the best rules of health.

And this philosophy has still better work to do. As Pope Alexander VI. divided the new world between Spain and Portugal, so the Church wishes today to partition off the new world of thought between science and transcendentalism, and make the latter her viceroy over the rich regions of human duties and rights. But science cannot afford to let her rival hold the citadel and metropolis of thought. Materialism has tried again and again to storm the walls, but the attack was made from too low ground to have any chance of success.

Meantime the increasing anarchy in the great city calls urgently for a new and stronger rule, and the new philosophy has only to prove that she can give this without sacrificing any of the old reverence for justice, purity, and love, to have the gates thrown open at her call. Such proof has not yet been fully given, or at least not yet universally been accepted; but the need of it is so pressing, that the writer ventures to offer what seem to him likely to form its chief constituents.

There are five facts, which, taken separately, are not unfamiliar, and are indeed so plain, that no teacher of morality can afford to disregard them, whatever metaphysical or theological theories he may mingle with them. Taken together, they are sufficient to furnish a foundation on which morality can stand alone, and in all probability the only foundation on which she can long stand amid the many changes going on so rapidly.

The first of these facts is that man cannot improve, or even exist, except in society. The qualities which enable men and women to live and work together—like patience, courage, parental affection, domestic fidelity, neighborly sympathy, and self-sacrifice—are thus necessarily encouraged, and developed as conditions of the existence even of savages, while the demands of civilization cause these virtues to be handed down from generation to generation in ever-increasing purity and power, so that they are born with us, and form our best inheritance. A second fact is, that from the experience of the race that some acts of ours increase and others diminish our health, we inherit a growing tendency to like the healthy and dislike the unhealthy ones, so that it comes to pass, that, in the words of Herbert Spencer, [Psychology, I., 284]: "Pleasures are the incentives to life-supporting acts, and pains the deterrents from life-destroying acts. The ever deepening experience that virtuous actions are in the highest degree life-supporting, and promotive of happiness, thus makes virtue more and more agreeable to each generation of men. Hence the so-called innate desire to do right which is one of the noblest characteristics of man."

And with these two facts, of the inherited experience that virtue is beneficial, and the inherited habit of liking what is beneficial, should be considered a third, discovered by Hartley more than a century ago, but now gaining new significance,—that of the association of ideas. What we have often done with a purpose we come eventually to do without one, while the beneficial or injurious consequences become even stronger marked, as the original good or bad motive disappears. Thus the miser sinks from loving money as a means of comfort to loving it, even in spite of comfort, for its own sake; while the brave and honest man rises from being so, because courage and honesty are necessities of his existence, into loving them disinterestedly and conscientiously. We can hardly say that any one man has made this great ascent; but, rather, that the race has made it through countless generations, each a little higher than its predecessor, until it has been done so completely, that this generation finds some difficulty in admitting that it has really taken place.

These three facts of the inheritance not only of the knowledge that virtue is necessary to human existence, but of the habit of finding what is thus necessary pleasant, and of the ascent by association of ideas from loving virtue as a requisite of life to loving her for her own sake, are in perfect harmony; but their full value will not be realized until we consider two kindred truths.

One of these is, that no one can be fully, permanently, and securely happy unless everybody else is happy also. Your neighbors' wants threaten your abundance; their misery calls for your sympathy and care, their vice and ignorance limit your virtue and knowledge; and their diseases hinder your growth in health. To have all the happiness you desire you must make happiness universal. Thus originates the love of universal happiness, which gradually rises into disinterestedness by association of ideas.

A still more important fact is that only the higher forms of happiness can become universal. Men cannot all be happy in oppressing each other, for the oppressed are unhappy in their misery, and even the oppressors in the danger of quarrelling among themselves. If all men sought to be happy in idleness and sensuality, many of them would suffer from lack, not only of these fancied luxuries, but of real necessities, while the rest would suffer from disease and mutual strife. It needs little argument to prove that only the noble or holy happiness which is founded on observance of great moral precepts, like those of self-control, self-culture, love, and justice, can be universal. Hopkins and Fairchild, in insisting on the importance of holy, rather than universal, happiness, have not made a distinction, but merely an explanation. And the evolutionist is not obliged to stop to calculate how far every action he thinks of would promote individual or universal happiness, but merely to ask himself, "Is this according to the known moral laws?" These laws having been proved by immeasurable experience to be the indispensable conditions of happiness, he follows them as promptly and reverently as if he thought them intuitively or supernaturally revealed; while for any case where they conflict or do not apply, he has a scientific test ready in the fundamental principle from which they are derived. This greatest happiness test he uses as he does his dictionary, not for every word he speaks or writes, but for every doubtful point he does not at once recognize as an example of known rules and universally accepted usage. He sometimes looks at tendency to promote happiness as a test to show what is right, but never as a motive to do what is right; for such a motive he has already in the desire to do what is right for its own sake. It would not be necessary to dwell on a distinction long ago clearly made by John Stuart Mill and Sir James Mackintosh, between the test and the motives enjoined by the derivative morality, if this fact were not so frequently overlooked by opponents, as it is for instance in Birks' Modern Utilitarianism, page 202.

To all candid criticism is respectfully submitted this presentation of the fine facts: that virtue is the indispensable condition of human life and happiness; that she thus becomes dear to man; that he rises by association of ideas to loving her for her own sake; that in the same way he comes to desire universal happiness, first, prudentially, but finally philanthropically; and that this desire leads him rightly to reverence the great moral laws. This statement is not, of course, presented as a finality, but merely as an adumbration of the truth, and as approximative proof of the right of the new philosophy to the throne on which she will yet sit to interpret the divine laws of duty, and declare to all men the way of honor, joy, and peace.

F. M. HOLLAND.

BARABOO, Wis.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S RELIGIOUS LIBERTY PLATFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—The rapping of somebody at the door of your sanctum, or some other incident, must certainly have made you miss one sentence or two in my letter to you which you kindly published on May 13; otherwise you would have seen that my "denying that Christianity is a sect," far from being, as you think, my "only" answer to your objection against the articles 4, 5 and 6 of my platform, is not, as I took care to say, "any integral part of my argument against the incorporation of sectarian societies and the validity of sectarian clauses in contracts." My defence of Christianity against the imputation of being a sect was, I said, "a mere personal explanation on my part, in order to enable your readers to know on what different grounds from yours I stand in this respect." I thought that "personal explanation" necessary, lest the prevailing, though perhaps mistaken, impression with regard to the character of THE INDEX, and my writing in it, should cause my position to be understood as one of hostility to Christianity, of which I am, on the contrary, an earnest adherent and defender. The proper course for you, therefore, would have been to leave unnoticed what I said about Christianity, or simply, as a matter of "personal explanation" on your part, to express your dissent from it; instead of limiting your argument to it, as if it were the "only point raised between us." This point was not "raised between us" at all; and, my arguments as to the points really "raised between us" remaining unanswered, a strict regard to the by-laws of dialectic tournament would only require me to restate them, and challenge refutation.

I. CHRISTIANITY NOT A SECT.

But my object being not so much to show myself drilled in dialectic by-laws as to make the public familiar with a new subject, by developing it in various ways, and with my views generally, I will suspend some of the rules, and first the one which prescribes unity of subject; so as to be enabled to deal with your own arguments, and first with your answer to the question, "Is not Christianity a sect?"

"It is unnecessary," you think, "in order to answer this question, to go into any speculation respecting Jesus, or his purposes, or his ideas." But I humbly submit that, in justice to Jesus merely as our departed fellow-man, nothing is more necessary, before we affix his name to any system, than to go into some speculation respecting him, and his purposes, and his ideas, so as to see whether that system be his or not. Should my name, or yours, be, without our authority, lengthened by some Greek or Latin suffix, and made to designate a doctrine with which we had respectively nothing to do, either of us would certainly resent this as the greatest wrong. Is Jesus called the Lamb of God to mean that he is the only man that everybody may without scruple kill and eat and insult living and dead? That inquiry, respecting Jesus, his purposes and his ideas, before we pronounce anything about him or affix his name to any doctrine or corporation, is simply, on the part of any one, treating another as we would be treated; but on my part it is, beside, an official duty, as I am made, by the apostolic succession of the imposition of hands, his representative, and must therefore know what I represent. The result of my inquiry is, as I stated, that Jesus taught no sectarian doctrines. The prophecies which made Israel, and him, as by his family connections Israel's legitimate king, the centre of all things which are God's glory and earth's peace, he accepted in a spiritual, symbolic sense which had nothing superstitious, any more than there is any superstition in the Free Masons, or any other symbolic society, developing the very same truths through the interpretation of the measures of Solomon's temple or of any other mystic emblem. The very same truths can also be taught and practiced purely and simply, without any emblem; and the question whether it be preferable to teach or practice them thus simply, or embody them in this or that emblem, or myth, or ritual, is a question of taste or expediency, which has nothing to do with sect. Christianity, as I said, is not a religious sect, but a religious order. A man might be a member of the Christian Order, and of ten other orders equally unsectarian, and worship God, besides, purely and simply in the communion of all that part of mankind which belongs to no orders of any sort, without any inconsistency.

II. CHRISTIANITY NOT A "CUTTING OFF FROM HUMANITY."

I do not agree with you that the word sect comes from "secrete, to cut off"; namely, "from the universal fellowship of man." But, even if it did, that would not show that Christianity is any such "cutting off," as Christianity is not a sect. The relation of Christianity to humanity is one not of exclusion, but of substantial identity with a mere modal difference, the difference that may exist between a sentence written in ordinary type and the same sentence written in Italics.

III. PROTESTANTISM AND ROMANISM EXTRANEOUS TO CHRISTIANITY.

As a bishop, as a representative of Christianity, I have a right to protest against your idea that Christianity can be referred as a coordinate variety to any common species, or as a coordinate species to any common genus, with Judaism, Mohammedanism, Presbyterianism, Episcopalianism, or Romanism; or any of them to it as their common genus or species. Christianity is a truth of an order so excellent as to entirely transcend the order of things to which all forms of error, such as these sects are, belong. When I speak thus, it is no new or peculiar opinion that I advance. All the Fathers of the Church and all the Councils agree with me. It will be enough for me to cite the Seventh Canon of the Second Ecumenic Council held A. D. 381, which clear, if not euphonious canon has been for fourteen hundred and ninety-four years the only ecclesiastical legislation on the status and admission of sectaries, and in fact is THE MAGNA CHARTER GRANTED BY THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH TO PROTESTANT SECTS OF ALL SORTS.

"7. Those who, from the heretics, add themselves to Orthodoxy and to the portion of the saved, are received by us according to the following order and custom. The Arians, the Macedonians, the Sabbatians, the Novatians, who call themselves Pure, the Aristerians, the Tessareskedecates or Tetrades, and the Apollinarists, we receive on their giving libels and anathematizing all heresy which does not think as the Catholic and Apostolic Church of God thinks, and on their being anointed with the holy Chrism on their forehead, eyes, nostrils, mouth, and ears; and while sealing them, we say: 'THE SEAL OF THE GIFT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.' But as to the Eunomians, who are baptized with one immersion only; and the Montanians, who are here called Phrygians; and the Sabellians who teach the confusing of the Father and the Son, and do several other grievous things; and all other heretics (for there are many here, especially those who are coming from the region of the Galatians),—all those who from among them wish to add themselves to Orthodoxy, we receive as heathens; and on the first day we make them Christians, and on the second day catechumens; then on the third day we exorcise them by breathing three times into their face and ears; and so we make them catechumens, and we made them remain for a considerable time in the Church and hear the Scriptures; and then we baptize them."

IV. THE LAW INCOMPETENT TO SEE IN CHRISTIANITY ANYTHING BUT A SECT.

But my assertion with regard to the incomparable excellence of Christianity has, as I said, and can have nothing to do with my argument in favor of disestablishing sects in America and England, and invalidating sectarian clauses in contracts. It can have no bearing upon that question for two reasons:—

1. While Christianity is not a sect, it stands with regard to sects, such as Presbyterianism, Episcopalianism, Romanism, Mormonism, in a relation of flat contradiction. In thus contradicting them it is right, while they are wrong; but its being right and their being wrong are facts which lie entirely beyond the cognizance of the civil courts, unless we give the courts jurisdiction over spiritual matters. Christianity, therefore, has one external point of resemblance with the sects in this, that it contradicts them as they contradict each other. This point of resemblance is all that the courts are able to see, being incompetent to decide upon the incomparable superiority of its spiritual claims.

2. The possibility of Unitarianism and Free Religion, with both of which I sympathize, being treated by the Courts as sects under the legislation which I advocate, has been by me more than hinted at; and, far from deprecating such an eventuality, I said I would advise both Unitarian and Free Religionists to demand to be treated purely and simply as sects in a civil sense, though in a spiritual sense I assert that they are not sects. I would say the same, only with very much more emphasis, with regard to the Christian Church. The reason why Christianity is not a sect is that it is the true religion; and whether it be the true religion or not, and therefore not a sect or one, is a question which lies entirely beyond the sphere of the civil courts, and which it belongs only to the Christian Church herself to determine. All pretension, on the part of a civil court, to decide whether the Christian Church at large, or a particular Christian society, be true or not, is an assumption of spiritual jurisdiction by the temporal power, to which the Christian Church could never submit without abdicating her independence, and becoming what the Protestant sects of England and America are: mere bureaus of the State government, their ecclesiastical decisions being reversible by the civil courts, and their respective creeds being enforceable against their members by the sheriff: just as in Germany the same official schoolmaster, himself perhaps a free-thinker, is compelled to compel three different species of pupils to recite in succession three contradictory catechisms, the Lutheran, the Reformed, and the Popish; and looks up in the same room those pupils who have "got mixed."

V. SECTARIANISM NOT IN ALL SENSES NOR ALWAYS IMMORAL.

As I said, I do not believe that the word sect comes from secare, "cut off," namely, "from the universal fellowship of Man." There are overwhelming reasons to believe that it comes from sequi to follow, namely, this or that leader, which is not quite so bad, and in the conditions in which human nature is placed, often necessary in politics, in science, and why not in religion? In all matters in which we have to act, but are not competent to form a judgment of our own, we must act upon the judgment of others whose competency we acknowledge, as a court which acknowledges itself incompetent to judge of medical matters will appoint a medical commission and act upon its report. So will I, having to vote in a city with whose local affairs I am not thoroughly acquainted, be influenced in my vote by the opinion of some old resident in whose judgment I have confidence; and that is sectarianism.

VI. SECTARIAN BRIBERY ALWAYS IMMORAL.

By his judgment, I have said, not by his money; for that would be bribery. In religious matters as well as in political ones, it is not sectarianism, when conscientious and free from mercenary influences, it is sectarian bribery which is immoral.

VII. THE LAW AS IT IS SANCTIONS AND ENFORCES BRIBERY.

I see this bribery in all clauses in private contracts granting temporal advantages on sectarian conditions. I see it in the chartering or in any way incorporating sectarian societies, so as to enable them to enforce their respective creeds on their refractory members by temporal penalties or the loss of temporal advantages. All legislatures have too keen a sense of honor not to resent and visit with exemplary punishment any attempt to influence the vote of their members by bribery. For a legislature to force upon religion and Christianity a dishonor and a nuisance to which it deems itself infinitely too good to submit, is exactly the same injustice as if it forbade an offensive sewer to be built near the State House, but ordered it to be turned into my premises.

CONCLUSION.

Now, then, I have granted to you that, whether Christianity be a sect or not in its spiritual essence, it can only appear as a sect to the carnal eye, the only eye which civil courts have any business to have. I have not granted to you that sectarianism is always and in all senses immoral, but this is indifferent to our argument as long as you admit that "this is a kind of immorality with which the law cannot interfere." This principle, however, which you admit in one sentence, you seem to gainsay in another by opposing my three last articles, which say nothing else, and have no other object than to prevent the law from interfering with religious liberty. Of their being to that effect I can give no better proof than letting them speak for themselves:—

ARTICLE 4. No incorporation of sectarian societies.

I submit to the whole of mankind that to incorporate sectarian societies is a dealing with them, and that not to incorporate them is a not dealing with them.

ARTICLE 5. All clauses in private contracts, granting temporal advantages on sectarian conditions, to be null and void in the eyes of the law.

I take the whole of mankind as my witness that to consider a thing as null and void is a not dealing with it, and that to consider it as valid and enforce it as such is a dealing with it.

ARTICLE 6. All property at present owned by sectarian societies to become, on a day to be fixed by law, the absolute civil property of the members of each such society, irrespective of religious conditions.

The principles embodied in articles 4 and 5 once admitted, the abuses having grown under the present legislation must, of course, be dealt with and put to an end. Of this there are only two means, confiscation by the State, a vulgar and violent process repeated to nausea by all governments in succession, and the new and elegant process which I recommend for the United States.

I remain, dear sir, truly yours,

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, June 1, 1875.

THE PATRIOTIC OUTPOURING.

No man who loves his country can read unmoved the reports that come to us from Boston. Certainly no Baltimorean can read them without feeling his heart swell, and realizing that the last prejudice, no matter how bitter it has been, is being expelled, and the groove it made obliterated forever. Massachusetts has taken Maryland to her bosom with an impulse as grand as it is generous, and Maryland's heart thrills and throbs a joyful response. Great communities are embracing in spirit, and the affections of the people are being welded into an endless family tie.

The longing, the yearnings of two great sections are finding expression at Bunker Hill, and are reconsecrating all who come, and all who are represented, as Americans and brothers. The quickened pulses and the filling eyes around the spot where Warren fell leap along the telegraph to hearts and eyes turned as proudly and as hopefully to the North. Every kindness there touches a chord of gratitude here. Every stirring strain that fires the blood upon Massachusetts soil thrills a Southerner, and draws him nearer as a brother restored. Every emotion there is reflected here to-day.

Baltimore, above all, feels this family reunion. With manly candor and chivalrous impulse she recalls the fact that Boston has something to forgive, and that a testimonial from her means generosity, fraternity, and patriotism indeed. She cannot forget that in an hour of madness she lifted her hand against her brother, and struck him down in her streets. Had it been in the open fields of war she would have less to reproach herself with, since the 19th of April would have been but one of the mass of human errors which make up the aggregate contributions to a mistaken sense of duty. But happening as it did, and under the peculiar circumstances of that incident, she feels that she has something more than the rest of the South of which to repent, and for which to be forgiven.

Like a true and noble brother, Boston forgets even this and extends its cordial arms and holds our representatives in a warm embrace. Truly, we are brothers. Only brothers in heart, in spirit and in faith could do this. The more prominent the Confederate the more generous is her greeting; and Baltimore, whose one sin stands conspicuous above the rest, is assured above the rest with a special demonstration. Who is there now who would oppose the going of the Fifth Regiment? Who now doubts the wisdom of that trip? Who now can belittle the influences it exerts? Who that does not rejoice that we have seized the proffered hand, and received its genial pressure, and partaken of its reassuring hospitality? None but the vilest demagogue who would trade upon the passions of the people, and profit by the misfortunes of his country, would have it otherwise; would fail to see the significance of this event, or would find no cause for rejoicing over this happy augury. The people are coming together; Nature and nationality are speaking frankly, and unbosoming Americans under the inspiration of a glorious opportunity. We feel that a brighter sun has arisen upon the republic, and a happier day dawned upon the country.—Baltimore Evening News.

MANY YEARS ago, Mr. Swain, then editor of the Public Ledger, was hailed at the corner of Eighth and Chestnut Streets, by a very excited individual who informed him, in the most emphatic terms, "I have stopped your paper, sir;" and proceeded to explain the why and wherefore, all the time gesticulating wildly. "My gracious, sir, you don't say so! Come with me to the office, and let us see if we cannot remedy the matter. It grieves me that any one should stop my paper." Arriving at the office, Mr. Swain said, "Why, my dear sir, everything seems to be going on here as usual; I thought you had stopped my paper." Then and there the excited gentleman, whom the long walk had by that time partly cooled, said that he had stopped taking his "one copy" of the Public Ledger. Mr. Swain was profuse in his apologies for having misunderstood the meaning of his late subscriber's word, and regretted that he had given him the tramp from Eighteenth Street to Third. The gentleman went on his way home, a wiser if not a better man. Before he left, however, he ordered that the Ledger be still sent to his address.

A NEW ORLEANS minister recently married a colored couple, and at the conclusion of the ceremony remarked: "On such occasions as this it is customary to kiss the bride; but in this case we omit it." To this unclerical remark the indignant bridegroom very pertinently replied: "On such occasions as this it is customary to give the minister ten dollars; but in this case we will omit it."

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE ENGLISH CAPTAIN.

FROM THE DANISH OF CARL BAGGER.

BY JOHN SAVARY.

An English fleet was in the Danish sound.
But neither they nor yet the Swedes on shore
Could guess the riddle, whither was it bound?
They saw from Kronborg how the squadron bore
On to the entrance and then stopped surprise
Held them in doubt of the intended blow,
While dark foreboding like a cloud did rise,
And Denmark guessed and feared, but did not know.

All sails were furled; the water imaged back
The swaying palaces with haughty air;
Each oak colossus, hollow, huge, and black
With human beings was at anchor there.
The boys in blue looked anxious for a foe;
But none appeared, none answered their halloo.
A sailor is, in every land, you know,
A friend of laurels and red roses too.

On board the flag-ship, where the colors flew
Of the grand admiral in the morning breeze,
Unwonted stir and preparation grew
From early dawn—and men were thick as bees.
All brows were bent, all eyes stared on, when late
The chief appeared with orders closely sealed:
Lord Gambier opened them; the lot of fate
Leaped out, and news, important news revealed.

"Sail!"—sounded harsh the order of the king—
"Where Denmark's fleet secure at anchor lies;
What craft you see, that out of harbor bring,
And make war well, but offer peace the prize.
The Danes have built a fortress strong and new:
Some other power before us might get in;
Be quick and bold,—King George doth promise you
Abundant spoil, if you the stronghold win."

The news like wildfire ran among the tars;
Cheer rose on cheer above the roomy decks;
The crews throughout gave vent to loud hurrahs,
Glory and plunder every one expects.
But one young captain there, of all on board,
One only felt not joy, but rather grief;
He kept his silent thought like sheathed sword,
Till he permission craved to speak the chief.

"Sir Admiral"—the captain thus began—
"I was but young when first I crossed the seas;
At fourteen years, with Nelson in the van
At Aboukir, I snuffed the battle-breeze.
West Indian corsairs I have tracked afar,
I chased and seized,—the galleys did the rest.
A scar or two I brought from Trafalgar,
But these were hid by orders on my breast.

"What England did in war against the French,
Historians blazon with becoming pride;
What I, untaught in battle yet to blench,
Did to the pirate—or I gaily cried,
'God and King George!'—and, firing every time,
I hulled with shot Napoleon's ships on flame:
Ah, that was glory, that was not a crime;
But this—'tis robbery—I die for shame!"

"I swore to follow, keeping still in sight
The flag of England; where it goes, I go
E'en to the death in fair and honest fight,
But scorn to take advantage of a foe.
The glass of policy distorts the view,
The magnet guides a sailor through the wars:
He steers by Justice for a compass true,
And takes his bearings by God's sun and stars.

"Yet none shall say mine oath I ever broke,
Sworn to defend the flag whose folds still kiss
The breeze of heaven above our castled oak;
The fleet is not in danger, honor is:
Sail on—for me, I shan't obey the king,
Although he spake as Emperor of Rome:
Yea, God forbid,—I seek some other thing,
Adventures new and strange and far from home."

Then overboard he threw himself, and drowned.
Rash fool! you call him dreamer weak and vain.
The noble swimmer to the bottom found
His way beneath the Kattegatt's watery plain.
In depths unstirred by angry voices' strife
He stays mid wreck and sea-weed floating loose;
No sound of battle can recall to life
The generous captain sunk in salt-sea ooze.

The fleet right on to Copenhagen sails.
But far from where the battle was to be,
The unknown captain lay; the sea-mew wails
His blue-cold corpse at bottom of the sea.
When to the surface he rose up once more,
Some Swedish fishermen, on starry night,
Found him and carried in their boat ashore,
And staked his epaulets by candle-light.

On Skane's shore to north of Helsingborg,
They buried him in a renowned land.
There were no falling tears, no rising surge
Of human sorrow: but the hard-ribbed sand,
His grave, gulls trample on; yet there, they say,
On misty moonlight nights a wraith is seen
To beckon where the Scottish highlands lay,
For homeward he will seek the Island green.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 26.

W. H. Graham, $2.25; William Ellis, $10; Cash, $2.25; Wm. Dudgeon, $5; Anton Bransch, $20; Seavey, Foster, & Bowman, $39; F. A. Maxse, $7.10; Cash, 85 cents; J. G. Dodge, $1.50; J. H. Terens, 20 cents; John Range, 20 cents; A. Wagner, 20 cents; F. Heyroth, 20 cents; J. Peter & Co., $3; C. Sterne, $1.60; S. & H. Vogel, $1.60; E. Fezandie, $3; M. Shove, $3.20; Charles Bonsall, $3; Marvin Kent, $3.20; S. F. Schild, $3.20; John Hendrie, $1; N. M. Hatch, $1.60; Mary M. Singleton, $4.27; M. M. Secor, $5; H. T. Appleby, $3.20; Electa Halcomb, $2.75; J. L. Davis, $1.60; N. Colby, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 1, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

A LETTER from Charlottesville, Va., from a teacher who is just leaving the work in which she has served for nine years, gives the following cheering words: "When I look back over the nine years I have been here, I can hardly believe that this is the same place. In my impatience and haste it has often seemed as if the wheels of progress had ceased to move; but when I remember the spring I came here nine years ago, the change is very apparent. In those times I used to write two, three, and four letters per day for the colored people. Now I am never called upon, as there is scarcely a family in which they have not some one who can wield the pen. Then it was a rare thing for a colored man to have a home of his own. Now I can count dozens of neat cottages (in sight of my window) built and owned by colored men. Although there is much to discourage and sadden, the prospect is cheering, for I truly believe the colored people are improving mentally, morally, religiously, and physically, and with the colored people I feel that the South must rise or fall. I am glad to give my testimony of the cheerful side, although I do not ignore the side of ignorance, superstition, intemperance, dishonesty, etc., which are so frightfully prevalent here." Such teachers are the true peace-makers between North and South. E. D. C.

WHEN some three years and a half ago, in the "Impeachment of Christianity," we said that the Christian religion "teaches that Christ will save those alone who have lost all faith in themselves," and thus "extinguishes that noble sentiment of self-respect without which all high virtue is impossible," a highly respected critic thought we were unjust to Christianity. Quite unexpectedly the Hon. Henry Wilson, Vice-President of the United States, in a recent letter published by the Boston Advertiser, has (of course unintentionally) come to our rescue. Mr. Wilson is a Christian of mark in the Orthodox party, and is as well qualified to bear testimony on such subjects as any of his fellow-believers. The New York Tribune, it seems, has said "sundry unkind things" of him; but he recently allowed himself to be interviewed by a Tribune reporter, answering his questions with suavity and fulness. A Washington journal, not named by Mr. Wilson, is disgusted with his complaisance, which it declares may be "excellent Christianity," but is neither "self-respect" nor "manliness." To this Mr. Wilson replies by pleading the duty of forgiveness, and says: "If I can act in the spirit of 'excellent Christianity,' I can afford to let my 'self-respect' and my 'manliness' take care of themselves." Whether it was Henry Wilson the Christian or Henry Wilson the politician who pocketed the vilifications of the Tribune, and meekly submitted to be afterwards catechized by it for its own purposes, we do not inquire; perhaps it was a "little of both." But what interests us is the relative value which this Christian statesman explicitly places upon "excellent Christianity" on the one hand, and upon "self-respect" and "manliness" on the other. He evidently expects that his own sentiments on this point will be echoed and applauded by his Christian fellow-citizens, as we do not doubt they have been. The only reason we refer to his letter at all is that his Christian consciousness, reflecting very faithfully, we think, the Christian consciousness of all ages, clouds and darkens the natural perception that manly and womanly self-respect is the one great jewel of human character, which should be guarded as above all price, whatever else is sacrificed or lost. He who "lets 'self-respect' and 'manliness' take care of themselves" has nothing else that is worth taking care of at all.

THE LITERARY USE OF THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

In the subjoined letter, Mr. Frothingham is so kind as to correct our misunderstanding of his recent article on "The Bible as a Text-Book."

NEW YORK, June 25, 1875.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

In your article in the last INDEX (June 24th) on "The Bible as a School Book," you fall into a misapprehension of my meaning, which, though trifling, may as well be corrected. "If we understand him," you say, "Mr. Frothingham would at present either leave the Bible in use as a book of Divine Revelation, or else have it used as a literary text-book." Certainly, if the choice lay between these two alternatives, I should choose the latter rather than banish the book entirely. But not having, as my article frankly declared, the smallest hope that the Bible would, in good faith, within any assignable period, be admitted to use as a text-book, my opinion, often and emphatically expressed, is that the book should be disused altogether in the public schools, till such time as it can be used as other literature is used. My article was suggested not by your essential position, with which I agree, but by the wording of your third "Demand," which had been criticised as too sweeping. The use of the Bible as a text-book, or the recommendation of such use, would prove that radicals do respect and value the Bible as a product of the human mind, and oppose its present use, on dogmatic grounds purely; in other words, that they object to the use now made of the book, not to the book itself.

Faithfully yours,

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

It appears that there is no essential difference between Mr. Frothingham's views and our own on this subject. The fourth of the "Demands of Liberalism," like the rest, was designed to apply to the present time, not to that remote period when the scriptures and institutions of Christianity will be universally considered as natural products of human faculties. No practical movement to use the Bible in the public schools as a text-book of any kind could be honestly carried out to-day, or for many long years; because the prevalent opinion of the character of that book is such as to render it certain that the ostensible literary use of it would be a mere blind or cover for a furtive religious use of it. When the time comes for the scientific teaching of Comparative Religion in our higher educational institutions, the Bible must be studied just as much as the Koran or the Analects of Confucius; though we doubt whether such a study as that could ever be pursued with advantage by scholars within the limits of the public school age. This, however, as we conceive, is the only important use that could well be made of the Bible as a text-book; namely, as the great authority on Jewish and Christian mythology. As literature merely, the Bible will have so many rivals that it could only be one of numerous text-books in that department. Mr. Conway's most admirable Anthology introduces quite as much of the Bible, perhaps, as is necessary for literary purposes.

But the case is quite otherwise with regard to the historical use of the Bible in schools. We should as soon think of treating the Iliad or the Aeneid as history, as we should of treating the Bible in that way. The constant supernatural element alone deprives it of all historical pretensions. Until subjected to a critical process at which the believer's hair must stand on end, it would be abuse of the young mind to teach Scripture stories as credible narratives. The Bible is no more history than a bushel of unshelled corn is a crisp johnny-cake.

When judged by the true canons of literature and history, the Bible-bubble will shrink back into small dimensions, and no longer be kept at its present state of inflation by the breath of superstition. The really admirable writing in the Scriptures would fill an astonishingly small number of pages, though these few pages will live as long as the alphabet itself. The Bible as a whole has value only in the eyes of Christian credulity, of poetic imagination, and of scientific criticism. It is best to accustom the public as soon as possible to these inevitable conclusions, which, however, are not the ground on which the demand for the exclusion of the Bible from the schools properly rests,—that is, the simple equity of the case. It gives us great pleasure to be corrected by Mr. Frothingham as to the intended and real purport of his article, and to find that his influential name cannot be quoted on the wrong side of this very important public question.

An article of our own in THE INDEX of February 26, 1870, called out by a brief communication in the same issue, is so germane to this subject that we venture to reproduce it here. It will be seen that our views are not new ones, but were fully expressed over five years ago:—

QUESTIONS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Will you oblige me with answers to the following questions?

1st. Is it your belief that the Bible should be utterly excluded from the public schools, even as a text-book, or are you only opposed to the forced reading of it as an exercise in which all must join?

2nd. Do you believe that the law should prohibit all use of the book, as it does immoral or licentious works?

3rd. If so, do you not believe that the Declaration of Independence, and such of the national hymns as allude to God, should likewise be excluded?

4th. Should not essays containing religious allusions, and declamations from Webster, Curran, Parker, and a host of others, containing like allusions, and especially speaking of God and heaven, also be prohibited?

5th. In fine, should not a censor be appointed, in order that all allusion to Deity or religious faith may be excluded from the school-room, lest the children should become impressed with the idea that this life is but a preparatory school from which humanity goes forth to a higher, nobler, and purer state of existence in a great hereafter?

I have carefully read your article, "Romish and American Education," but am unable to ascertain precisely to what extent you go. INQUIRER.

ANSWERS.

In another column will be found certain questions respecting the use of the Bible in the public schools, addressed to us by an unknown correspondent. It is the usual practice of editors to take no notice of anonymous communications—a practice we adopt. But we make an exception in the present case, and propose to answer these questions as unambiguously as possible.

1. The reading of the Bible should not be allowed as a religious exercise in schools supported by public taxes, for the simple reason that these taxes are imposed for educational, and not religious, purposes. No matter whether all the scholars are obliged to join in the exercise or not,—no matter whether all are obliged to listen to it or not,—the school taxes are raised under false pretences, if they are used for any but educational purposes. No religious exercise, whether reading from the Bible, singing hymns, offering prayer, or any other act of worship, can be permitted without converting the public schools into religious institutions to that extent. This general objection is strengthened by the facts that reading the Bible without comment is not only a religious, but also a Protestant Christian exercise; and that Catholics as well as Protestants, Jews and "infidels" as well as Christians, must pay the school taxes. We are therefore opposed to any and every use of the Bible in religious exercises in the schools.

But "Inquirer" suggests that the Bible may be used as a "text-book,"—thus betraying a half-consciousness that it ought not to be used in the schools for religious purposes; and, since halfness is the chief characteristic of Protestantism, we surmise that "Inquirer" is a Protestant. Text-book for what? Let us see.

For science? The Bible will hardly serve as a text-book for geology in these days, or for astronomy, or for any other science known to us. It is at present the chief obstacle to the advance of the sciences, and would be worse than useless as a scientific text-book. The Berlin clergyman Knaak, denying that the earth moves round the sun, illustrates the kind of science which is derived from the Bible.

For history? The criticism of Niebuhr and his successors, pitilessly exploding the myths and miraculous narratives of Livy, has been applied to the Bible by Ewald, Bunsen, Strauss, and a host of others, with similar results. No well-informed school-committee would recommend the Bible as an historical text-book; and, foreseeing its treatment in the hands of competent instructors in history, we suspect that "Inquirer" himself would rather see the Bible quietly withdrawn from the schools altogether than treated as a text-book in this manner.

For morals? Some have defended the use of the Bible in the public schools as a text-book of morals; and possibly "Inquirer" may refer to their arguments. But the Bible will fare no better as a treatise on ethics than as a treatise on science or history. The worst morals are taught in the Bible as plainly as the best. The maledictory Psalms are as much a part of it as the Beatitudes. There is the same need of careful and independent discrimination in its ethical as in its scientific or historical teachings.

The only subject on which the Bible is really a text-book is religion—Jewish and Christian; and it is precisely this subject which, on account of the conflict in public opinion concerning religion, ought not to be taught in the schools at all. We are therefore opposed to the use of the Bible in the schools "even as a text-book."

2. We believe that the law should strictly prohibit all use of the Bible in the schools as a religious exercise; and that there is no reason for using it as a text-book on any subject which ought to be taught there.

3 and 4. We believe there is no more reason for excluding the Declaration of Independence, the national hymns, essays containing religious allusions, or declamations from Webster, Curran, Parker, and others, simply because they allude to God or heaven, than there is for excluding Homer or Virgil for alluding to Zeus and Jupiter, Tartarus and Elysium. These works are all used for literary and other legitimate educational purposes. If the Iliad or the Æneid were used in the worship of mythological personages, they should be excluded for the same reason that the Bible should be excluded,—because they would be used for religious, and not educational purposes. Or if they were used to inculcate the ethics of Hellas and Rome, they would be as ill-fitted for text-books as the Bible. They are used, however, with perfect propriety, for purposes of literary culture and the study of ancient languages, notwithstanding their mythological allusions; and when thus used, we should be the last to exclude them from the schools. Neither would we prohibit any purely literary use of the Bible itself; although it is so plainly impossible, at present, to use the Bible for any purely literary purpose, that we should look with extreme disfavor on any attempt to smuggle it into the schools under pretence of its literary character. Our objections on this point will be obviated when rational views of the Bible are thoroughly disseminated throughout the community.

5. The answer we have just given to interrogatories 3 and 4 contain by implication our answer to this interrogatory. The radical position on the subject of using the Bible in the schools is altogether too strong to be reduced to absurdity by any such irrelevant questions. Of course no "censor" should be appointed to sift out of general literature all its religious allusions. We, at least, cherish no ambition for the appointment, nor shall we volunteer to draw up a catalogue of objectionable works or passages. THE INDEX is not the pope's Index Expurgatorius.

We have thus answered the questions raised with directness, and, we trust, with courtesy. But we would not be understood as treating the Bible with contempt. For its many beautiful and noble words, we feel as true an appreciation as the stoutest stickler for its enjoined use in the public schools. They make a part, and a very precious part, of the religious literature we have all inherited from the past. But they are so mixed with other words which can be approved neither by an educated intellect nor by an enlightened conscience, that thoughtful persons are compelled to winnow the wheat from the chaff. This, however, has nothing to do with the main question. If every verse in the Bible taught a lesson as grand as the Golden Rule, none the less would the Bible be used improperly, if used for religious purposes in our common schools. As long as the people are divided in religious sentiments and convictions, just so long will it be a grievance to a portion of them for the State to show any partiality towards the religious sentiments and convictions of the rest. The schools are for ALL. Let them, then, be so managed as to aggrieve NONE.

ANTI-ANTI.

A split in the ranks of the Free Religious men is predicted. The Christian Register, with commendable perspicacity and alertness, announces it as an already accomplished fact. To the members of the Association the fact is not apparent. The Association was formed as a power of resistance to sectarianism. Its enemy, its only enemy, is the sectarian spirit, ecclesiastical arrogance, dogmatical pretence and assumption; the disposition on the part of any sect however large, any party in religion however popular; any faith however ancient, rich, or eminent, to oppress or patronize its neighbor. It has been called very justly a spiritual antislavery society. The Association has no quarrel with any form of religion, no prejudice against any form of administration, except in as far as it claims supremacy over others. It has no creed, and supports none. It is neither Trinitarian nor Unitarian, neither Romanist nor Protestant, neither Christian nor Mohammedan; neither theist, atheist, nor pantheist. It is friendly with all and each, or hostile to all and each, according to the attitude assumed in relation to other forms of belief. This is the essence of the free religious principle. On this it is impossible for the Free Religious men to dispute; and on no other question is dispute possible. A difference of opinion may arise in regard to the attitude of any particular religion; such a difference actually exists, but it is incidental, not vital. The editor of THE INDEX, as is well known, is persuaded that Christianity is both theoretically and practically an enemy to the spiritual liberty of the human race, and is, in all its sects and with all its energies, plotting the overthrow of intellectual freedom. This is an honest conviction, honestly formed, candidly avowed, and fearlessly expressed. He labors hard to bring others to his persuasion. A good many Free Religious men agree with him. Many more do not. It is a matter of interpretation, the reading of facts and signs of the times. If all read the omens as Mr. Abbot does, all would be obliged to take the stand he does against a spiritual upstart and bully. Should his interpretation of the signs change, he would furl the particular banner that waves over THE INDEX office. He thinks he sights a foe which the rest do not perceive, and very properly sounds the alarm: that is all. He and they are enlisted in the same cause, and feel themselves to be. Is his apprehension justified or not? That is the question. Time will decide presently; and the whole army will throw itself on an unmasked enemy, or will remain quiet, an army of observation. If he ventures out with his division to reconnoitre, or, if necessary, to skirmish, the remainder of the army are not bound to follow; and cannot be accused of inconsistency, disloyalty, or timidity if they do not. Vigilance is commendable, even if it be overscrupulous; and courage is praiseworthy, even if it verge on temerity. If he is right, we ought to know it; if he is wrong, we hope he will discover his error in time to avoid serious consequences.

But if a split should be unavoidable, what then? Religion owes its vitality to splits. The respect for unity and organization may be one of the superstitions it were well to be rid of. Men have come to prize unity so highly that they will palter, conceal, dissemble, equivocate, falsify, for the sake of preserving it; and in thus doing they so destroy their sincerity, so eradicate their earnestness, that the unity is only a semblance, and the organization a creaking machine. Honor and policy both favor the frank acceptance of the conditions of dissolution. The law of progress is a law of heterogeneity. When the Free Religious Association follows the example of other associations, and affects a unanimity it does not feel, it is already dissolved by infidelity to its own principle.

O. B. F.

EDUCATIONAL.

We have just received from Washington two valuable circulars of information from the Bureau of Education, both of which are fully deserving of public attention.

No. 1 is "A Report of the Proceedings of the Department of Superintendence of the National Educational Association." It contains much interesting matter, especially on the workings of the compulsory school laws in Connecticut and elsewhere, on school hygiene, and on industrial drawing. It also gives much information in regard to plans for the exhibition of the educational department at the approaching centennial,—and a letter from the school commissioner in Mexico, which is of interest as showing the desire of the Mexican government to advance the cause of popular education in that country. We are sorry not to see the promised paper of Dr. Ruffner, the superintendent of education in Virginia, and the discussion which was to have followed on the important topic of the relations of the Federal government to a public school system.

No. 2 treats of a novel and interesting subject—Education in Japan. As both our political and commercial relations with this country are constantly increasing in importance, everything which promotes good understanding and mutual respect between the two countries is of special value. A very brief sketch of the history of Japan is given, and some popular errors in regard to its geography and language are corrected. One important statement is that, under the old régime, "nine-tenths of the people could read and write, books were numerous and cheap, and literary associations frequent even in country towns." Yet under the Mikados government a new department of education has been formed, the country divided into provinces, and a regular educational system established.

They report 472,047 students in the lower schools.

Especial attention has been given by the board to the education of women, and also to medical education; and preparations are made for supplying teachers both by normal schools at home and by sending young men abroad to be educated. A specially interesting point for us is the entirely secular character of the schools. There is no mention of religious exercises or studies in the programme of the schools. So jealous of any theological instruction is the government that, while courting the influence of foreign teachers, they have (in consequence of the efforts of some Christian teachers to introduce the doctrines of their church into the schools) resolved that "no Christian divine will be employed even as a secular teacher by the government."

But the picture is not all couleur de rose. Much complaint is made of the ill-will and inefficiency of the Japanese officials who are placed over the schools taught by foreigners, and who are naturally tenacious of their authority and rights.

In the character of the students, there seems to be a marked contrast to our Western youths. While reported to be on the whole equal to the Western student, his traits are mildness, docility, good behavior, and good manners; while he lacks the vigor, fire, and rebellious activity of the American boy. If it is possible that we may have developed these positive, aggressive traits at the expense of some equally valuable qualities, the mingling of the Japanese race with our own may be of great advantage to both parties. At any rate, it is a great good to look at them as they actually are, and expand our horizon by finding out how much that is really valuable lies beyond the line of our own country, religion, and race.

E. D. C.

THE GRIM AND THE GRACIOUS.

There are these two elements in life. Which shall we try to cultivate? Every person, one would think, spontaneously should reply, the latter. And yet is this the element which, in our individual and national life, we are seeking most to cultivate? There is no more important question for us to consider. Whether we are religionist, philosopher, scientist, or reformer, the art of being agreeable, in the highest and truest sense, is the best art we can learn. For if we are agreeable, then we are peaceable. If we are peaceable, in ourselves and towards all others, then we have heaven on earth. Then death and the future will be of slight moment to us. Life, and the present, will be all in all—our noblest and most serious consideration. Then how to die will be something we shall give little thought to,—any more than how to sleep when we are tired, or how to cast off clothing which we have worn out. Of to-day and not to-morrow we then shall take thought. How to live, to live long and divinely; how to grow, to grow sweet and fair as the lilies,—to this only, then, shall we give wish and heed.

At present, the element of grimness has more than its due place in our individual and national life. There is one thing which we Americans have not learned as yet; that is how truly to enjoy ourselves. We know how to work, but not so well how to play. We can invent, create, overturn, destroy, change, repair, and establish,—we can do anything possible to be done with material things,—but we do not know how simply and purely to be happy; to take life as it comes, and get easy and natural delight from it. Some of the older nations of Europe and the East, though far inferior to us in many phases of civilization, are our superiors in the art of enjoying life. "Heaven lies about us in our infancy," the poet says; but though we of the Occident are much younger than they of the Orient, in many respects we have in our daily life as a people far less of the heaven of pure and simple pleasure than they actually enjoy.

It does seem that the farther we recede from a state of Nature the more nervous and anxious, fretful and worried, in fact the more grim and heavy-laden with care and sorrow, we become. But if this is inevitable, that as we grow away from the state of childhood we grow less simple-hearted and happy, who then but would wish ever to remain a child—a child of Nature—avoiding the state of manhood, and of civilization? If unhappiness really must accumulate with our growing years; if the playful spirit must depart with youth, and only the capacity to work increase with age; if to become civilized means but to become serious and solemn, sedate and austere, painstaking and care-full, hurried and worried, busy and anxious, worldly and ambitious, extravagant and costly, showy and brilliant, bulky and tremendous, self-conscious and morbid,—who then but would wish to die young; or, necessitated to grow old, must also grow sceptical, cynical, and pessimistic? Surely, no such fate is resting upon us as this! Surely, it is possible for us to grow strong and gentle, wise and simple, rich and modest, prosperous and humble, powerful and pure, great and good, earnest and happy, at the same time. Surely, as years accumulate upon us, as they silver our heads and wrinkle our brows, we may retain the spirit of youth in our hearts, and keep the zest of childhood for all simple joys and pleasures. Surely, we may join the state of Nature with the state of civilization; we may combine innocence with knowledge, artlessness with art, the youthful mind with experienced age.

Our New World civilization is more intellectual and moral than it is æsthetic. We Americans are grim rather than gracious. We take everything in a grim earnest sort of way. Our Puritan forefathers were grim, and their grimness still flows in our veins. Their religion was grim. It clouded the brow, solemnized the face, touched the manners with austerity, suppressed the spirit of mirth and joy. It divided man's faith between God and the Devil; in fact it painted the two so much alike that it was hard to tell which was the more awful. In these days, we are but just fairly beginning to make headway against the stern doctrines of the Puritans. The face of our religion is lighted up with a little more of human gentleness and softness; our houses of worship are not so bare and forbidding; our church music steps with a brisker and airier motion; and now and then pleasure dares to take the hand of piety, and walk together in the same path.

And yet we have much still to learn in the art of being gracious. In matters of reform we have still to learn to be gracious to those who are ungracious, good to those who are bad, humane to those who are inhuman, kind to those who are cruel, gentle to those who are violent, peaceable to those who are wrathful, generous to those who are selfish, loving to those who are vindictive. In morals, we have to learn to be good without being disagreeable, virtuous without being intolerant, just without being uncharitable, honest without being bigoted, conscientious without being conceited, pure without being critical, chaste without being ascetic, temperate without being bound, self-respecting without being proud.

In social manners and amusements, we Americans have yet not a little to learn in the art of being agreeable, and of finding simple and rational enjoyment. Notwithstanding the good degree of culture and refinement which this young country has industriously gained, its social life is still all too stiff and formal. And this is because its social life is not truly social; because it is not based upon what may be called the ethical-æsthetic qualities of our nature. There is no true politeness which is not founded on real human kindness and gentle regard for others. The art of being agreeable includes the art of making others agreeable. That circle is not truly polite wherein the spirit of politeness is not infectious and caught by all. If the proud eye so much as look one look, or the critical spirit make so much as the least gesture of disdain, naught can atone for the fault; the charmed spell is broken; the sensitive soul is ill at ease. For condescension is not politeness; only kindness and real magnanimity are that. The host who makes all his guests feel comfortable and self-possessed, by treating all with sincere respect and deference, only he is truly hospitable; only in his house do we find truly polite society, whether the upholsterer has been ever there or not. No aristocracy can practise good manners, when it is made up by leaving out of it the best people. "Ask not, 'Am I in the nobility'; but, 'Is there nobility in me'." When graciousness is in our hearts, then will it shine in our manners. When we learn to mingle with our fellow-men without suspicion, without jealousy, without pride, without scorn, without criticism, without censoriousness,—then we shall have a true social life; and that social life will be full of true politeness and gracious demeanor.

As to amusements, we Americans might learn something of the Germans. The Germans are a particularly social, domestic, and happy race. Their pleasures are simple and moderate, full of abandon, but without excess. Asceticism they abhor; yet their conviviality is hearty and human, in which old and young of both sexes freely and joyously mingle. They avoid our American extremes of prohibition and intemperance, and manage in a rational way to get an immense deal of delight out of the life that now is. We attain the true art of enjoyment when we learn to be happy without being foolish, jolly without being rude, gay without being silly; when we learn to go a merry-making without getting demoralized, and a pleasure-seeking without becoming vapid or vicious. We must learn that all life is given for play as well as work, for enjoyment as well as for service. We must learn that all things are ours—ours for use; neither for abuse nor disuse. He who for any purpose sequesters himself from social life, wrongs himself and his fellow-men. We all belong to each other. We all must learn, therefore, to live out our life freely and joyously, balancing it fairly between work and play, the useful and the agreeable. In fact, when we can learn to make the useful and the agreeable one, then our life will be a song in which no note of inharmony evermore shall be heard.

A. W. S.

Communications.

GRASSHOPPERS AND PRAYER.

Among the telegrams which appeared in the Western papers of June 3, I find the following:—

"KANSAS CITY, June 3.—Our people are generally observing the proclamation of Gov. Hardin. The grasshoppers in consequence began their flight westward this morning in immense masses, and are still flying. Danger is apprehended in Kansas from the number which have gone over."

Commenting upon this flight of the grasshoppers, the Globe-Democrat makes further reference to Prof. Riley and to the scientific probabilities of the exodus of the grasshoppers sometime between the 1st and 10th of June. Here is a portion of the article:—

"It is in no spirit of disrespect to Gov. Hardin, or to the religious interests in which his proclamation is issued, that we assert that his designation of June 3 as a day of fasting and prayer seems to have been dictated by the calculating wisdom of a man of the world, rather than by the unreasoning faith of an humble disciple. 'About this time,' as the almanac says, we may expect a sudden and simultaneous disappearance of the grasshoppers from all sections of the country which they have ravaged. Prof. Riley has shown, and experience has proved, that, as soon as their wings become strong enough to bear them, they fly away, and the fields and gardens of the devastated districts are finally relieved of their presence. These facts have become notorious through the press, and it has been generally expected that the exodus of the grasshoppers would occur between the 1st and the 10th of June. It has already begun. Last Friday and Saturday, according to a dispatch to the Kansas City Times, they arose in clouds and flew away toward the northwest from the southern tier of Kansas counties. Farther north their flight is somewhat later, but the Kansas City Times of Wednesday assures us that in Jackson County, at that date, the signs of an early departure were multiplying, and numbers of grasshoppers were found with fully developed wings, trying short experimental flights. In a few days we shall have no more of them, except as charity shall be called upon to supply the needs which they have created.

"If Governor Hardin, and others who are so much better than the secular editors, shall claim this anticipated and expected result of known and natural laws as a special interposition of Providence in answer to a large amount of prayer and a small amount of fasting, we shall endeavor to bear with equanimity the odium which they will seek to heap upon us because of our persistence in believing that it is nothing of the sort. We shall also continue to hold to the belief that the governor has allowed his reason to be overcome by what we are compelled to regard as his irreverent ideas of religion. We believe that it is, at all times, a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to pray to be delivered from sin and all manner of evil; but we see no reason to believe anything in connection with the proclamation of Governor Hardin, except that he was sagacious enough to place his day of fasting and prayer in the period at which the grasshoppers might reasonably be expected to fly away."

This subject has developed much bitterness between the secular and the religious press; but especially has the State entomologist been the mark for ecclesiastical arrows.

Unable to find anything against the professor other than his firm belief in the undeviating laws of Nature, Dr. Yeaman, of St. Louis, in his fast day sermon, accuses the professor of "sneering at Providence," and says "that he was not employed for such a purpose." Note the covert threat. With the "God-in-the-Constitution" party once in control, how long would scientific men like Prof. Riley remain in office? But, as might be expected, the charge was false. The reply of Prof. Riley is excellent, and cannot fail to impress the reader that, in this matter, the man of science was far more liberal towards those with whom he honestly differed, than was "the man of God," who from his pulpit sought to bring into disrepute a brother man whose only crime was a dissent from clerical opinion.

W. F. P.

NEW ORLEANS, La., June 9, 1875.

- PROF. RILEY REPLIES TO DR. YEAMAN.

ST. LOUIS, June 4, 1875.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GLOBE-DEMOCRAT:

Sir,—I see by your to-day's issue that "Dr. Yeaman mentioned a recent remark made by Prof. Riley, the entomologist, to the effect that people might superstitiously suppose that the late rains that killed the grasshoppers were ordered by Providence, but men of science knew they came from natural causes. He thought that Prof. Riley had taken unnecessary pains to sneer at Providence, and that he was not employed for such a purpose."

Now, it happens that I have never made any such remark, nor uttered any opinion of the kind; and I defy the reverend gentleman to refer to any spoken or written word of mine that would justify him in thus dragging me into his sermon. The statement is made out of whole cloth—it is a figment of the gentleman's imagination, and is lugged in to lend effect, I suppose, to the rest of his eloquence. From a quite vivid recollection of a lecture delivered in St. Louis, in which lecture this same gentleman annihilated Darwin (to his own satisfaction), and repeatedly misrepresented those with whom he (Yeaman) differed, I conclude that such misrepresentation forms his stock in trade, and the basis of his brilliant argument. If the very reverend Dr. Pope Yeaman will be more cautious and exact in his statements about, and references to, others, people like myself, who form the laity, will learn to have more respect than they now have for his opinions, and less distrust of his sincerity and veracity.

The only sentiment I have ever expressed, either by word of mouth or by pen, as to Governor Hardin's proclamation, is contained in the article published in the Globe of May 19, where I wrote:—

"I deeply and sincerely appreciate the sympathy which our worthy governor manifests for the suffering people of our western counties, through the proclamation which sets apart the 3d of June as a day of fasting and prayer, that the Great Author of our being may be invoked to remove impending calamities. Yet, without discussing the question as to the efficacy of prayer in affecting the physical world, no one will for a moment doubt that the supplication of the people will more surely be granted, if accompanied by well-directed, energetic work."

"We are commanded by the best authority to prove our faith by our works. For my part I would like to see the prayers of the people take the substantial form of collections, made in churches throughout the State, for the benefit of the sufferers, and distributed by organized authority."

I am rejoiced to know that the last suggestion took shape in a second proclamation, and that it was very generally carried out yesterday, even in the ravaged districts; for at Warrensburg, where I spent the day, quite a large collection was taken up in the Rev. Mr. Rider's church.

My intercourse with Governor Hardin has led me to honor him as a Chief Magistrate whom the State will learn to appreciate more and more, and I hold him in too great respect to have much sympathy with the more flippant ridicule that has been made of the proclamation. Though I may not have over-much piety and faith myself, I at least know how to respect those qualities in others; and however much I believe that the insect which was the remote cause of Dr. Yeaman's yesterday's sermon is governed by natural laws, which should guide us in understanding and overcoming it, the reverend gentleman forgets his calling, and makes himself ridiculous, in charging, for such reasons, that I "sneer at Providence."

C. V. RILEY.

A CHRISTIAN'S LETTER.

[The following letter has been forwarded for publication, with the writer's consent, by a lady subscriber to THE INDEX.—ED.]

ARCADE, N. Y., March 1, 1875.

MY DEAR SISTER ALMIRA:—

Spring commences with mercury this morning at zero. Our correspondence has been for a long time suspended. I do not know who contributed the last missive. Do not know that that is important. I am reminded of you by the sight of THE INDEX, upon which is your name. From which I infer that you are a subscriber to that paper. It is mainly for the purpose of speaking of it and of yourself in connection with it, that I now write.

"The Coming Religion" lecture by F. E. Abbot has attracted my special attention. If I understand the index given by him to that religion, I most certainly hope the inhabitants of this earth may be spared from its general prevalence. There are some good points in relation to its advocacy of good to man by man. All that is good in his "coming religion" is included in and inculcated by the old religion, the religion of the Bible, the Christian religion; which religion he discards as effete and worthless—two thousand years in the rear of the true and the new. I understand Mr. Abbot to set down the God and the Savior of men, of the Bible, as mythical beings, or, at best, as "questionable deities" not worthy a recognition by present and future enlightened men. I understand him that his coming ideal religion is to have a "universal All," to which he gives the name of God. If I get the idea, that universal All is the universe; of which the God of the Bible is the creator.

Thus, becoming vain in his imaginations, his foolish heart is darkened, so that he manifests his folly in glorifying and even worshipping the created rather than the Creator, who to me is the God over all, blessed forever. Amen and Amen! Greatly do I rejoice that no poor, puny mortal can possibly, by his imaginings or by the power of his arm, thus dethrone the Almighty, and give his glory to birds and beasts and creeping things, or even to the greatest of his works—the universe.

This impotent contemner of God not only tramples him under his feet, as a "questionable deity," but adds insult to his prostrate form by robbing him of his name and bestowing it upon his deity. My dear sister, don't, don't, DON'T so despise the God of your fathers, the God of all living beings, the God of the universe, the God of Love, as to substitute any other god for him.

Sincerely and affectionately your brother,
R. W. LYMAN.

MISCELLANEOUS SUGGESTIONS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

If radicals could well agree, a flag might possibly be erected for them to fight under. Of course it is not to be expected that one radical can consent to be bound by what others may prescribe; but still, so far as they are expected to act in concert, they must have as a basis of such action some convictions in common. The vagaries of faith are to be met by propositions addressed to unbiased reason, and not dodged, but openly avowed; and none the less because some politicians and some conductors of the press show inclination to court favor with the rabble by real or seeming sympathy with idolatrous parade. Not a few seem inclined to look upon a radical as a strange and hideous monster, having reverence for nothing, and necessarily irreligious. But nothing could be more unjust. Religion has been well defined to be "Man's effort to perfect himself." If that is true, the only way to be truly religious is to take advantage of what is known of Nature's law in using such effort, setting aside everything else as an obstruction. Then where there is no effort there can be no religion. There is no reason whatever for believing that that law was ever changed, suspended, or controlled. So the basis of religion, as distinguished from superstition, is a practical sense of responsibility to the power that administers the moral world by law inherent in the nature of things.

We are not responsible for the mistakes that other people make; but it is charity, if not a requirement of justice, to take the most direct way to call them back from the by-ways of stubborn prejudice or gloomy fancy to the serene path of reason and common sense. It is very easy to make mistakes. A lady, some years ago, who had sympathy with Southern neighbors and horror of abolitionists, being asked what she understood an abolitionist to be, said: "I supposed everybody knew what that was: An abolitionist is one that teaches niggers how to read, and steals them." There was substance of truth in the definition, roughly put as it was, if the claim of property in man involved in it was well founded. So the following definition might be imagined to be substantially correct: "A radical is one who robs mankind of a future state of existence, and of all redemption through the blood of Christ;" as if it would be an easy thing to make a future state by consenting that it would be best to have one, and as if the atonement were not a myth! It would be rough justice to make a farmer lose his and for doubting as to the validity of his title, though no harm would be done if the farm were a castle in the air.

A person considerably more than half drunk, when the subject of immortality came up, said he should be quite ashamed to make no distinction between himself and his dog. Of course he took it or granted that the audience knew which of the two occupied the higher position. It is not all virtue, any more than it is all dignity, in the dogma of immortality. A pious Baptist minister before the war, whose prophetic volubility on the heights and "depths" of the wisdom and love of God in the redemption of the world was at least a match for the patience of some of his occasional hearers, was decidedly outspoken in condemnation of the practice of slavery. But he had occasion to spend a few months at the South; and, when he got home, he was asked by a neighbor whether his opinions on that subject had undergone any change. He said they had, and that he liked the Southern people; and added that, although he did not think that slavery was right in principle, he considered that the wrong done to the negroes was not so very serious after all, inasmuch as it did not extend beyond the present life.

A radical is of course set down as Godless too. But why should the word God, which varies in its meaning according to the measure of intelligence of the person who uses it, make trouble? He who is theist in one man's sense of it is theist in that of another. Not much is required in the way of theology. It will be no loss for common sense to take charge of that. The God whose existence has been taught to children, grown and ungrown, gets no better. Not to mention all his accomplishments, he begins by punishing man for not doing good, while admitting that man cannot distinguish it from bad; and he now holds people to be morally responsible or not having been born under more favorable circumstances. The sooner such a God is got rid of, the better for intelligence and morals.

A few leading maxims calculated to do service in war with superstition, and not coming in conflict with the more elaborate ones put forth in the first or the second volume of THE INDEX, might show themselves as sentinels to guard against the first advances of it; and, being distinctly formulated, they might here and there commend themselves to the opening intelligence of young persons, and thus tend to secure them against the grim demonology which it sometimes takes people many years to outgrow.

A few are proposed, as follows:—

Men's rights and duties being substantially the same in all ages, they cannot without violation of social duty admit any other authority than that of natural reason proceeding upon the final basis of observation and experience; and they have no moral right to accept teachings of dead or living man as final, or as binding on posterity by virtue of any personal authority of his.

If God exists, there is the same reason for knowing that his action is by natural and necessary law, and that that law is the only expression of his will, and there is for knowing that he is God of Nature and all.

All theory of natural antagonism between God and man is absurd, and repugnant to the harmony of the world.

No religion without effort towards improvement; and all improvement upon the sole basis of natural law.

No suspension of any natural law, and no knowledge of the future beyond rational conjecture or inference from the operation of known natural law, ever existed or was possible.

All supernaturalism is superstition; and all superstition is rebellion against God, if God exists; and it involves the idolatrous substitution of one or more false gods for the real one.

No truth can be known to be divine but such as is eternal and can be verified by experience or observation; and natural and divine law are necessarily identical.

Man who cannot perfectly understand the first element of his own being is not and never was competent to understand the being of God, or to decide or know how much it takes to make one; nor could he communicate to another the knowledge he did not himself possess. It is an absurd or merely poetical fancy to suppose that anybody who was superhuman ever appeared upon earth.

The practice of virtue, justice, and benevolence towards the inhabitants of earth is man's whole duty to God, if God exists; as it is also the principal basis of every respectable man's happiness.

There is no duty to inquire as to a future state of existence, since there is no possibility of proof; and anxiety on that subject is silly impertinence.

The man or child whose sickly imagination gives place to the assumed existence of devils or meddling spirits, is to be censured or laughed at as well as pitied.

Thus might a few leading principles be stated in brief and general form, while we do not forget that truth becomes polemic when confronted with glaring errors; and then no particular inquiry need be entered on here, as to how far churches and church societies may be nurseries of soul-dwarfing prejudice, schools of scandal, or machines to legitimize moral destitution by substituting license of social abuse for law of natural propriety.

We know THE INDEX is in safe hands, and that it is no more inclined to shirk moral than political truth. Much has been done in the way of plain statement of principle. Not with a view to large patronage or present thrift has Christianity been deliberately pronounced inconsistent with the principle of republican liberty. The ring of the late "impeachment" was not the uncertain sound of the trumpet, at which Paul the Apostle says, "Who shall prepare himself to the battle?"

THE INDEX is doing efficient service by the propositions it has put forth and advocated, touching the oppressive union of Church and State in this country; and it holds them forth as the standard of its faith. It can do no hurt in its general, moral, and religious department, to erect occasionally a standard of rational radical faith, without excluding the sentiment which naturally and logically goes with it. It is fit not only that the burdens we labor under, adverse to liberty and morality, should be plainly understood, but that the general principles which show their wicked, abominable, and repulsive nature should be distinctly set forth and widely proclaimed.

CHARLES COLLINS.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., June, 1875.

TEETOTALLY.

DEAR INDEX:—

Not one of that "glorious company" of refectors who help to furnish forth the feast you spread for us each week has brought more piquant pleasure to my taste (nor slighted real nutriment) than he who recently gave us, in "Leaves from my Journal," some tid-bits from the tenderloin of truth, served with such garnishment and condiment of poetry and wit as only your true artiste could produce. 'Twas a dish one must smack his lips over, and smile and smack again, or confess himself dyspeptic-splenetic indeed; but that "Bit of Conversation" That "hath its own flavor" so strongly, that an unpurged palate (mine, of course!) must instantly eschew it, though 'twere mingled with pure ambrosia. I half suspect that Mr. Morse introduced it artistically upon the principle of discords in music, and would willingly let it pass so, were it merely disagreeable to me, and not subtly dangerous. As I see it, I must needs cry out "poison!" though the whole board titter at my craziness.

I never could understand how it so often happens, when a philosopher "chances upon a conversation" respecting mooted points of his philosophy, that the other party proves to be a dunce; or, rather, I do not understand why any philosopher should think it worth while to journalize and report his chance conversations with other than persons of sense and discernment. Take, for example, the instance above referred to:—

I chanced to-day upon this bit of conversation:—"I have been a moderate drinker all my life; and, all my life up to the last few years, an immoderate eater."

"A sorry confession."

"Well, as to the eating, should I have totally abstained?"

"I see your point—but drink is poisonous."

"You say right. Drink is poisonous, and especially the water we drink. If you would drink water that is not medicated by cooking, catch it from the sky; and even then look out for the quantity. I tell you moderate or immoderate, in ten cases out of ten, determines the poison or not poison. 'Cool, sparkling water' killeth even like unto whiskey."

"You jest."

"But I flourish on my jest."

"It may 'cause your brother to offend."

"So does my eating meat."

"Then abstain."

"That was my question. Shall I totally abstain from food?"

Would Mr. Morse be kind enough to tell us whether the silly teetotaller really had not wit enough to add: "Certainly, if you can do as well on air alone as I am sure you can without whiskey?" Or did the overfed, moderately drunken, most astute philosopher "come away" before the overwhelmed had time to recover from that final stunner?

I am accustomed to consider this total abstinence question upon what the Swedenborgians call "the plane of simple uses." Is it, in broad sense, of greater use to drink whiskey moderately (admitting the doubtful possibility), or to abstain altogether? If we believe, with Mr. Abbot, [No.—ED.] that the example of total abstinence is more dangerous than the example plus the fact of moderate drinking; or if, with Mr. Morse's friend, we are ready to concede that some whiskey is as essential to life and use as food itself; why, then 'tis logical to drink, and there is no arguing with us further on the subject. But if moderate drinking had no place less morally exalted than the former, or more scientifically tenable than the latter, in which to entrench itself, 'twere easier by far to do away with "the great evil."

Yours teetotally, T. H. EVERETT.
RUSHFORD, Minn., June 20, 1875.

THE "UNKNOWNABLE."

THE INDEX of May 20 remarks as follows: "To affirm an Unknownable is to affirm the known existence of that which it is declared impossible to know at all." Again: "There is a 'rationalism' far more searching and thoroughgoing than Spencer's—the rationalism which claims for reason an empire unbounded by any man's arbitrary limitations—the rationalism of science, which quietly annexes province after province of the supposed Unknownable to its own domain." I am not so egotistic as to presume to discuss this question philosophically, but it does seem to me that there are some facts with which your conclusions above quoted are inconsistent. And first is the fact that science has never explained a mystery. Gravitation, for instance, science names; but further "deponent saith not." Of its essence the Patagonian knows as much as Newton knew. Franklin brought mysteries to view, but there stopped. He annexed no province of the Unknownable. The mysterious nature of what we call electricity becomes more and more apparent as science utilizes it. The mystery of day and night, summer and winter, is increased, not lessened, by the discoveries of astronomy. The astronomer tells us what he sees, but nothing more. Science shows us new mysteries, but reveals no secrets. At every spring of its key of discovery, the existence of the Unknownable is made more apparent. If Spencer is wrong, is it not singular that the most advanced scientists have the strongest convictions of an unknowable element of the universe? The vision of this "open secret" is not vouchsafed to the primitive man. There are advanced thinkers who doubt it speculatively, and in deference to their determined loyalty to reason; but their intuitions, based upon a faculty (that of wonder) which must become obsolete if their theory is a true one, are ever against them. "We are fearfully and wonderfully made"; but can we know the Maker's secret? We have annexed the provinces of gravitation, centripetal and centrifugal motions, solar attraction, etc.; but is the real secret of the great mechanic to be revealed to us? It is the first cause that is past finding out. In this direction science has not advanced a hair's breadth. Science reveals law, but not the source of power. The origin of all force is as much a mystery as ever.

But if we can claim for reason illimitable capacity of understanding, why not for ourselves corresponding power and dominion? Our consciousness is certainly positive as to the limitations of our capacity for power, and to my mind no less so in regard to our capacity for wisdom. I think it is Emerson who says, "I give you joy: All things are Knowable." But I am sceptical. Z.

THE CARROT QUESTION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In THE INDEX of June 24, Austin Kent evidently feels that he has put a quietus on Josiah Warren's equation of the commercial relations of mankind, by his statement of the carrot problem.

It appears to me that the same laws which operate all through Nature will obtain here; there will be a "natural selection" of carrot-raisers, and a "survival of the fittest," without protection to those who choose to raise a crop half weeds and half carrots. The ruling prices will be the minimum cost at which the market could be supplied, and by the law above referred to we should soon find out who should fix the price of carrots, as well as of all other articles of trade. There are, of course, other necessary conditions of society, differing essentially from present ones, which must be attained before this cost principle would work successfully. A factor of one phase of life may not be arbitrarily applied to other stages of development with success. There must be unity of interests, and a desire on the part of all to contribute to the general welfare. No doubt, exact justice will finally be the foundation upon which mankind will deal with each other; and, when that time comes, men will wonder how the present ideas could have ever ruled the world; just as we do now regarding many exploded myths that were once so potent. As Gerald Massey expresses it:—

"The world is waking from its phantom dreams,
To make out of that which is from that which seems;
And in the light of day shall blush to find
What wraiths of darkness still had power to blind
Its vision; what thin walls of misty gray,
As if of granite, stopped its onward way."

And when this time arrives there will be free trade in commerce, politics, and religion; for none will seek "protection" against his brother man. J. T. C.
AMESBURY, June 20, 1875.

MEN OFTEN speak of breaking the will of a child; but it seems to me that they better break the neck. The will needs regulating, not destroying. I should as soon break the legs of a horse in training him, as a child's will. I would discipline and develop it into harmonious proportions. I never yet heard of a will in itself too strong, more than an arm too mighty, or a mind too comprehensive in its grasp, and too powerful in its hold. The instruction of children should be such as to animate, inspire, strain, but not to hew, cut, and carve; for I would always treat a child as a live tree, which was to be helped to grow, never as dry, dead timber, to be carved into this or that shape, and to have certain mouldings grooved upon it. A live tree, and not dead timber, is every little child.—Theodore Parker.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
 THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

OF THE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Vol. I. Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect.....	5.00
Education.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 2 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	4.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede..... Romola..... The Mill on the Floss..... Felix Holt..... Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life..... The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	1.25
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasie Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twelve-Week Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy. A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Consistency. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). The Spirit of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Principles of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.25
Autobiography.....	1.00
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVAT (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkikos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union. Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truhy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Moons, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.95
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	0.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.80
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.35
Vanity Fair.....	1.35
The Newcomes.....	1.35
Adventures of Philip Pennidens.....	1.35
The Virginians.....	1.35
Esmond, and Jewel the Widower.....	1.35
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 12	1.35
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Dog and Cat, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unre-printed Pieces.....	1.35
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letter to a Young Man.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.00
The Voysey Appeal.....	.80
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.40
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.80
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICTReligion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN

HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING Co., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 6) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,SERMONS,*ESSAYS,*and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,

BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NEW MUSIC BOOKS.THE CHORUS CHOIR.

By Dr. EBEN TOURJEE.

A new book of sterling merit, for the use of Musical Societies, Conventions, and "Chorus Choirs," which are now becoming quite common. 200 pages, and about 100 pieces. Price $2.00. Per Dozen, $18.00.

LORELEY. An Unfinished Opera by Mendelssohn.

60c. Per Doz., $5.40. A beautiful fragment, which, however, is complete in itself.

HOW SHALL I TEACH? or, Hints to Teachers. A pamphlet by Dr. Lowell Mason, with a concise description of his mode of instruction. Much sought for. 38 cts.

FIRST WALPURGIS NIGHT.

MENDELSSOHN.

Cloth, $1.25. Boards, $1.00. Paper, 80 cents. For Musical Societies.

Curtis and Behr's New Method for the Zither. $1.50.

The Zither is an instrument like a guitar, but much more powerful, and well worth learning.

Sold by all music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K ,Card,

—AND—

JobPRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1875.

WHOLE NO. 286.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

CARL SCHURZ has been received most flatteringly in London.

WENDELL PHILLIPS is in favor of a third term for President Grant.

TENNYSON'S new drama, Queen Mary, is highly praised by the London Times.

AMATEUR rifle-shooting would seem to make men brutes. It reduces a company of respectable gentlemen to a mere "team."

THE CONFLICT over municipal appropriations to sectarian institutions is now waging in Baltimore, where it has got into court.

SIR CHARLES DILKE is the owner of the London Athenæum. Mr. Smalley considers him one of the rising politicians of England.

OCEAN TRAVEL and land travel are getting mixed. Colonel Gildersleeve, of whose exploits the papers are still full, has just teamed across the Atlantic to Cork, and then sailed to victory over "Green Erin" to Dollymount.

WHAT NEXT? Here is an advertisement from Nature of June 3: "NOSE MACHINE.—This is a contrivance which, applied to the nose for an hour daily, so directs the soft cartilage of which the member consists, that an ill-formed nose is quickly shaped to perfection," etc., etc.

THE TOTAL property valuation of New York State for 1875 is $2,366,780,102; that of New York City is $1,100,943,699. The former is an increase of $198,472,229, or 9.15 per cent., as compared with 1874—a much higher rate than ever before known. This is a remarkable exhibit, considering the business depression.

SAID James Russell Lowell at the Harvard Commencement dinner: "The old motto of the College was Veritas; the one substituted for it was Christo et Ecclesie." So Harvard is dedicated now, not to "Truth," but to "Christ and the Church." Professor Lowell thought the substitution was made "because there was necessarily no manifest difference between the two." But, while the College is forgetting the difference, the world is finding it out. The undergraduates, who rarely go into the ministry now, make the newer motto every day more ridiculous, and show that the College is a bit of a hypocrite in professing a devotion to the Church, which is pretence only.

THE QUESTION of inflation is looming up again as the great political issue. To feel all the humiliation and disgrace involved in a depreciated currency, one need only travel a few days in Canada, and see his country's money universally discounted and despised. It would take a nation of knaves to vote that promise is performance, and deliberately to set out on the road to repudiation; and it would take a nation of idiots to discuss very long the question whether inflation is that road or not. That the United States place some value on their public credit, we certainly believe; and, if they do, the infamy of some recent platforms will soon sink the latter out of sight.

PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON recently exhibited great bravery and great modesty at the same time, as thus described by a correspondent of the London Globe: "A few days ago Dr. Russell Reynolds was being driven in a four-wheeled cab from Charlton Station, near Blackheath. The horse became restive and ran away, and the position of affairs was critical, for not far off there was a precipitous, unprotected bank. Over this the animal would certainly have plunged had not its progress been stopped by the young Prince Louis Napoleon, who, happening to be close by, sprang forward, seized the horse by the head, and pulled him up. The Prince, who was dragged along the muddy road for a considerable distance, was not recognized by the gentleman whose life he had thus gallantly saved at the risk of losing his own, and when asked for his name replied—without, however, giving it—that he was very glad to have been of some service, and that doubtless they would meet again."

THIS item is from the Boston Daily Advertiser of July 1: "F. R. Ladd, a heavy real estate owner in Springfield, has refused to pay his taxes for 1874, because of the injustice of the non-taxation of church property, and his real estate has been advertised for sale by the tax collector." When a large property-owner feels the injustice of church-exemption keenly enough to make such a heavy sacrifice as this rather than submit to it, it is about time for the public to look at the matter seriously. Mr. Ladd has a most just cause of protest in the fact that the non-taxation of church property unfairly increases his own taxes; and the cause of human rights may be as well served by his sturdy refusal to pay them as it was by John Hampden's famous refusal to pay the twenty shillings of ship-money to Charles I. It is necessary to know whether American citizens are to be taxed to support the churches; and every staunch Liberal should thank Mr. Ladd for so courageously forcing this question to an open issue.

THE EARTHQUAKE in South America and the inundation in France, by which misery has been wrought on such a frightful scale, show how limited is the control of natural forces, which is possible to man. Science cannot hope to get the mastery of the Titanic energies which now and then burst forth with such devastating and appalling fury. What does it all mean? Human conceit is infatuated enough to imagine this boundless universe built up for man's accommodation, and the folly may escape detection in ordinary times; but it passes comprehension that such events as these should not strip the veil of vanity even from the clerical mind. Small indeed are the ends of human ambition, and small they seem to him who is not besotted with vulgar egotism. Nothing can protect us from a crushing sense of our own insignificance, except a resolute reverence for the infinite majesty of virtue and the infinite grandeur of intelligence. After all, there is nothing great but mind; and if Nature is less than Mind, she is a mouse that has borne a mountain.

EX-PRESIDENT WOOLSEY, of Yale College, in his Phi Beta Kappa address at Cambridge last week, declared that he "did not believe in universal suffrage"; and, to our great regret, this opinion was received by his audience with a burst of applause. In the main, his oration was a most noble one; yet it is a reason for grave disquietude, when the most highly educated part of a nation are infected with scepticism touching the fundamental principles on which that nation is built. Is the republic, then, based on a falsehood or a mistake? No power in the universe can ever succeed in limiting a suffrage which has once been universalized; it is idle to be wailing over what is now irrevocable; it is shallow and superficial to assume that the momentous experiment of self-government by the whole people is a failure, because the cultured element considers itself alone fit to rule. This is conceit—the conceit of a culture which is one-sided and incomplete. No doubt universal suffrage will fail to bring the millennium; but it is the only just principle, and in the long run justice is the corner-stone of prosperity. Why shake one's head because everybody votes, instead of vigorously following up universal suffrage with universal education? Let the republic believe in both; and the result will be a millionfold better than if it adopted the nostrum of quidnuncs and restricted suffrage by some nominal test.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

The Intellectual Life.

FROM THE "CANADIAN MONTHLY AND NATIONAL REVIEW"
 FOR APRIL, 1875.

BY WILLIAM D. LESUEUR.

To man alone of all sentient beings is it given to regulate his own inward life, and so govern his thoughts that, instead of being dependent on momentary sense-impressions, they shall follow a path, and proceed in an order, of his own determining. The lower animals have thoughts, but their thoughts are chained, as it were, to the objects that suggest them; and their lives may thus be conceived as broken into an indefinite number of separate movements, each dominated by its own special impression. When a horse stops at a gate at which he has been accustomed to stop, I cannot believe that he retains what we would call a remembrance of any of the previous occasions on which he has done so, or that he distinguishes in any way between his last act of the kind and former ones. He stops, as we say, mechanically, by virtue of an association established between the visual impression of the gate, and the order to stop so often given at the same point. How this may be we know from our own experience, for we continually find ourselves doing things in the same way, sometimes much to our own inconvenience. Very many acts of forgetfulness are the result simply of the force of established habits: we have some special thing to do at a certain time, something out of the usual course, but, trusting ourselves to our daily routine of duty, we are insensibly carried past the point at which the special action was to be performed, and are only reminded of it when, perhaps, it is too late. The very attempt, however, to keep a thing in mind is a mark of the higher intellectual development at which human beings have arrived; we cannot imagine such an attempt being made by any of the lower animals. It is our prerogative to contemplate our own thoughts as phenomena: in other words, man has risen to self-consciousness, and with self-consciousness comes the impulse, and not the impulse only but the power, to control the successive manifestations of his life. In the self-consciousness of man, Spirit, to use the language of the Hegelian philosophy, realizes its own essential freedom. The forms in which it clothes itself perish, but it remains; and it thus recognizes itself as superior to change, the true type of the incorruptible and eternal.

The freedom of the spirit, however, is realized in different degrees in different races, and individuals. Throughout a large portion of the human family the life of sense predominates altogether over the life of thought; and man is seen as the slave of passion, and of custom, rather than as master of his own faculties and destinies. There is, no doubt, a radical distinction between the thought even of savages, and that of the lower animals; but if the glory of mankind is to be found in the power of self-control and self-education, and in the possession of interests wholly unconnected with the physical appetites, there are numerous races of men to whose humanity little glory can be said to attach. Among savage tribes there seems an absolute lack of capacity for the exercise of abstract thought, or any disengagement of the mind from material objects and interests; but I am not sure that in civilized communities we do not sometimes witness what, strictly judged, is a more painful subject of contemplation; namely, a kind of voluntary ignorance of all the nobler springs of human action, a voluntary clinging to a mode of life, such as, in all its moral elements, might be lived by beings very far down in the scale of civilization.

In cases of this kind how much should be attributed to sheer inferiority of organization in the individual, and how much to the lack of favorable formative influences? The balance is often difficult to strike, but probably no case comes under our notice in which we are not disposed to believe that, had circumstances only been different, a better result might have been brought about. Strange characters, no doubt, are born into the world; but what these might become under a thoroughly natural and healthy system of education no one, perhaps, is in a position to say. Certain it is that, by unwise and vicious methods of education, many a naturally good disposition has been spoiled, and gifts of intellect that might have proved of the highest value to society have either been condemned to uselessness, or directed into positively mischievous courses. The great dramatist has told us of a "divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will." This may perchance hold true of human destinies; but in the development of human character it would seem as if Nature did the rough-hewing, and left education and circumstances to do the shaping. And the shaping is a great deal. The turn that it gives to our thoughts, our interests, our tastes, our manners, may make all the difference between happiness and unhappiness, between success and the want of it; may make our lives noble or make them mean; make them a blessing to the world or a burden even to ourselves. Very few human beings have even moderate justice done to them in the way of education. Carlyle has said: "A wise, well-calculating breeding of a young, genial soul in this world, or, alas, of any young soul in it, lies fatally over the horizon in these days." The statement is an extreme one; but, to those who know how to read Carlyle, it contains a truth. "Wise and well-calculating breeding" does not lie completely "over the horizon," even in these days; but, like all excellent things, it is rare. To make it more common is the one great problem in education; a problem, however, the full importance of which few appreciate. By education is too commonly understood the mere acquisition of "useful knowledge"; in other words, of an equipment for the great life-struggle for wealth. The moulding of the character, the awakening and strengthening of the intellectual powers, the cultivation of the tastes and the emotions, scarcely enter into the popular idea of education at all. Yet surely an education that makes no provision for these things is unworthy of being offered to a being like man, susceptible of reverence, of love, of disinterestedness, of admiration, of enthusiasm for the true and the beautiful; a being formed for rational inquiry and discourse, and capable of governing his life by devotion to high ideals. That there is in average humanity a capacity for something better than we ordinarily see, is proved by the success that attends the efforts of all really eminent teachers. One man like Dr. Arnold gives a tone to the thoughts and sentiments of hundreds of youths, so that those whom he has trained are distinguishable by their intellectual and moral qualities for the rest of their lives. A recent writer in Blackwood's Magazine held that Dr. Arnold made his boys too conscientious; but if there was an error on that side, which I am slow to believe, it was an error that very few teachers could commit if they tried, and one of which very few have ever been accused.

Whether as the result of fortunate, or in spite of unfortunate, influences and agencies, some souls in every generation are seen to rise above the common plane of human existence, so as to derive from the habitual exercise of their higher and nobler faculties an interest at once keen and satisfying. The life that such live is preëminently a life of thought, animated and kindled by strong moral feeling. If we call it "the intellectual life," we shall not, perhaps, use the words very inappropriately, or assign to them more meaning than they are adapted to bear. For is there not in the word "intellect" itself, something noble and imposing, and should we care to dignify with the name intellectual activity thought devoted to idle or selfish purposes? In such a life as I refer to, there is a pervading unity of tone and purpose. The man who thinks a noble thought does not distinguish between the mental act and its moral coloring; to him it is simply one moment of his existence. If, therefore, one word is to be chosen to express a life in which high thoughts and high aims are thus harmoniously and indissolubly blended, I know of none more suitable than the word "intellectual."

The first step in this life is to have faith in reason; to believe sincerely, thoroughly, and once for all, that man has faculties adapted for the discovery of truth, and that a faithful use of these must be attended by good results. Such a faith is so natural to the human mind that it can hardly fail to be developed in any one who in youth sees examples, or perhaps even a single example, of its active exercise. In default of living companionship of the right kind, a book casually met with will sometimes awaken the mind to a sense of its powers and privileges; but, in whatever way the effect is wrought, it is always one of the very greatest moment. A too common idea of human reason is that it is a narrow kind of calculating faculty, useful in business operations and in the ordinary affairs of life; but, in wider or deeper questions, more likely to lead to error than to truth. The true view of reason is that it is the only faculty man has for arriving at truth on any subject, great or small; so that any truth which reason cannot grasp is entirely out of human reach. If we are to guard against being led astray by reason, what faculty are we to employ for the purpose? Shall we better ourselves by giving the reins to imagination, or jumping at conclusions with our eyes shut? This is what in certain quarters we are counselled to do, on the understanding, of course, that the conclusions we jump at shall be those of our counsellors; otherwise our faith is vain. Madame de Staël understood pretty well a certain class of philosophers when she wrote: "The defenders of prejudices, that is to say, of unjust claims, of superstitious doctrines, of oppressive privileges, try to call into existence an apparent opposition between reason and philosophy, in order to be able to maintain that reason may lay an interdict upon reason, that there are truths which we should believe without understanding them, principles which we must admit, but forbear from analyzing; in a word, a sort of exercise of thought which serves the single purpose of persuading us how useless all thought is."* There must have been "Grammars of Assent," and treatises on "The Limits of Religious Thought," in those days as well as in these; for here they are described as regards their spirit and purpose to the very letter.

He who once fully realizes that truth is made for man, and man for truth, enjoys a sense of freedom that nothing else can give. He breathes a larger and more invigorating air, and feels himself a citizen, not of the world only, but of the universe. He is delivered from bondage to his own opinions; for he knows now that, though he were proved wrong on every point, there is a right elsewhere—that, in fact, only in the light of higher truth could he be rationally convinced of his own errors. The poet Clough, whose life was almost a type-example of what we would here describe, has nobly said:—

"It fortifies my soul to know
 That, though I perish, Truth is so;
 That, howsoever I stray and range,
 Whate'er I do, Thou dost not change.
 I steadier step when I recall
 That, if I slip, Thou dost not fall."

Most men, on the contrary, speak and act as though the fortunes of the universe were bound up with their own infallibility, and as if, therefore, any demonstration of radical error in their opinions would imperil all the happiness and hopes of humanity. Hence follows, by a natural process of development, a kind of fetish-worship of opinions that leaves out of sight almost entirely the question of their truth or falsehood, and looks only at their supposed utility. The more assured a man is of possessing the truth, the more confident should be his outlook upon the world, the more prepared he should be to examine the opinions of those who are so unfortunate as to disagree with him, and ascertain the grounds on which they are held. We find, however, that just the contrary is the case; that people whose opinions rest, as they say, on an immovable basis, are, as a general thing, particularly reluctant to acquaint themselves directly with other forms of belief. They will, perhaps, look into some travesty of hostile opinions prepared for them by hands they can trust; but as for a personal survey of the hostile territory, they would rather be excused. In such cases the thing dreaded is not the loss of truth, but the loss of a persuasion; that truth may be on the other side they cannot help at times suspecting; but they are determined never to be brought face to face with the proofs. If they thought that a thorough and candid examination of their opponents' position would confirm them in their present opinions, and set their minds for ever at rest, they would gladly and eagerly resort to it; but they think nothing of the kind. Instead of setting truth above opinion, they set opinion above truth. Truth is a far-off Mikado, a dignified kind of entity always to be spoken of with respect; but opinion is the præsens divus, the Tycoon, or, to come back to Europe, the mayor of the palace—the actual ruler of men's lives. Is there no word to express this disposition of mind? Certainly there is: the word is scepticism. The sceptic, in any sense of the word, that can live in this century is not he who, after candid examination, decides that he cannot accept this or that system of belief; but he whose mind is full of dark places that he does not care to have illumined; who fears that his structure of belief is tottering, yet dreads to examine its foundations, or even so much as to put out his hand to steady it; who piteously begs everybody near to keep quiet, lest a breath or a vibration should lay the whole fabric in ruins.

Directly opposed to the spirit of scepticism is the spirit of intellectual liberty. He whose thought has been emancipated may find himself compelled to deny, or at least to question, many things commonly accepted; but the general tone of his mind is not negative, but positive. In a certain sense he feels as though he could believe all things, for he is prepared to welcome truth from any quarter, and the universe seems to him full of truth, while error dwindles away to the most insignificant dimensions. Even errors, when understood in their genesis and development, yield up their quota of truth, and may thus serve, like any other objects of study, to help forward the education of the mind.

It by no means follows that he who has arrived at a conviction of the supremacy of reason must make an idol of his own individual reason, or set up any form whatever of self-worship. Of course he will be accused of this, and probably of numerous other absurdities; but he must learn, as a reasonable man, to bear the charge with patience, knowing how plausible it must appear to those who urge it. Reason itself teaches that, in certain matters, the reason of others is to be preferred to our own; and in such cases we shall use our reason simply to guide us to those whom it may be prudent for us to trust or follow. If these, instead of doing us good, inflict injury on us, or lead us astray, we pay the penalty of our ignorance, as men have been doing, more or less, from the beginning of the world. Our duty was discharged if we made the best selection that the state of our knowledge, or the information within our reach, enabled us to make. No one knows better than he who believes in reason how to submit to authority; for no one is more impressed than he with the advantage that knowledge has over ignorance, or with the inexorable character of all natural laws. "A pious soul," says Carlyle, writing of his friend Sterling, "we may justly call him; devoutly submissive to the will of the Supreme in all things; the highest and sole essential form which religion can assume in man, and without which all forms of religion are a mockery and a delusion in man." In the intellectual life there is no spirit of revolt, but rather a desire to be brought into harmony with whatever may be recognized as the decrees of Providence or the laws of Nature; in a word, with whatever is permanent and essential in the general constitution of things.

* De la Littérature, p. 514.

The great truths of the universe are not of any private interpretation—their application is to all mankind, their benefits are for all. He, therefore, who has seen reason in its beauty and its infinitude will feel that his life, at least, must afford some feeble reflection of that which has dawned upon his spirit. He has become a debtor to humanity, and woe to him if he preaches not some kind of gospel. Was the revelation made to him that he might thereafter shut his lips, and live a life of selfishness among his fellow-men? Or can he avail himself of the wider and deeper views of things to which he has been admitted simply to increase his own personal prestige and power? That men cannot be thus unfaithful to the highest gifts it would be rash to assert, but surely it must be hard for them to be; for does not all illumination, like the first rays of sunlight on the lips of the fabled statue, seem to smite into music the very "chords of self," attuning them to a vaster harmony than they had ever before known? There is nothing in the world so catholic as reason. Interests and traditions divide men, and arm them against one another; but reason would unite them, if they would but listen to its voice. Edgar Quinet has well pointed out that what the mightiest church the world ever saw failed to accomplish—the unification of humanity—science, which is nothing but embodied reason, is every day hastening to a consummation. Let me try and translate here a few of his eloquent sentences:—

"This reign of unity, which the Church is still pursuing, Science, in her ceaseless progress, has all but grasped, if indeed she has not fully grasped it. You heap upon her your lofty scorn, but all the while she is accomplishing that which you content yourself with promising. What is she doing? Why, she is the same for all peoples; she speaks, and makes her authority respected in all languages; she brings together different climates, and does away with space. Always in agreement with the vast book of Nature, wide open from East to West, she knows nothing of sects or heresies. She works; she imitates the Creator, and brings Nature to its perfection. While you are discoursing, she is advancing; and the modern world, which you refuse to follow, is resting itself more and more upon her laws, as upon eternal reason, the one truly catholic reason brought to light by the very men you have condemned."*

The intellectual life, therefore, is a life of sympathy with humanity, and of harmony with Nature. It finds its natural aliment in general truths, and the satisfaction of its active impulses in the enunciation of these truths, and, so far as may be, in their practical application to human affairs. All sustained intellectual life must have its root in human interests of one kind or another, and we find, as a matter of fact, that the keenest students, those who grasp at the most encyclopædic knowledge, are those whose labors bear most directly on the progress of society. And here it may be remarked that faith in reason and faith in progress are sentiments so closely allied that they are seldom seen apart. For in what does progress consist, if not in the gradual assimilation, so to speak, by the social organism, of successive discoveries of truth? If, therefore, there are no assignable limits to the conquests of the human mind, there can be none to the progress of society. It has been truly remarked that the idea of progress is a wholly modern one. The thoughts of the ancients seem scarcely to have wandered beyond their own time; and after the introduction of Christianity, the whole stress of human hopes (and fears) was transferred to a future life, this mundane state of existence being regarded as a provisional dispensation which might at any moment be abruptly terminated. Of course men continued to follow their instincts; they married and gave in marriage (though the thought of the approaching end of the world was often an incitement to celibacy); they fought, and traded, and built; but the idea that here on this earth the human race had a glorious destiny to fulfil was one for which the system in which they believed allowed no room. It was with the much-abused French philosophers of the eighteenth century that the idea of progress may be said to have originated. In the face of a hierarchy still powerful and dangerous, they ventured to dispute the doctrine of the total corruption of human nature, and to contend that the free exercise of thought, instead of leading inevitably to error, was the only means by which men could hope to escape from their errors, and to advance in the knowledge of the truth. They held, too, that the free play of human instincts and feelings, instead of involving the ruin of society, would lead to the evolution of a far better social order than the one then existing. That they were over-sanguine in some of their anticipations, that they expected too much from the mere removal of restrictions on human action, may readily be admitted; but it is their glory to have believed in liberty in a larger sense than it had ever been believed in before; and to have seen in prophetic vision that golden age of the future to which all the noblest minds of the present generation instinctively look forward, and the hope of which grows stronger in the breast of humanity with each succeeding year. The ideas which these men cast abroad worked like leaven in French society, and no doubt hastened the downfall of the corrupt and fast-decaying French monarchy; but to-day, no longer revolutionary in their tendency, they are a faith to thousands, and furnish the inspiration of much noble and unobtrusive effort for the general good.

To lead a truly intellectual life, prizing the perception of truth above the rewards of the world, requires an elevation of character that not every man of superior intellect possesses. The world is ever at the elbow of the man of talent, urging, tempting him to devote to its service—but not in the highest sense—the gifts at his command. A thousand voices cry: "Amuse us, enliven us, startle us, flatter us, or, if you like, satirize us; but, in some way or other, excite and please us, and you shall not have to wait for your recompense. We will pay you cash down, and leave no debt for posterity to settle. Your name and fame shall be in all the newspapers, and if criticism ventures to attack you we will laugh it out of countenance; for are we not the great public, and can we not protect our favorites?" Yielding to such solicitations, many a man has abandoned art and truth, and devoted himself to the ignoble task of gratifying tastes which he recognized as frivolous or vicious. He has given the world what it ordered, allowed it to dictate what he should write, or speak, or create, and he has had his reward in popularity and pay. Perhaps if he has been very successful he has been proclaimed a true classic, and promised an immortality of renown. True classics, however, are not often those who take their own generation by storm,* and are never those who write simply with a view to immediate popularity. The fame of Shakespeare, Spenser, and Milton is vastly greater in this age than it was in their own, not only because this age is able to understand them in a wider and deeper sense than the one in which they wrote, but because these great names have received the cumulative admiration of every generation through which they have passed. It is not too much to say that a man who has the stuff in him of a true classic will not be thoroughly comprehended or enjoyed by the mass of his contemporaries, for the simple reason that, in point of thought, he is in advance of them. It rests with posterity to do him full justice, and if he be a writer of the first eminence—a Dante, a Shakespeare, a Goethe—a dozen generations are not too much for the purpose.

There are many enemies to intellectual life, but they may be all classed under the one head as the world. One man is tempted to write rubbish for popular consumption, another to compose trashy music, another to fall in with vulgar tastes in architecture or in the decorative arts. Others, again, are summoned to bear a part in the political struggles of their day; and nothing will satisfy the multitude but that they should visibly ally themselves with some existing party organization, and aim at the ordinary rewards of political partisanship or leadership. According to the popular view, ability is, like wealth, a personal possession to be used for the benefit of the possessor; and why a man who has ability should not employ it to procure his worldly advancement, is a mystery that passes all vulgar understanding. Not only so, but many men become irritated and vexed whenever they hear of any one whose apparent aim in life is simply to investigate the truth of things, and bring that truth to bear as much as possible on the minds of others.

Urit enim fulgore suo qui praegravat artes
Infra se positas.

They have an uncomfortable feeling that the business of the world, and perhaps their own particularly, could not go on if truth were generally sought after, or if it were a matter of general obligation to pursue only right ends, and to pursue those only by right means. The man of ideas thus appears to many in the light of a dangerous innovator, simply because, having forsaken the rule of thumb for the rule of logic, and the morality of expediency for that of principle, there is no knowing what doctrines he may some day bring forward for the confusion of society. He may not have announced anything revolutionary as yet, but his method seems to contain in it "the promise and potency" of every form of revolution.

Let a man but renounce his devotion to truth and principle, and the more brain-power he can bring to the aid of a party or cause, the more welcome his alliance will be. He will become a champion athlete in parliamentary or journalistic struggles; weaker men will rally round him; and in due time he may scale the highest seat of power. There will be plenty of work for him to do; plenty of glory to gain. Instead of hiding in obscurity, he will be ever in the eye of the world. Instead of inspiring aversion and distrust by his very talents, he will secure admiration and, in a certain measure, sympathy. Instead of straining, more or less painfully, after a high ideal, he will have success, the great ideal of nearly all the world, brought within easy grasp. The one condition is that he shall do as others do, fight the world with its own weapons, and forget as much as possible that he was ever summoned to any nobler task.

* "Il n'est pas bon de paraître trop vite et d'emblée classique à ses contemporains; on a grande chance alors de ne pas rester tel pour la postérité."—Ste. Beuve, Causeries du Lundi. Vol. 3, p. 40.

"Do you mean then," some one here may ask, "that men of high character and ability should stand aloof from public affairs, and leave them to be managed by men of inferior qualifications, intellectual and moral?" I should be sorry to mean anything of the kind; but this I do mean: that if, to any man in particular, participation in public life involves a sensible lowering of his standards of duty, or the sacrifice of more important principles than any he can hope to vindicate or establish, then for that man participation in public life is an error, if not a crime. And to how many men such as I refer to has a public career of any length involved less than this? Where is the name among men who have been long in politics in this, or, I might almost say, in any country, that is capable of exciting the enthusiasm of rational men? There are party leaders of ability who receive daily flattery from those whose interest it is to flatter them; but where is the man who has shown in the struggle of parties a spirit superior to stratagem, to evasion, to unworthy compromise, the man who has neither alienated his judgment nor sacrificed his conscience, the man upon whom good men may fix their hopes, and whose public virtues the youth of our country may be urged to imitate? We have seen men go into politics who might have been all this, some perhaps who we trusted would be, but—some change has passed over them: to those whose hopes were brightest they are "lost leaders."

If the only choice to a man of intellect were between absolute passivity and nullity, in respect to the political interests of the country, and an active political career with all its moral risks, there would be much to say in favor of the latter course; but such, fortunately, is far from being the case. A man does not need to be a practical politician in order to influence public opinion. As a private citizen he may uphold true principles, and help to guide those around him to right conclusions. The important question, if we would estimate any man's work aright, is not, How widely his name has been repeated? but, What have those who repeat his name learned or received from him? What kind of moral impulse has he communicated to those who have come into contact with him? Surely to have done good to a few is infinitely better than merely to have provided talk for many. When Alcibiades wanted to set the Athenians chattering, he cut off his dog's tail, and no doubt the experiment was perfectly successful. The press in these days furnishes a means of influence second to none in importance, and fortunately it cannot be entirely usurped for purposes of party warfare. There are channels here and there through which disinterested thought can find expression; and the influence which one able and thoroughly impartial writer can exert on public sentiment outweighs that of a score of special pleaders in Parliament or out of it. The practical politicians of the day in England look to the press for direction far more than the press looks to them; the thinkers lay down the law for the doers; themselves unseen, and for the most part unknown, they guide in no small degree the destinies of a great empire.

If the atmosphere of politics is unfavorable to high intellectuality, not less so is the atmosphere of what in a special sense is called "society." The intellectual man, as conceived in these pages, is serious, earnest, sincere; he must put on a mask if he is to appear otherwise; society will have nothing to do with seriousness or earnestness, and though it does not as openly banish sincerity (nobody likes to profess himself, in so many words, "a fraud"), it succeeds in reducing that virtue within such narrow limits that those who fail altogether to see it may well be excused. The intellectual man's converse is with ideas and truths; society interests itself only in the most frivolous and insipid of facts. The intellectual man pursues culture; society pursues common-place. The intellectual man is above all things a man, and, in all his most intimate thoughts, he takes his stand on common ground with the mass of his fellow-creatures; he is raised above them in point of advantages, but he feels the strength of the bond that unites human heart with human heart. His "society" is the world, not that handful of people who usurp the name, and who, with a fatuity almost inconceivable, seem to think that for them the whole economy of Nature was planned, and that, if other classes exist, it is that they may minister to their wants, and supply an effective contrast to their brilliance and gaiety.

But, alas! as a poet I have already quoted has said,—

"The heart is prone to fall away,
Her high and cherished visions to forget."

There is a weak side to even the best characters, a side to which the fascinations of society can appeal with dangerous force; and much of high purpose has e'er this been lost in the whirl of dissipation, or extinguished in the unworthy and ungenerous rivalries that make up so large a portion of fashionable life. But as so it is possible to be in "society" and yet not of it, to observe its forms while rejecting its spirit; what is not possible is to accept its spirit, to adopt its tone, and yet to cultivate the life of the intellect and of the soul. As well try to unite political philosophy with slavish partisanship, or devotion to art with constant consultation of popular tastes.

"E'en in a palace life may be lived well,"

To very few is it given to devote themselves wholly to intellectual pursuits; but it is by no means necessary to do so to live in the truest sense an intellectual life. As has often been remarked, much of the best thinking, and of the highest order of literary work has been done by men actively engaged in the business of the world. The names of Bacon, Milton, Clarendon, and Burke would be as seriously missed from the political as from the literary history of their country. It is indeed an inestimable advantage for the thinker who would deal with political or social questions to have had his own share of action in society, provided always the relations into which he has entered with men or with parties have not been such as to cripple or pervert his judgment. In the same way, and with the same proviso, the best narrator of events will be he who can say, "quorum magna pars fui." The importance of the proviso has been illustrated in many cases, and quite lately in a very signal instance: Lord Russell has had a very large place in the history of England for forty years past; but his lately published Recollections are pronounced by competent judges to be a very faulty and partial record of the period over which they extend.

Be a man's occupations what they may, he must furnish himself with facts before he can theorize with advantage. If any one imagines that the intellectual region is one in which facts become of little importance, he is very greatly mistaken. The only difference between the thinker and other men is that he, having gathered his facts, sifts, arranges, questions them, and thus forces them to yield up whatever of truth they contain. For facts, be it remembered, are not in themselves truths; they are only the material out of which truth can be distilled. By dint of practice, the man of thought acquires a wonderful facility in referring special facts to the class or order to which they belong, and thus obtaining a ready insight into their significance. For persons unacquainted with his method and resources, he might appear to be dealing with matters in a most arbitrary way; whereas, in reality, he is but availing himself of previously-acquired knowledge, or previously-established conclusions. It need not be denied that even great philosophers do sometimes base their theories on insufficient foundations; such mistakes (which men of the world, little as they think it, are making every day of their lives) are incidental to the imperfection of human faculties, and do not arise from any failure to recognize that the whole value and virtue of every theory must depend upon its exact agreement with all the facts it purports to explain. Not the philosopher only, but the poet as well, must have facts in his possession before he can produce any work that shall deserve to live. We think of the poet as dealing in fancies; but who has so wonderful a gift as he in opening our eyes to the facts of the world in which we live? He has seen with his own eyes, and noted a thousand things that have passed before our eyes too, but to which we never gave heed. His verse is more expressive to us than the face of Nature itself. Why? Because his eye is keener than ours, and because he speaks to us in human accents that Nature cannot command. We have lived in the world; we have had intercourse with men; we think we understand pretty well the springs of human action; but here is a man who will tell us all we ever knew, and a great deal more. Whence hath he this knowledge? That sometimes is a mystery, but he has it; and we, who thought ourselves knowing, stand abashed.

The intellectual life should be a life of patience—patience in gathering knowledge, patience in drawing conclusions, and patience in waiting for results. It may be hard sometimes to reconcile enthusiasm with patience; but they may be reconciled, and they must be, if the best results are to be achieved. The patience of the believers in a cause is no less a prelude of victory than their enthusiasm; indeed, of the two it is the fuller of promise. Let cynics or fatalists say what they will, the hope of a rational ordering of human society, the hope of some future harmony of human beliefs, does spring eternal in the human breast. And the hope is one that maketh not ashamed; those who possess it must avow it, and must work towards its realization. Not only in the prophet-minds of every age has it asserted itself, but in the minds of the people at large there has ever been a dim foreboding of some great good in store for humanity. We see not as yet the outlines even of the future edifice of civilization; but we see errors and falsehoods which it is a manifest and immediate duty to combat, and the destruction of which we cannot but believe will hasten the advent of the better time. What the world lacks is faith; it has long been taught that it is very evil, and the lesson has been learned so thoroughly that it is hard now to make people believe that in themselves there are infinite capacities for good, and that nearly all the good they do is done independently of laws or enactments of any kind. The persuasion of an evil often has as serious effects as the evil itself; a malade imaginaire may be the most hopeless of invalids. The world is at this moment, to some extent, a malade imaginaire; but unfortunately the great multitude of its physicians are exerting themselves only to prolong its delusion.

A great mark of the true intellectual life is simplicity. How can a man who is devoting himself with singleness of purpose to the discovery and diffusion of truth, or whose mind has in any way received the stamp of intellectual elevation, burden himself with refinements of luxury, affectations of pedantry, or any of the multiplied forms of vain-glorious pretence? The more closely a man's attention is concentrated on abstract or general questions, the more his own personality sinks out of sight. It cannot, indeed, be maintained that literary men and savans are always exempt from vanity; but it is undoubtedly true that this failing has very seldom been exhibited by the greatest among them. It is also true that just in proportion to a man's intellectual eminence, to his capacity for high thinking, are we struck by the incongruity of any exhibition on his part of vanity or affectation. It is satisfactory to note in this matter a marked advance in public sentiment. The literary men of to-day would be ashamed to indulge in personal quarrels such as their predecessors of a century or more ago paraded before the world. They studiously avoid (of course I speak generally) all personal issues, rightly conceiving that their proper business is to throw light on the questions they undertake to treat; not to demand attention for themselves.

No one needs companionship and sympathy more than he who is leading, or trying to lead, an intellectual life: unfortunately none are more often deprived of these advantages. It is easy to have a "chum," or any number of them, if a pipe of tobacco and talk on the local news of the day make up your ideal of social enjoyment; but not if your thoughts run very much on higher themes. In the centres of population the earnest student can probably find a few like-minded; but elsewhere he must, generally speaking, pursue his career solitary and unaided, except by books and journals. A useful thought for such is that others here and there are treading the same path under the same difficulties; for it is cheering to know that we have fellow-laborers, even though we may never see them nor even learn their names. Here are a couple of sentences from Edgar Quinet's Histoire de mes Idées, which many, perhaps, may read with encouragement:—

"I had a presentiment that what was wanted was an almost complete revolution in intellectual matters; and, as I saw no one working towards the accomplishment of the change, I fancied myself alone. This feeling of solitude was weighing me down at the very moment when so many immortal works, yet unknown to the world, were being prepared in silence, germinating, as it were, under ground.

"Every one imagined himself alone as I did, and thought and meditated as though upon a desert isle. And yet all were being wrought upon at the same time by the newborn spirit of the century, and all were feeling in their very bones the pangs of moral growth. How many complaints were then exhaled! How many sincere tears were shed! Nature herself groans when she is about to bring to the birth."

The intellectual life is a serious life, but it knows nothing of ennui; and its pleasures, to those who have tasted them in their purity, must ever seem the noblest that the constitution of man has placed within his reach. Let me close with a word from one who could speak with authority: "Pure ideas, visible only to the inward eye, are of all things that men can know the most beautiful. To live in them is true enjoyment—happiness with no admixture of cloud."*

DID GERRIT SMITH RECANT?

BY REV. A. F. BAILEY.

A correspondent of the Liberal Worker, in the issue of April 21, asks for information on this subject. The hope that this article may throw some light upon it is my excuse for writing it.

I knew Mr. Smith personally for many years; and for five years (terminating in December last) I was minister of a liberal church located nine miles from his home. Consequently I was well acquainted with him; met him frequently at home and abroad, and was associated with him to a considerable extent, politically and religiously.

The most extended conversation I ever had with him on religion took place about two years ago, when I spent a Sunday with the Peterboro Church, and was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Smith. At that time Mr. Smith's views were positively and clearly liberal. Certainly, Methodists in general would not endorse them, but would consider them dangerous and infidel.

And yet, I can easily see how one unaccustomed to Mr. Smith's manner of expression, especially if he was anxious to make a point in favor of a cherished dogma, might misinterpret some even of his broadest utterances, as indicative of dissatisfaction with and unrest in his thought and belief.

Mr. Keppel, as quoted by "B. F. H.," makes Mr. Smith say: "My old sceptical views trouble me so that I cannot always control them. The thought that there is no life after death comes to me sometimes like a terrible nightmare." I suppose Mr. Keppel did not keep note-book and pencil in hand during his interview with Mr. Smith, so that we may doubt if he quotes him verbatim. His statement must stand as his recollection of what Mr. Smith then said, and may be taken, "cum grano salis."

Now it happens that this very point was dwelt upon at length, in my conversation with Mr. Smith to which I have alluded. He then said to me, in substance (and I think I quote him almost verbatim), "I have in philosophy many open questions: and it will doubtless surprise you to hear me say that among them is that of personal immortality."

Then he went on to speak of the unsatisfactory character of the analysis from physical nature so much relied on by some as proofs of the immortal life: and to say that he found no help in the manifestations of modern Spiritualism. He also told me he was afraid to die; but immediately afterward explained to me that his fear was an instinctive dread of dissolution, and was not based on any apprehensions of future retribution, or fear that all would not be for the best. Further conversation seemed to show that his difficulties were purely philosophical. His faith was clear and serene. He believed in immortality from the side of his religious and emotional nature; but he could not demonstrate it to mathematical nor even to moral certainty, as I suppose Mr. Keppel also cannot do.

Mr. Smith impressed me as having a more genuine faith in immortality, than most people who say they know that they will live forever. But if I had been an Orthodox minister anxious to make a point on the insufficiency of a heretic's faith, I dare say I should have viewed the matter differently. And I very much doubt if he ever made to Mr. Keppel or anybody else a statement materially different from the one made to me.

* William Von Humboldt; quoted in an article in the London Quarterly Review for April, 1868.

Mr. Smith, as I knew him, was a Christian-Free Religionist. He believed in Christ; but his Christ was as unlike the Christ of Methodism, as the "Logos" of John was unlike the "Messiah" of the Jews. His Christ was the "Inward Word"; not the Infinite God masquerading in the form of any individual man to the exclusion of divineness in other men. He loved and revered Jesus; and, perhaps, thought him as morally perfect as a man could be. But I think he did not regard him as supernaturally wise, nor as a miracle worker. He did not sympathize with THE INDEX in its assaults upon Christianity. But as to the deity of Jesus in the theological sense, he was thoroughly Unitarian.

I saw very little of him during the last two years of his life. He may have changed his views materially after my conversation with him. But I think he did not, for several reasons.

As I have intimated, Mr. Smith was liable to be misunderstood. His breadth of character and his wide range of vision made him so. He was rational; but he was also very devout. He was so religious that many liberals thought him only half liberalized. The real difficulty was that he towered head and shoulders above his critics. He did not think God was dead, because he had outgrown the image that he had worshipped in his youth. Men thought him inconsistent because he was religious as well as reasonable. They could not understand how a rationalist could enjoy the fervor of Methodist devotion. They were satisfied with light without heat; and, because Mr. Smith was not, they doubted his rationality. Other men were satisfied with heat without light, and because Mr. Smith sympathized with their devotional feelings they assumed that he accepted their creeds. I believe that is the foundation upon which this recantation story rests. I do not doubt that Mr. Keppel honestly believes he died in the Orthodox faith. But I also am satisfied that Mr. Smith never told him that he renounced his heresy and returned to the faith of his youth.

Matters other than theological also tended to draw Mr. Smith into sympathy with his Methodist brethren. In the anti-dram-shop movement, headed by him a few years ago, about four-fifths of his followers were Methodists, while the Liberals generally gave the movement the cold shoulder. He believed in Gen. Grant and the Republican party with all his heart; but in 1872 a large share of his Liberal brethren became "Liberals" in politics, while the Methodists generally stood firm for Grant. All this had its influence with Mr. Smith, who was always in earnest; and who, while self-poised, and amply able to go alone, yet dearly loved the friends who went with him.

Still, I cannot think that his disappointment with Liberals, as reformers, politicians, or religionists shook his faith in the "Religion of Reason." I have no evidence that it did, and I have some strong presumptive evidence that it did not.

During my settlement in Canastota, he annually sent me a sum of money as a donation. About a year before he died Mr. Smith heard that I was about to leave Canastota, for pecuniary reasons; and he wrote to me, urging me to remain, and pledging himself to double his gift, and to make it a subscription in case I remained another year. I did remain, and he fulfilled the pledge.

At that time he wrote me of a young Methodist minister, of some ability, and great earnestness and spirituality, in whom he was much interested. I suppose that Mr. Keppel is the man described.

Now if he had repudiated Liberalism, he would hardly have doubled his gift to support a man peculiarly obnoxious to the Orthodox of that region, because of his heretical influence.

Again, if he regarded Mr. Keppel as his pastor, his family must have been aware of the fact. He would naturally desire that his pastor or some other Orthodox divine should attend his funeral; and his family would not have sent thirty miles for a Unitarian minister, whose acquaintance with him was but slight, under such circumstances.

These are but straws, perhaps, but they are borne onward by a breeze other than that which fluttered the leaves of the Christian Advocate and the Cynosure.

After all, the unanswerable argument was adduced by "B. F. H.," viz., that if Mr. Smith had changed his opinions he would have made the matter public, and would not have contented himself with confessing to a Methodist minister in a country hamlet. He never hesitated to announce a new departure, nor spared wholesome truth for fear of hurting his friends, or of the charge of inconsistency. He gave thousands of dollars, and some of the best work of his life, to promulgate the "Religion of Reason." Is it possible that with eyes wide open to the error of that religion, he, standing on the verge of the grave, would say no word, and give no dollar to undo the mischief he had wrought? Was the brave and generous old man cowardly and penurious in this, and in this only?

They who knew him best will never believe it. If he died and made no sign to any but Pastor Keppel, it is likely that Pastor Keppel misunderstood the sign he made. That this will be the universal Liberal verdict, I do not doubt. But Orthodoxy will never cease to claim Gerrit Smith as hers in death, even as she claims Washington and Lincoln. And there will be plausibility in her claim. For he often expressed in Orthodox phraseology the breathings of a Liberal spirit, and so was misunderstood by all.

But for myself, I say, let Orthodoxy take her claim, and make the most of it. Grant, if you please, that Pastor Keppel is right, and that Mr. Smith did retract.

It comes, then, to this. Gerrit Smith gave the prime of his life to the advocacy and defence of the Liberal faith. No boyish fancy, but matured conviction, wrought out in soul-sincerity in the depths of his own experience, led him to our camp; and he was brave while he was in it. If, in the latter days, when his eye was dimmed, and his natural strength abated (as certainly they were, to some extent, a fact of which "B. F. H." does not seem cognizant, but which will be seen, I think, by whoever will compare the circulars sent out by him in the last year of his life with those of an earlier date), the old convictions came back upon him so forcibly that they crowded out the truer and broader thought, and forced him to seek rest in the creeds of his childhood, and safety in the refuges which his better judgment pronounced unworthy, it yet would be nothing strange, unnatural, or discouraging to us. Our appeal then lies from Gerrit Smith weak to Gerrit Smith strong; from the Gerrit Smith who recants his heresy privately and doubtfully, to the Gerrit Smith who proclaimed it publicly and powerfully, in language and with a spirit that thrilled young men as if an angel had spoken to them, or made them eager to take the sword in maintenance of the truths he taught.

We have warmed us at the fires of his inspiration and genius, when those flames leaped heaven high; and their heat is with us still. The rakers among the ashes shall not be grudging the full enjoyment of all that they find therein.—Sharon, Wis., Liberal Worker, June 2.

THE TAXATION OF CHURCHES.

The intricacy of this question, its wide and novel bearings, and the confusion of views entertained with regard to it, were all curiously illustrated in a discussion by the Congregational Conference of Rhode Island on Wednesday. It appears that a special point was given to the matter by an agitation now going on in the Rhode Island Legislature in favor of modifying the present exemption of the churches from taxation. Independent of this, however, the question is everywhere attracting the attention of thinking men, and it can only be settled by such open discussion as it appears to have received in this Conference.

Hon. Rowland Hazard laid down the legal principles involved, by remarking that the State as a sovereign power may tax or not, as it sees fit; all taxes, however, must be paid out of an annual product; but in the case of churches, a tax would have to be paid by individuals, there being no product from it. A church is property set apart for the public good, and ought not to be taxed any more than a bridge. He did not seem to see that this argument favored a connection between Church and State (which controls the bridge); but he was afterward admonished that he had conceded too much in admitting that income-producing property was to be taxed, for then the exemption would have to be taken away from certain wealthy churches. In fact, one speaker thought that the whole question was one of limitation. "It is not within the province of legislation," he said, "to tax the worship of God; but if a church is extravagant, putting a million of dollars into a church-edifice, it cannot plead that it should be exempt. Extravagance in religious expenditure is obnoxious to God. Let us have exemption from taxation to the amount of $100,000."

Another class of speakers took a different view. One said "the church is a sovereign power," having its authority from the same divine source as the State. Another put it in this way: "If government derives its authority from God, what authority has it to tax anything belonging to God?" He did not undertake to define what does not belong to God. A third said that as the church is God's arrangement for blessing the State, and as it enhances the value of all property, it should go untaxed; while a fourth claimed that the church is the best educator of the community, and taxation of it is persecution. At this point a member arose and declared he had not in a long time heard so much Roman Catholic doctrine as during this discussion. If those who had preceded him were correct in their assertion that the secular government has no right to tax a church, the Roman Catholic hierarchy is correct in saying "the earth belongs to the saints, and we are the saints." He claimed that all taxation was, or should be, for the benefit of all, and that the only trouble in this matter arose from having departed from the plain principle of making taxation the payment for protection, and of making no exceptions. General Hoppin, however, declared the whole agitation to be an attempt to secularize religion, and that those who have sanctioned it do not know the path on which they are travelling, nor the chasm that is yawning before them. He thought the whole controversy had arisen from the fact that the Roman Catholic, the Quakers, and the First Baptist Church have a large amount of property exempt.

It is no wonder that one candid minister avowed that this was a case in which his heart went one way and his convictions another. Other blessings, he said, which are not accepted by the State are taxed, because they are not recognized by the State. Thus far the Conference. We will only add that this is a question of the equitable distribution of taxes. The amount of which the churches is relieved is simply thrown on other property. If we were founding a new government some equitable plan would be devised without difficulty, but to disturb inherited rules and principles is another matter altogether.—Boston Journal.

PADDY WARD'S EPITAPH.

If this were the time and place, and we happened to be in the mood, we might set ourselves seriously to inquire why men have always found in death and the grave such sufficient food for easy and even cheerful jest. In one of the prints of Holbein's "Dance," the King of Terrors is represented leading a little child away from a cottage, with an indescribable grin upon his fleshless face. Of lapidary fun there is no end, and in the collection of epitaphs many mortals have found a permanent amusement. The same thin partitions which divide wit and madness are all that there is between the lugubrious and the laughable; most of us in the midst of a great sorrow have been tormented by the intrusion of ludicrous thoughts; while at funerals it is not uncommon for something to occur which severely tests our gravity. The humors of an Irish wake have been over and over again related, and now we have the humors of an Irish tombstone.

There was a droll debate the other day at a meeting of the Guardians of the Drogheda Union. It happened in this way: Long ago in Drogheda there lived one Paddy Ward, a jovial gentleman, who took a fancy to erecting his own monument in the place where he intended to be buried. He did so; and upon the stone he caused to be inscribed the following: "Beneath this stone here lieth one, That still his friends did please; To heaven I hope he's surely gone, To enjoy eternal ease. He drank, he sang, whilst here on earth, Lived happy as a lord, And now he has resigned his breath, God rest him, Paddy Ward!" Considering that in ordering this inscription, Mr. Ward had everything his own way, we must declare that it strikes us as singularly modest. The "I hope" is a little ambiguous; but even if by the pronoun Mr. Ward is himself to be understood, a man may surely be pardoned for merely hoping that he is to go to heaven. The candor with which Paddy Ward admits his bacchanalian propensities gives truth to a tombstone which is not always found there, if we may credit the proverb. Having set up this memorial of himself, Mr. Ward, according to tradition, dedicated it by giving a party on the spot; at which he, with all his guests, "got gloriously drunk." In due time he was gathered to his fathers and placed under the stone. When the Rev. Mr. Powderly, P.P., came to rule spiritually over the vicinage, he was greatly shocked and scandalized by the inscription, and he ordered it to be effaced; allowing only the words "God rest Paddy Ward" to remain. Then, indeed, there was a row and riot and rumpus in that parish; and Mr. Owen Markey, taking the matter up, asked for the dismissal of Johnny McGeough, the sexton who had not reported the defacement. Mr. Markey said that so much did he admire the inscription that whenever he had employed a stone-cutter he had always ordered him "to give a little touch to Paddy Ward's tombstone." The Rev. Mr. Powderly being called upon to defend his prima facie piece of vandalism, made a most solemn speech to the Guardians, in which he argued the matter thus: "There would be no sense at all in writing that Paddy Ward drank, if it was not intended to convey that he drank too much—in plain English, that he was a drunkard; and the words 'he sang' could only mean that he sang the indecent and ribald songs in which drunkards are wont to indulge; and yet," said Mr. Powderly, "we are told that 'to heaven he is surely gone.'" Was this a thing "to be read" by the children of the "parish," at a time, too, when "the vice of intemperance was spreading over the whole country?" He hadn't in the least injured the stone, but he had given the deceased a respectable, decent, temperance epitaph, with "God rest Paddy Ward!" as legible as ever.

The Board of Guardians appears to have been bothered and unable to come to any decision. Mr. Mangan asked Mr. Markey "if he intended to renew the inscription?" Mr. Markey answered promptly and decisively: "I will, by the blessing of God!" and so the matter was allowed to drop.

At first it seems hard that a man should not be allowed to have an epitaph according to his own taste, though that may not be a creditable one. But the inscription is the business of the living who are to read it. If a man sees fit to set up for his In Memoriam something obviously against good morals, it is the right of the public to pull it down. If he wishes to be offensively eccentric in this way, he should be buried in his own back yard, or buy a private and personal cemetery to be funny in.—N. Y. Tribune.

THERE IS, however, yet another and more important side to the question. We have not to ask: How has the American system worked in the United States? but, how would it work with us? And even more: we could hardly get so far as to put this latter question, for it must be clear to every calm and sober observer at first sight that at present it would be absolutely impossible for us to make the trial. We have to deal with institutions whose age is reckoned by hundreds of years, and which have in such a manner grown into our life as individuals and as a social and political body, that to tear them asunder with one jerk might prove fatal to our very existence as a nation and as one of the leading peoples of the civilized world. Look at the first Revolution of France, and you will see the awful consequences of such a clean, sharp cut into what has grown into existence in the course of centuries. One must not forget that these institutions are not mere artificial creations. To blow them up over-night is to stab the mass of the people to the very heart in their received ideas, in their cherished habits, in their deep-rooted prejudices. The mass of our people are about as well prepared to see the American system adopted on a sudden as they are to bow their knees once more to Odin. Look on the Government—this Government, leading the onslaught of the Liberals on the Ultramontanes—and you will see how well we are fitted for a separation of Church and State. Only four weeks ago I wrote you about the new law rendering civil marriage obligatory; now I have to write you that in Potsdam a teacher has been dismissed because he did not go with his bride to a clergyman after having contracted his marriage before a civil magistrate. Dr. Falk felt the unspeakable shame and scandal at least so much as to pretend that there had been also some other reasons at work. But you find prominent men among the Liberal parties openly and unreservedly justifying the course of the Government.

It would take not only a very conceited man but also a very superficial thinker to venture at this time to predict where we shall finally land in this conflict with Rome. Perhaps it will be at the American system, perhaps at a very different thing. Those who are able to look beyond the incidents of the day, and who understand the true nature of this war, should not merely ask where we are standing just now. Let them not turn their backs upon us because we have not yet arrived here or there. Honest and candid criticism we invite, but we think ourselves entitled to sympathy and to a word of cheer as long as we move, if, upon the whole, we are moving in the right direction.—Berlin Correspondent of the N. Y. Nation.

AS A RULE we take no stock in the stories of cures effected by "Our Lady of Lourdes," or any other "Lady" credited in these days with working miracles. But there is a possibility that faith in the efficacy of a visit to the famous French shrine will result in at least one remarkable cure. A young Catholic girl named Kane, suffering from blindness, and hearing the wonderful stories that have been told concerning the miracles at Lourdes, secretly took passage for France in the steerage of an ocean steamer. She was soon discovered, and the story of her simple faith so touched the heart of the captain and others that she was kindly taken care of and passed on to Paris. Here other friends were found for her, she was placed under the hand of a skillful oculist, and it is said that she is likely to regain her sight. In that case the Lady of Lourdes will be entitled to a certain degree of credit. The miracle will be the most reliable one yet worked.—Boston Journal.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

MYSTERY.

Could we, to words, the color give
Of radiant hues that burn
Along the sky at Day's decline,
Or Morning's bright return;

Repeat, in pictured syllables,
The tints of budding trees;
When through the blossomy orchard sounds
The murmurous hum of bees;

Translate the warble of the wren,
Sweet prophecy of spring;
When from the south the blue-bird brings
A bit of sky on wing;

Reveal the wondrous miracle,
The charm that gives one rose
Its crimson dress, while close beside
Its pure, white sister grows;

Then speech might fitly shadow forth
The loveliness of Earth;
Yet we should scarce begin to guess
The secret of its birth.

We seek, and ever seek in vain,
The magic force that sends
Fresh life alike through trees and veins,
And each for separate ends.

No nearer to the hidden source
Where Life at first began:
No nearer to the force that shapes
The motes and spheres and Man.

We can but guess,—we can but name
Fair Nature's rhythmic law,
And, face to face with mystery,
Look up to God with awe!

MAGGIE STEWART SIBLEY.

SENECA, Mo., May, 1875.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 3.

Jefferson Patten, $3.20; Mathias Tiel, $1.50; C. B. Holloway, 40 cents; Isaac Berry, 20 cents; A. M. Knapp, $3.20; A. C. Gardner, $1.50; B. Gardner, $4.50; Daniel Humphrey, $3.20; George Draper, $3.20; W. S. Leach, $3; H. L. Melton, $4.40; G. F. Reynolds, $8; A. Magni, $3.20; Fannie Dean, 80 cents; D. D. Holmes, 80 cents; Jane Curtis, 80 cents; W. H. Crowell, $3.20; A. Seeger, $1.60; D. F. Bruner, $10; Maggie B. Stone, $3; J. H. Foster, $2; Theo. Wehle, $4.40; F. W. Brown, $3; Philena Carlin, $1.50; Sarah E. Whitney, $3.20; D. Edwards, $1.60; W. M. Fahnestock, $1.50; George C. Young, 75 cents; P. B. Sibley, $4.45; C. H. Lathern, 75 cents; L. A. Treat, $3.20; Mary E. Nye, $3.20; John E. Jones, $9.90; J. Vila Blake, 50 cents; Theo. B. Shepherd, $2; B. C. Ward, $1; Carl Von Bergen, $2; Herbert Bourinot, $3.75; Dyer D. Lum, 50 cents; T. C. Evans, $1.20; Sarah G. Russel, $250; O. L. Ashenfelter, 75 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 8, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
England, Editorial Contributors.

Is it worth while to be Queen of England, if even her summer residence is in danger of being fixed by act of Parliament?

THE Independent is indignant over this outburst of religious conceit, which yet appears in every one who believes in "our Savior": "A camp-meeting advertisement thus reads: 'Christ, the head and general superintendent of our church, has promised to be present and preside.' Cant, pure cant! 'Christ, the general superintendent of our church!' Why not? Would the Independent deny that Christ is the general superintendent of its own church? Unaware it is quarrelling with Christianity itself, which is the gospel of "our Savior," or nothing.

REV. WILLIAM HILL, of Bristol, England, preached a rousing sermon in his last will and testament in this style: "As this is to be my final public document, I shall here record my detestation of all State establishments of religion, believing them to be anti-scriptural and soul-ruining. I have for years prayed the King of Zion to overthrow the politico-ecclesiastical establishments of the British Empire, and I leave the world with a full conviction that such prayer must before long be answered. I thirst to see the Church brought down, the Church by man set up, for millions are by it led on to drink a bitter cup. I desire all posterity to know that William Hill was a conscientious Trinitarian Baptist minister, and that he believed infant sprinkling to be from his Satanic Majesty, the keystone of Popery, and, therefore, the parent of unnumbered terrible evils. This delusion must also pass away at the divinely-appointed time, and the immersion of believers, as plainly taught by the Great Teacher, the Holy Ghost, and the apostles, shall one day universally triumph. Man says some water in the face, and that before the child has grace, is what is meant in Jesus' Word by being buried in the Lord. The deadly drinking customs of professors and non-professors are likewise doomed. Heaven dash all error, sin, and the devil from the earth, and cause truth, holiness, and Christ everywhere to prevail. Amen."

REV. CRAWFORD NIGHTINGALE issues "theological postal cards" for the information of the ignorant in things divine. This is one of them: "The Unitarians have not merely a creed, and that a Christian creed, but they have also a creed common to them all. They all believe Jesus to be the Christ. And this, the common creed of all Unitarian churches, is the only real Apostles' Creed as given in the confession of Peter, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.' And accepting this creed, the Unitarians rest on the one foundation that is laid, even Jesus Christ, and, standing on this foundation, they welcome to their fellowship 'all who profess and call themselves Christians'; and all Christians who rest on the one foundation that is laid, and on no other, welcome Unitarians to their fellowship. And this is the one Catholic Church of Christ." Mr. Nightingale's unpleasant reminder that Unitarians have a creed irritates the Sharon (Wisconsin) Liberal Worker, which does not dare to deny the fact, but indirectly revenges itself on the enfant terrible in rather an amusing manner: "Rev. Crawford Nightingale, a down-east Unitarian, utters a weekly chirp in the form of a theological postal card, setting forth various rather attenuated theological ideas. Our good brother will hardly do much execution with these pasteboard pellets. It is, to be sure, the season for bean-shooters and wing-wings, and if this archer on the walls of our liberal Zion fails to penetrate the rhinoceros-hide of Calvinism, he may irritate the Orthodox bull a little until fly-time comes."

TURNING THE OTHER CHEEK.

The morality taught in the Sermon on the Mount is almost universally applauded, and almost universally disobeyed. It is the fashion to praise it as the perfection of ethical wisdom, insight, and beauty—so much so that multitudes of those who see clearly the monstrous unreason of Christian dogmas are blinded to the equally monstrous unreason of a considerable part of Christian morals. Even those who boldly avow their independence and disbelief of the entire "scheme of salvation," in its roots and its branches alike, often fall into merely conventional panegyrics upon the superlative excellence of the Sermon on the Mount, as an epitome of all that is most admirable in the conduct of life, the shaping of character, and the regulation of feeling. What glowing and indiscriminate eulogiums it is customary for the liberal pulpit to bestow on the moral precepts of this discourse, as if they were so extraordinarily wise and enlightened that the unaided mind of man could not possibly be their source! What extravagant encomiums upon them proceed even from moral teachers whose voices are never heard in the pulpit—from professors, editors, lecturers, book-makers,—who cannot be suspected of any clerical bias! Yet not one of all these panegyrists ever attempts to put the Sermon on the Mount into practice, until its precepts have been so modified as to be in many cases absolutely reversed. The reason is obvious, though it would not be confessed; namely, that a world which should really govern itself practically by the unmodified moral precepts of this Sermon would, however greatly improved in some respects, be on the whole a world of idiots, milksops, and sneaks.

To show the full extent of the delusion under which modern society labors, in supposing that it at heart really admires the moral ideas of the Christian gospel, could not be done without a very extended examination and a very minute criticism of these ideas, on the one hand, and a very wide survey of modern society, on the other. Of course, we do not propose anything so thorough now. But we wonder how long it will be before mankind discover the solemn humbug which they unconsciously practise upon themselves, when they fancy that their real homage is given to the religion they nominally (and sincerely enough) profess; and we call attention to this letter from the Advertiser of June 30, as the newest illustration of the bog in which a faithful following of Christian morality would leave us all floundering:—

TO THE EDITORS OF THE BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER:—

I beg you to permit me to reply to your leader of last Monday, which I think not fair to Mr. Beecher.

You intimate that "all parties had implicit confidence" in the court before which the cause was brought, and expected, therefore, a clear exposition of the right and wrong of the matter. On the contrary, there is, I believe, a wide-spread and increasing distrust of the efficiency of trial by jury. I fear your last paragraph imputes to him "intrigue, deception, and prevarication"; but as the phrasing is not clear, I hope you do not mean to do so, and only observe that, if you do, the charge is susceptible of complete disproof, and is therefore an error from which you can be quite cleared. There remains the attribution to him by you of "a want of moral perception, a want of sensitiveness, and a want of courage."

Without troubling you with detail, which presses upon me, of the many important points for a complete defence of Mr. Beecher, which even his powerful counsel have not touched or not fully developed, I submit to you a theory which I think no religious paper, and I am very sure no secular paper, in Boston has applied to the consideration of his case. It is the Christian theory—the theory of the Sermon on the Mount.

Suppose now you take it for granted that Mr. Beecher has tried, as hard as a sincere Christian man could try, to imitate the wonderful Leader, whose great discourse has never yet been lived up to, and whose unexampled precepts are the strongest proofs to-day of the truth, the need, the vitality, of the New Testament revelation. Do not let us assume cowardice, insensibility, moral defect, because we would not have done as he did. Are we trying, you and I, Mr. Editor, to really return good for evil, according to that heart-utterance of the whole teachings of Christ? I confess, for my part, I am not good enough. I don't and I won't. But Mr. Beecher does try, and we, his friends, see better than the indifferent and the hostile what he has got for it. I know very well, of my personal knowledge, that he has been urged for years to turn and fight; and, humanly speaking, we who urged him were right about it. But, Mr. Editor, wicked or good, I believe in God Almighty and immortality, and I dare not say Mr. Beecher will have been wrong when he is dead for seeking, in the city of Tweed and Woodhull, and the Herald and the Sun, to actually do the fifth chapter of Matthew, especially verse 44: "But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

With this key in mind, and with that other wise one, the law not to resist evil directly, but to go on doing good; and with the parallel memory of Paul's strange assertion of his peculiar and exceptional wickedness,—you can on Christian and charitable principles find reasons even discouragingly good and noble for Mr. Beecher's silence and his sense of guilt as responsible for the downfall of a family; and they will equally explain the silence which he will preserve about the parallel case of the charges of Henry C. Bowen.

I wish there had been one single secular paper in Boston to have felt and expressed a hearty, steady, thorough-going belief in the innocence and rectitude and nobility and self-sacrificing endurance of a Christian man, and to do it on Christian principles. But there has not been one.

FREDERIC BEECHER PERKINS.

From the time when there appeared a probability that the Brooklyn scandal would be carried into court, we have scrupulously refrained from meddling with it even by a word; and we intend still to reserve our judgment. Simply for our present purposes, we will assume Mr. Beecher's absolute innocence of the main charges, and concede the truth of Mr. Perkins' theory of the case. What we have to say is this: that, if Mr. Perkins is right, then Henry Ward Beecher's natural character as a manly man has rotted absolutely away under the influence of "the Christian theory—the theory of the Sermon on the Mount"; that nothing we have ever said against Christianity has a tithe of the terrible and withering severity which lurks unperceived in what Mr. Perkins here says; and that, when professed Christians thus do the work of professed anti-Christians, THE INDEX can have little else to do than to point out the superior efficiency of the former's work.

1. "Are we trying, you and I, Mr. Editor, to really return good for evil, according to that heart-utterance of the whole teachings of Christ? I confess, for my part, I am not good enough. I don't and I won't."

This is certainly a commendably frank confession of Mr. Perkins. Not only does he fail to "return good for evil" as Christianity requires, but he does not try to, or even want to! Yet he evidently considers himself a believer in Christianity, and admires Mr. Beecher for undertaking a job which he himself revolts from. We set Mr. Perkins down as a thorough heathen, in spite of the unreal and nominal discipleship by which he plainly deceives himself into imagining he really loves the "Christian theory." In point of fact, as his own words prove, he really hates it; he does not try to live up to it; he consciously and stubbornly refuses to try to live up to it. Well, we like him all the better for feeling so, and for saying so; for he speaks out the unperverted sentiments of the natural human heart, which do him vastly more credit than the intellectual confusion which makes him feel culpable on account of his own honest humanity. In vain the "Christian theory," which he fancies he believes in, commands him to "return good for evil"; in vain he resists the impulse to "turn and fight," instead of being a meek non-resistant,—his natural manhood is too strong for him, and he vehemently breaks out of the Christian traces, on the plea that he is "not good enough" to do as he thinks Mr. Beecher has done. The artlessness with which he lets the cat out of the bag, and betrays the righteous wrath which his whole soul feels against the "Christian theory"—this is charmingly sincere, and is enough to make a cynic rub his hands with delight at the naïveté of his confession. He is as determined an anti-Christian at heart as we are, and the only wonder is that he fails to see it. "I don't and I won't"! That is the very essence of anti-Christianity, awakened irresistibly in the manly mind under the gospel-injunction to turn the other cheek. Why force oneself into admiration for conduct which one cannot conjure up even a wish to imitate? Mr. Perkins will never know what he is, until he discovers that he is a thorough repudiator of the "Christian theory," and at heart an intense believer in the right of forcible self-defence. And that is the ethics of Free Religion.

2. Mr. Perkins, however, while vehemently repudiating for himself the "Christian theory," wants us to admire Mr. Beecher for putting it in practice. Very well: we will assume that Mr. Beecher did put it in practice—that he is absolutely innocent of adultery and impurity of all degrees; that he let himself be charged with these things for years without being stung to "turn and fight"; that he turned the other cheek and took blow after blow with the meekness of Job; and that he did all this because he was earnestly trying to live up to the "Christian theory." What follows? That he allowed the "Christian theory" to eat out the whole pith and core of his manhood, and to make him the object of a pity that nothing under heaven can prevent from passing over into contempt. If this is what Christianity did for Henry Ward Beecher, and is to do for us,—if it is to make men submit peaceably to false accusations, and forbear to annihilate them by prompt and effectual measures of self-defence,—if it is to favor the ruinous and nauseous “policy of silence,” until society becomes one foulreeking mass of suppressions, intrigues, lies, plots, hypocrisies,—then destiny has in store for mankind no blessing more benign than the eradication of Christianity, and the total, eternal overthrow of its demoralizing ideals. On Christian grounds the “policy of silence” is doubtless to be regarded as the inevitable and legitimate outcome of the “Christian theory—the theory of the Sermon on the Mount.” But on human grounds it is the reductio ad absurdum of Christianity; for it shows what measureless floods of misery and mischief pour out of this Pandora’s box of non-resistance. If Henry Ward Beecher is innocent of the crime charged upon him, and the defence now set up is true, then he must stand for ages as the unspeakably pathetic illustration of what woful ruin can be wrought in a character naturally bold, fearless, and manly, by this poisonous “Christian theory” which enjoins submission to evil, when nothing but resistance to it can possibly avert evils a thousandfold greater and more enduring. Whoever or whatever is responsible for the “policy of silence” must bear the blame of the Scandal and its consequences; and if Mr. Perkins can prove that this is the “Christian theory,” he has struck a heavier blow against Christianity than was ever struck by THE INDEX.

A NEW BOOK OF POETRY.

A modest and pleasing little volume, entitled Exotics: Attempts to Domesticate Them, by J. F. C. and L. C., will have a threefold welcome: first, for the grace and beauty of the poems themselves; secondly, for the opportunity of acquaintance with some of the best ancient and modern lyrics which it affords to the mere English reader; and, thirdly, as a pleasant communion with its well-known gifted authors, whom we so often meet in the paths of reform and philanthropy, in the garden of the muses. It is pleasant to see father and daughter thus walking hand in hand, and blending these charming studies with severer labors.

Mr. Clarke’s preface is a brief but very interesting treatise on the principles of translation, and gives us the key to his work. He believes that the translation must be as truly a work of art as the original poem, and that it should still stand by itself as a thing of beauty, even were the original author entirely forgotten. He says: “A test question to decide the success or failure of a translation might be this: Can you recite your version aloud, in the presence of men of taste, so as to give them real pleasure? If the poem is worth repeating aloud for its own sake, and gives satisfaction, that is enough.”

Enough, we should say, to justify its existence, but not enough to make it a satisfactory translation. We should add to the test that it should give satisfaction as a true rendering of the thought and expression of the original to one who knew it well; and Mr. Clarke seems to admit this necessity in his concluding paragraph in reference to Matthew Arnold.

Carlyle says somewhere (I am obliged to quote from memory) that there are “two methods of translation; one in which the translator goes over to his author, seeking to reproduce his thought, feeling, surroundings, and peculiarities; the other in which he endeavors to reclothe the author’s ideas in the form of the language into which he renders him.” Carlyle emphatically prefers the former method. Mr. Clarke seems rather to incline to the latter. I have none of the originals at hand, by which I might compare them. But, according to his own test, the authors have certainly succeeded; for the poems are fresh and graceful in thought and expression, and seem to be quite naturalized in their new homes. They are principally taken from the German, the Latin of Horace and others, and from the Gulistan of Saadi. There is a very graceful version of the well-known verses of Maeshherbes on the death of a daughter, which Longfellow has translated. A very happy version is that of Lord Lytton’s Latin verses “To Sleep.” A very charming little poem of Geibel’s on “Spring Thoughts in Italy” is given in two quite different ways by L. C. We suspect the first to be rather a paraphrase; but it is full of sweet natural imagery, and its diffuseness in keeping with its loving thought. In conclusion, I will give only one specimen; and that not so much for its literary or poetic merit, as because it conveys a delicate hint, which we hope will not be lost on us in our centennial clasping of hands and rejoicings in peace. It is from Saadi:—

TO PHILANTHROPISTS.

“Love with strength as well as meekness;
Love with firmness, not with weakness;
Probe the wound and scarify,
Before the balsam you apply.
Be so benevolent, I pray,
As to drive the wolf away:
Love him, if you will but keep
Some love also for the sheep.”

E. D. C.

CRIME AND CRIMINALS.

Public attention is just now specially called to the momentous problem of the proper mode of dealing with crime and criminals. The recent perpetration of a number of the most heinous crimes, and the recent hanging of several murderers, have introduced a fresh discussion of the subject. In this discussion, it is to be hoped that the question of preventing crime by so improving the conditions of society as to destroy the seeds from which it springs will be lifted into the importance which naturally belongs to it. There certainly can be no thorough treatment of the problem of criminality which omits this aspect of the case. Statistics show that a very large percentage of the criminal class were badly born and badly bred; that the conditions of their early existence were such as to lead almost inevitably to courses of vice and crime. And this being the case, the greatest hope for the ultimate improvement of mankind lies, perhaps, in the direction of those methods which seek to reform these conditions in which the germs of crime are nurtured,—methods that aim rather at the prevention of crime than its cure. This is a side of the subject that particularly demands the attention of social science and philanthropy; and one, too, that legislation must not disregard. Let benevolent citizens remember, at this season of the year, that something may be done in this direction even by the apparently trifling way of giving the poor children of the cities an occasional pleasure excursion into the country; and at all seasons, that the future security of society depends in no small measure on the kind of treatment which society now renders to the class of destitute and neglected children.

Yet, whatever good results may hereafter come from such preventive methods of dealing with crime, society has still to confront the problem, and will have to confront it probably for many years yet. What shall be done with regard to the crime that is already perpetrated, and with the criminal class that already exists?

That the problem is one of self-protection is manifest. Society must defend itself against the violence of its vicious members. It must protect its peaceful and law-abiding members against the outrage and rapacity of those who respect no law, whether of man or of conscience; it must do this because it is society, or a condition of existence in which human beings live together under a common recognition of a social bond.

But the obligation of society does not end, on this question, with the duty of self-protection. It has an obligation also towards the criminal. Society is in part responsible for what the criminal is—not wholly, but in part; is responsible to a considerable extent for the conditions which have tended to make him a criminal. And hence society is justly bound, not only to do the best it can to protect itself against him by placing him where he cannot do further harm to others, but to do the best it can for him by placing him under such conditions that, if possible, he may be reformed. The problem is to find some method of treating crime that shall successfully combine protection for society and reformation of the criminal; some plan of prison discipline that shall restrain the actual criminal, deter the probable criminal, and reform the prisoner.

Nor are these objects so far apart as they might at first seem; nor too far apart to be effectually combined in one plan. On the contrary, it is likely that the method which will best accomplish one will best accomplish the others. If we can only find the natural method of solving the problem—the method that comes nearest to the laws of Nature when she has to perform any operation of adjusting injured or disjointed forces,—we shall then most probably have discovered that to heal in one direction is to heal in all, and that there is really no inconsistency between the disciplines that are necessary to protect society and such as are most effectual for reforming the criminal.

W. J. P.

“THE KEYS OF THE CREEDS.”

It will be unfortunate if a little book bearing the above title should fail to make the impression it ought, as, owing principally to the deadness of the book-market, seems likely to be the case. It is a republication of an English book, written evidently by a man of education, scholarship, and literary accomplishment, who withholds his name for the reason that it might prejudice a certain class against the volume, and prevent its circulation among those who should especially be induced to consider the views the author submits. As the author of Ecce Homo remained concealed, in order that the public might discover without assistance from his name the import and purport of his chapters, so the writer of the Keys of the Creeds would pique the curiosity of his readers by anonymously flinging down a problem to be solved by unaided criticism.

The book is susceptible of two widely different interpretations, and has already perplexed the reviewers, as anonymous productions of the kind always will. On one hand it is regarded as the ingenious argument of a Romanist, who by playing fast and loose with definitions would persuade people of all opinions—even such as think themselves wholly outside of Christendom, extreme liberals and radical Free Religious men—that the Church of Rome extends to them a cordial hospitality, and really meets their demands by admitting their premises, and representing in symbolical form their conclusions. On the other hand it is regarded as the effort of an extreme rationalist to reduce ecclesiastical forms and dogmatical creeds to symbolical representations of universal ideas that are not peculiar to Christianity or to any other instituted religion, but one purely intellectual and spiritual. The newspaper criticisms of the volume, so far as they have come beneath our eye, have been amusingly off the track; the “evangelical” ones especially so, for they take the volume to be the production of a half-instructed writer who neither knows where he is, nor what he is about; whereas nothing is plainer to us than that he understands both what he is about, and where he is. What the Catholics think of a book which many suppose to have come from their side, and to be a revelation of their cunning, has not yet been declared, to our knowledge; what avowed “infidels,” or unbelievers in all religion, think of it is equally hidden as yet. But the believer in Free Religion cannot but take substantial comfort in it. For whatever may be the writer’s concealed purpose, whether he be a “Jesuit” throwing out a lure, or a “rationalist draining off the essentials of all instituted faith,” he plays immediately and skilfully into his hands. If he be a “Jesuit,” his argument proves his church to be nothing more than a poetical representation, without special commission, exceptional authority, “supernatural” illumination, and infallible truth; and if he be a “rationalist,” his argument proves that all religion has the same root, that all derive originally from Nature, that all must justify themselves to the human mind, and that the superiority of one over another consists entirely in the completeness with which it presents the essential forms of thought. None but a man of educated mind could have written the book; no mere dreamer or visionary could have written it; no fumbler or groper after a clew to an unexplored labyrinth could have written it. To our apprehension none but a thoughtful, reverent, sympathetic, peace-loving, inclusive, reconciling spirit could have written it. But this we shall know when we know the name and character of the author. In the meantime, while this is concealed, let the book be read seriously and in good faith. The chapters are short; the whole thirty occupy but two hundred pages; no words are wasted; the English is clear, simple, and luminous; the statements are plain; there is no affectation of mystery or profundity; and the conclusion is made to rest upon foundations that all can see and test. As we read it, it is an open but manly and modest challenge to the Christian Church to reclaim its birthright by avowing its parentage. O. B. F.

A VERY DIRTY, debased, and ignorant looking man came in to vote in a township of Michigan. Said one of the ladies, offering him a ballot, “I wish you would oblige us by voting this ticket.” “What kind of a ticket is that?” said he. “Why,” said the lady, “you can see yourself.” “But I can’t read,” he answered. “Why, can’t you read the ballot you have there in your hand, which you are about to vote?” the lady asked. “No,” said he, “I can’t read at all.” “Well,” said the lady, “this ballot means that you are willing to let the women as well as the men vote.” “Is that it?” he replied; “then I don’t want it; the women don’t know enough to vote.”—Grand Rapids Post.

Communications.

ORATION

ON THE OCCASION OF LAYING THE CORNER-STONE OF A TEMPLE BY THE HEBREW BENEVOLENT CONGREGATION OF ATLANTA, MAY 24, 1875.

BY REV. HENRY GERSONI.

Peace, peace to all friends, far and nigh, in the name of the Eternal! Peace be with you all, and the blessings of God on all of you who are assembled here this day to witness our joy, and to offer us your kind sympathies! We are erecting a shrine wherein we will worship the God of our forefathers according to the rites of our sacred creed. May he bless our labor with success, and may the work of our hands and the meditation of our hearts be acceptable before his sight! Amen.

When the ceremonies of this day were planned by the elders of my congregation, it was suggested to me that I should appear on this occasion in my ministerial apparel. But I have decidedly refused to do so. I am in principle opposed to the ministerial apparel even in the pulpit. Such paraphernalia may be necessary to a religion of the senses, but they are entirely useless—even objectionable—to a religion of the intellect and of the heart. Judaism, since the dispersion of our race, has never required any outward distinction between the pastor and his flock. As there should be no difference between the minister and his congregation with regard to the principles of morality and virtue which they are to pursue alike, so also should all outward distinctions be banished. The congregation ought to know its minister by his moral influence, not by the garment he wears.

Such was the principal reason why I have refused to appear to-day in the ministerial garments. I had another reason for doing so, which bears upon the idea of the work we are performing. Erecting shrines of worship is, to my knowledge, not a religious but a social act. "Thus saith the Eternal: The heaven is my throne and the earth is my footstool. What house will you build for me and what place (will you assign) for my dwelling?" Can we, who believe that God is above all comprehension of man, that he is the creator and sustainer of all that is, that he is—according to the Talmudical metaphor—"the place of the universe, and not the universe his place," can we build a house for him or appoint a place for his dwelling? Or can we even say that he is nearer to us here than there, at this time than at any other time? No, we cannot; and we never did say so.

In the principles of Judaism God says: "Wherever I will cause my name to be mentioned, I will come unto thee and bless thee." Wherever there is a heart throbbing with holy sympathies; wherever there is a lofty and unprejudiced mind working for the glory of God or for the elevation of mankind; wherever there is a faithful and steady hand practising what is beneficial to individual and social life—be it in a lowly hut or in a gorgeous palace; be it decked with gold and studded with gems, or covered with rags and bespattered with mire,—God is there; for his grace and glory is always there where his holy name is known and proclaimed in word and in deed, where the principles emanating from a knowledge of him prompt actions testifying to his magnificence. Such are the teachings of Judaism with regard to the presence of the Almighty.

Some modern thinkers who try to free humanity from the bondage of an overbearing hierarchy have in the benevolent ardor of their pursuit drawn Judaism into the question, and have repeatedly represented us as believers in a God who "dwelt behind the curtain" of the temple at Jerusalem. The object of those philosophers is praiseworthy on the whole; may God prosper their work, and humanity remember their names with gratitude! But this gross idolatry—I know no other name for it—which they impute to Judaism, is a sore mistake on their part. They know nothing of our sacred creed, nothing of the biblical metaphor as understood by us in its true sense; and ought not to be so positive in their assertions on that subject. The mistakes occurring in the versions of our Bible, which have had their origin in the Procrustean bed of principles antagonistic to Judaism, ought not to be laid at our doors. Judaism is not responsible for all that her antagonists have made her say or imply.

Thus we do not believe that God dwells or ever did dwell on any particular spot. "His glory fills the universe." Neither space can be assigned for his dwelling place, nor time for his existence.

The custom of building shrines for the service of God has emanated from a deep sense of respect for that worship. The believer could not reconcile himself to the idea of "worshipping God in a tent, while he dwelt in a house of cedars." Why should not edifices inspiring respect be erected for that purpose, as they are built for our physical wants and necessities? This custom was adopted by our ancestors, after they had come into contact with other nations, after they had emerged from the simplicity of an isolated life. Before this had come to pass, they worshipped God in their tents, in the field, everywhere; for they knew that he is omnipresent. The custom of building houses of worship has, therefore, only a social significance and importance, for it was social life which gave birth to it. Judaism keeps this always in view, and therefore we always build synagogues in the style of architecture most approved of by our neighbors, and most suitable to the locality of the place. Moses built a tabernacle, David purposed a temple of cedars, Solomon built one of rocks and cedars, Herod built one of marble; and every portion of our race builds at the present time its synagogue in a style most suitable to its native or adopted land.

And the social significance of our synagogues is the same as has been "the heap of stones" which Jacob erected at parting from Laban. Here is the story of that "heap" and its significance as we find it in Gen. 31:—

"Laban said, Now come, let us both make a covenant which shall be a witness between me and thee. And Jacob said to his brothers, Gather stones. And they took stones and made a heap, and they ate there on the heap. And Laban called it Yegar-sahadutha; and Jacob called it Gal'ed. And Laban said, This heap shall be a witness between me and thee; therefore he called it Gal'ed. And the elevation thereof (betokens) that the Eternal will watch me and thee, when we shall be hidden from one another. And Laban said, Behold the heap, and behold the monument, which I have cast up between me and thee. Let this heap and this monument be a testimony that I will not pass by this heap unto thee, nor shalt thou pass it by unto me for evil (purposes)," etc.

Our places of worship should be of the same significance to us as that monument was to the patriarchs who piled it up. They should remind the believers, that they should not pass by them with evil intentions against their fellow-men. Call those monuments Gal'ed or Yegar-sahadutha, call your houses of worship churches, or synagogues, or mosques,—their significance is always the same. You dedicate them to the worship of the common Father of mankind; and, since you believe in him, you durst not presume any evil thought or action against any of his children, your brothers. "Have not we all one Father?" exclaims the inspired Malachi; "has not one God created us? Why should we be false, man against his brother, to desecrate the covenant of our fathers!"

Alas, that this call which expresses in grand simplicity the world-redeeming truth of the common brotherhood of mankind should be so often disregarded by those who should do their utmost to uphold it. Alas, that preachers and congregations within the sacred walls of their shrines of worship should so often cherish and proclaim ideas just in opposition to that truth! One damns the other because he considers himself redeemed; another one nourishes prejudice against his neighbor because he thinks himself chosen by God; a third one fulminates anathemas against all the rest because they cannot agree with him on the subject of his own importance and potency.

Thus the very edifices which should serve as monuments of peace and mutual good-will become the hot-houses of prejudice, animosity, and perpetual strife. The holy name which is called on those houses is desecrated by the most unhallowed sentiments which the worshippers nourish. If I were in the presence of such people, I would speak to them in the following terms:—

By that heaven that bends above us, an abyss of endless space replete with the glory of God; by those multitudes of revolving orbs, each of them thousands of times larger than the earth, and yet nothing more than a spark of the light of eternal wisdom; by that blooming Nature which surrounds us, enrapturing our senses with the sweet productions of forces we can name but not comprehend; by that life which is teeming around us in millions of forms, and the source and generation of which is forever hidden from the scrutiny of man; by that spirit of God within us which we call intelligence, and which teaches us to perform works much stronger and much more lasting than we are,—I ask you here in the presence of God the Almighty by what span do you measure the greatness or littleness of your fellow-man in the sight of God? Where are the scales by which you determine the burden of your brother's importance in the sight of his and your maker? On what touchstone can you try the quality of your friend's soul? I am a Jew, and I want reason. My sacred tongue, the Hebrew, has no word for faith. The philosophers of my creed teach me to "search reason in belief." What reasonable proofs can you produce that a man who is a good and useful member of society, who by his dealings and actions is a blessing to his fellow-men—what reasonable proofs can you produce to satisfy me that he is regarded as a step-child by your and my Father in heaven, because he does not adopt your ideas on certain points alike unknown to you and him? In the name of the sacred brotherhood of mankind, in the name of Nature which has constituted us all alike, in the name of the God of Nature, who is our common preserver and Father, let us drop the apron-string of our old nurse. She has been a beautiful maiden in olden times, but she is too old and too feeble for us now; her gait is not firm enough to support us, her eyes are too dim to see the right way for us. That nurse is religious exclusiveness, the daughter of religious conceit. She did well enough as long as we could not speak to one another, as long as we were unable to understand each other. We have come to age now; at least, we are old enough to have done so. Let us, then, leave our old nurse alone; let us try to make up our differences between ourselves. Religious conceit has taught us many a good thing in the wrong way; let us try to improve on it. You are a good reasonable people; you will not burn me at the stake for the simplicity of my belief that God is one and incomprehensible, and for the ardor of my hope that this One Incomprehensible will bring about a unity of mankind, a feeling of brotherhood between man and his brother. And I have no prejudice whatever to call you my brothers, and to treat you as such; no matter what you think of salvation, or what hopes you cherish for the future. Let us, therefore, try to understand one another, let not the shadows of the past form an insurmountable wall between me and you.

Thus I would speak to them in the name of my people; for such are the stirring sounds which I can discern from amid the roll of the wheel of ages. Israel has been issuing them since time immemorial. My beloved race speaks so to friend and foe. Wherever Israel has found a foothold, he has tried to live according to the precepts of his royal bard: "Trust in the Eternal and do good; dwell in the land and feed (thyself) with truthfulness." Our history is our testimony for the past; the actions of our race all over the world at the present time show that we have not changed; and our edifices for the service of the Lord and for the benefit of our fellow-man, our shrines of worship and our temples of charity which we are erecting every year, express our intention to continue in the same path of virtue and benevolence for ages to come.

A small community as we are in this city which has just risen like a Phoenix from the ashes and ruins to which the most terrible calamity of human kind, the calamity of civil war, had reduced her—a small community as we are, here we manifest this day that we are willing to "dwell in the land," and to deal with our fellow citizens in morality and virtue; we are willing to share the fate of our neighbors for good or evil, as it may please God to decree upon us. So let this pile of stones be a witness between us that we shall not pass this place with evil intentions against each other; let it be a monument of virtue and true piety, of brotherly love, of peace, and of harmony between Jew and Christian, between man and his brother forevermore. And may God hasten the time which has been predicted by a Hebrew poet of a modern school:—

"A day will come, so saith the Lord,
A day of joy and grandeur,
When, like the sun in heaven's vault,
The truth will shine in splendor.
And, like the planets round the sun,
All spirits will revolve
Around the truth, whose brilliant rays,
All darkness shall dissolve.

"On that day will the earth resound
With praises of God's glory;
'The word of God forever stands!'
Each mouth will tell the story;
And those who bore his name of yore
Will glory in his name,
For by the wisdom they have taught
From earth was banished shame.
And all the nations of the earth
Will join their hands in love,
For they are children of One God,
The Holy One above."

Amen.

NO DEFINITION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In Rev. James Freeman Clarke's essay which appeared in THE INDEX of May 13, we are told that "a good definition may be a good thing for speculative purposes; but the practical question in regard to Christianity is whether, on the whole, it is useful to society, or pernicious."

What is this Christianity which is "useful or pernicious to society?" In vain have I sought for the answer in the essay before me. We are there told that, "whether we can define Christianity or not, we all know very well what it is."

A most remarkable statement, coming from one who well understands the utter irreconcilability of many honest minds on this subject!

Take, as a summary of the dogmas renounced by Unitarians, the Liberal Christian's leading editorial of January 3, 1874, on "Evolution and Revolution in Religion." Has the English language become so poverty-stricken that the same word, Christian, must apply alike to the believer in those ultra dogmas of Orthodoxy, and to one who has renounced such dogmas as pernicious to society?

Is it not true that nine-tenths of those who claim to be Christians adhere to those dogmas? If pernicious to society (and why else should they have been renounced by Unitarians?), how must Christianity "as a whole" be regarded from that standpoint? The Liberal Christian says that the old dogmas have nearly disappeared from the Orthodox pulpit. But not one line has been eliminated from their creeds, articles of faith, or Sunday-school books.

Let one look at the latter, who would catch a glimpse of the soul-cramping ideas dealt out to the rising generation. My neighbor's children sing:—

"Jesus died and paid for all."

Then my children wish to know what he paid for. I give as mild, as Unitarian, a version of the old story as I can; for I desire to be at peace with my neighbors. But that does not save me; the doctrine of atonement and substitution not being indoctrinated into the heads of my little ones, they are soon given to understand by said neighbors' children that their paternal ancestor is an infidel.

To be brief, how do Unitarians know that the dogmas of Orthodox Christianity are not the teachings of Christ? Have they ever proved this?

As proof of the wide difference in opinion on this subject, take a sentence from your correspondence "Z" in the same number of THE INDEX with Dr. Clarke's essay: "If men would keep in mind that in opposing Christianity they are literally doing Jesus' work over again, the name anti-Christianity would not be such a bugbear."

It is probably too late to challenge the record to know precisely what Jesus did say. We know something of the mutilation that record received from its priestly custodians, before it underwent a final sifting at the hands of Constantine's picked jury.

Thank heaven, there are other forces in religion now at work, moving hand in hand with science! If the hungry soul finds little to satisfy itself in the uncertain records of the past, let the living present, teeming with proofs of the divine love and goodness, claim its attention.

What faith is more rational, more calculated to inspire us with courage, effort, hope, than the undoubted belief that the laws of the universe, bearing the stamp of infinite love and wisdom, work together for the perpetual progress of those who will place themselves in harmony with them?

But I have wandered somewhat from the battlefield of "definitions." I do not like the dust and smoke of that contest. The peace of Free Religion is far more attractive. But the lines must be drawn. Not for "speculative purposes," but that we may be intelligible in our language, should definitions be clearly made. Until Unitarians can make good their claim to the Christian name (which they have not yet done), Christianity, as defined by the consensus of the Church, appears to me the only definition clearly set forth.

NEW ORLEANS, La., June 2, 1875.

FAITH IN GOD.

Amid the toils and disappointments of life, when doubt distorts the face of our destiny with frowns, and the soul tremblingly gropes in darkness, what holy joy to have the gloom dispelled, even for a brief season, by some one who dwells in a higher and serenest world of faith! To those who yearn for a rational and comforting faith in God, who long to see something more than blind, unconscious force behind the phenomena of Nature, Mr. Voysey's letter in THE INDEX of February 25 must be benignly encouraging. The noble and elevating faith in God, which he so humbly yet ably presents, is a belief which I think thousands of earnest thinkers are now struggling to attain. It is this faith that crowns, I believe, human nature with the highest dignity and happiness. Without this belief in an intelligent and beneficent God—a Being to whom we can look, from the mysteries of life and our own impotence, with filial trust—our existence and the universe itself must, sometimes at least, appear gloomy beyond the power of language to describe. I speak now from the highest authority I know—my own experience. As my faith in such a God as Mr. Voysey describes strengthens, life becomes more sublime, real, and happy. This faith gives a grand significance to Nature that makes all things noble. Supported by this faith, man can submit to the inevitable with a heroic fortitude.

But without some idea of a Supreme Intelligence directing the destiny of man, and guiding him by infallible law to higher attainments and more perfect happiness, I cannot conceive how the pains and disappointments of life, the inevitable ills of this existence, can be endured without bitter discontent and despair. Those who regard the phenomena of Nature as the expressions of a "blind necessity" may accept the conditions of life with stoic indifference; but can they meet cheerfully all the events of human destiny? Can they find any rational consolation in the severe trials and afflictions through which all must at some period in their lives pass? Does not the idea of purposeless pain excite rebellious discontent? If there is no Divine sympathy for the human heart, if there is no beneficent design in the chequered destiny of man, how can he obtain the inspiration, the moral courage, to endure and triumph over the inevitable afflictions of his lot? How can man cheerfully resign himself to pain and misfortune without a belief that such afflictions are a part of a grand universal system which has wisdom for its guide, and good for its goal? Without some faith in this direction, the inevitable tendency of human nature would be toward morose selfishness and mad despair. The warm affections, the noble aspirations that invest human nature with loveliness and dignity could not grow with healthy vigor, unless nourished by some faith in a supreme Wisdom and Goodness. It is this faith, vague and faltering though it may often be, which enables man to meet with patient resignation the inevitable ills of life. Thousands to whom philosophy never taught patient submission to the unavoidable afflictions of life, whose culture is so narrow that they cannot escape the persecution of misfortune by fleeing into the cheerful realms of refined thought and fancy, endure with the sublime heroism of Socrates the severest trials of earth, supported alone by this filial faith in God.

It is this simple yet grand faith in a God who sympathizes with the human mind in all the vicissitudes of its earthly development that makes the Orthodox religions, with all their revolting superstitions, so dear to the popular heart. The common soul must have some superhuman power on whose wisdom and goodness it can rely, when its own weakness is realized. Reason grows dizzy and faint in trying to sustain the pressure of life unaided, and the soul instinctively looks up to God, and reposes on the faith that its own weakness is supplemented by an All-sufficient strength.

Whatever may be the belief which science may yet force the human mind to accept, we cannot deny that some conception of a God is the most universal idea now prevalent. A few minds of rare constitution and scientific culture may have no settled belief on the subject, waiting to see what ideas of the universe the future revelations of science shall make terrible; but this is not the condition of many. The great majority of people of all degrees of culture have some belief in a God, which, though in the ordinary course of life it may not be apparent, is nevertheless, in the deep mental exigencies of their experience, their greatest support and consolation. Whatever weakens this belief in the popular mind must, I think, weaken the source of virtue and happiness, until the philosophy of duty and contentment, which the stern doctrine of "necessity" may be able to teach, is substituted for our present ideas of religion. But admitting that such a philosophy might finally be developed out of the ideas of materialism, which some think the tendency of science at present indicates, it is yet far from the mental grasp of the masses of mankind; and cannot be received with comfort by many, till the whole character of our religious thought is changed. That this belief in a supreme Intelligence, in whom the soul of man finds every ideal that it can conceive, and to whom it can turn in the dark trials of life with filial trust, will grow deeper and stronger as science discloses more clearly the secrets of the universe, I humbly hope. But, whatever may be the effect of the future of science on the idea of a God, whoever cannot treat this idea with the tenderest sympathy is not qualified to discuss the religious thought of this age.

OZARK, Mo.

CATHOLICISM AND PROTESTANTISM, AND THE DANGERS FROM BOTH.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Why is it that we hear so much of the dangers from Catholicism, and so little of those from Protestantism; that even radical papers (even the best of them, THE INDEX) have so much to say of Catholicism and its dangerous tendencies, and little or nothing of the dangers threatening us from Protestantism? That even radicals speak but favorably of Protestantism, as if that were all right, and no danger whatever need be apprehended from that quarter? That even Mr. Wasson can accept Col. Higginson's noble words in his last essay (INDEX, June 17) only when applied to religion under Protestant influences? Did not the Colonel speak a great truth, when he said that "he never knew half a dozen men who were logical?" And is it not clear that you, my much misapprehended and therefore much censured friend, are one of these half-dozen, and almost the only one who is heard in THE INDEX, who is alike just to, and yet severe on, all sects,—equally opposed to what is wrong in, and yet tolerant to, all religions?

That Catholicism is worse in its theology and tendencies than Protestantism cannot be denied by even the most unprejudiced and tolerant mind; and yet it seems, nevertheless, that Col. Higginson was again right, when he said: "I don't care what they are logically bound to do to me," as long as they are not logical, and "as long as those inside either organization do not interfere with me." It is true, though, that only the Catholic masses are thus illogical, to some extent tolerant, and "don't interfere with others;" but those representing the Church and shaping its character—the popes, cardinals, bishops and clergy in general—are logical, terribly in earnest, terribly intolerant, and would be as terribly dangerous, if their might were equal to their bad will. There is no denying the fact that Catholicism, if logically lived up to, and Catholic priests if they realize their wishes, are or might become very dangerous.

And yet, I consider Catholicism and its priests less dangerous for America (i.e., in our condition) than Orthodox Protestantism (where I in this article speak of Protestantism I mean mainly Orthodox or Evangelical Protestantism). Paradoxical and illogical as this may seem to most Protestants, yea, even to radicals, it is nevertheless based on facts,—facts little acknowledged, at least heeded, by Protestants, as easily may be proved. And to prove them I need neither deny nor palliate the immensity of the danger of Catholicism and its tendencies, or the craftiness of its priests; and thus far I may please Protestants. But, whatever may be the intensity of this danger, it is greatest merely in theory, and happily very much less in fact. For the general intelligence and enlightenment so remarkably characterizing the nineteenth century exert their benign influence in the Catholic as well as in the Protestant world, if not with equal force and effect, yet with enough to dispel much of the former darkness—to excite the masses and push them at least some distance onward on the path of progress. However immutable the Church, however malevolent her ecclesiastics, the masses have progressed, are no more the same that they once were, no longer to be dragged by the former as they were in past times. An enormous change has taken place among the lay-members of that Church even within the last decennium. Be it remembered, if we would form a just conception of the Catholicism of to-day, we must not, as most of us are prone to do, base our judgment of it upon Catholicism in America, where the general freedom of belief gives to its clergy more freedom to develop their hierarchical character of that Church; it is Europe, it is Italy, Germany, to which we must look to learn the true status of Catholicism to-day. Even here, however, in America, who is not aware of the great difference in intelligence and freedom of thought between the freshly-arrived Irishman and his descendants even in the first generation? Of course, the difference is still greater in the next following ones, and in proportion as they become "Americanized." The rapid increase of their numbers, in which many Protestants see likewise a disquieting source of danger, can therefore forebode no great peril.

In addition to all this, there is yet another very strong point in proof of my assertion. Any possible danger from Catholicism must grow less in proportion as the same danger from Protestantism must, for the same reason, grow greater. Whatever danger, namely, may threaten from Catholicism, or be planned by its priests, they are watched by millions of jealous Protestants, whose Argus eyes will detect any scheme which the craftiness or bigotry of the worst priest could devise, and which will speedily be exploded before it can produce much mischief.

But how is it, on the other hand, with Protestantism? I have stated above, and reiterate it here again, that Catholicism is dangerous, that more especially its priests are an everlasting source of danger; but is Protestantism not also? Are its ministers less dangerous than the other's priests? The Protestants, because Protestants, will no doubt deny any danger in Protestantism, much of it as they can see in Catholicism; they are apprehensive of no danger from their own ministers, much of it as they fear from Catholic priests. This is just what makes Protestantism the more dangerous, and its ministers the more perilous men, as we presently shall see.

The Catholics, besides being in a minority of one to five or six, are, as we have seen, watched most jealously, its priests especially always being mistrusted; any mischief that they actually should aim at would be timely discovered and prevented; while Protestant ministers are highly respected, revered, looked up to in fullest confidence as reliable guides, believed to be models of all that is good, moral, and righteous, and naturally are supported by their churches and communities in all their plottings. In this, again, consists another great part of the dangers from Protestantism. For are these ministers really so different from Catholic priests? Are they every way so much superior? Is not a priest a priest, whether he be called priest or minister, whether he wears a long black coat or a white cravat? The genus is the same; the instincts and endeavors of the one are not a whit different from those of the other. The ruling passion, the class-vice, is the love of dominion, power; and the (Orthodox) Protestant minister craves it, and sacrifices as much for it as any Catholic priest.

But perhaps I shall be told here that Catholicism and its priests are enemies of individual freedom, are opposed to our public schools, while Protestants and their ministers favor both. Are you so very sure of that, my Protestant friends? Of the first part you may be sure, because it is true. But of the second part you cannot be sure; for that is not true. You have only been deceived by your confidence in your minister and his preaching. Just look at the "God-in-the-Constitution" party: what "individual liberty" would they grant to those outside their Church? Can Catholics do worse than these Protestants? Can there be any danger so great and as immediate from Catholics? These Constitution-knights have not only the good-will and aid of almost all Protestant churches and congregations, but even the government, congress, legislatures, to back them. What, then, will become of our individual civil liberty, if this party should succeed?

But the Catholics oppose the public schools, and endeavor to destroy that system, I am told; and Protestants, even the God-in-the-Constitution party, favor them. Admitted—as to the charge against Catholics; but denied, as to the claim of Protestants. "Oh, but you are wrong, sir; you are certainly mistaken in this!" Well, let us see who is mistaken. Just put the Douay version instead of King James' Bible into public schools; let the teacher open these with Ave Marias, sing Catholic devotional songs, &c.; and then see how friendly these Protestants will be to our public schools, and how ardently they will support that system. They certainly would very soon be worse enemies of the schools and the system than Catholics, to whom equally unjust things are offered by Protestants, now are. For these good Protestants and their ministers are great patriots, and warm friends of our public schools, as long as they are Protestant schools (as they in fact are), but strongly opposed to them when the attempt is made to make them, not Catholic, but merely what they ought to be—free and unsectarian!

And yet these very Protestants claim to be the Christians par excellence, and the rest say, Amen! They impose their theology and theological notions on everybody—Congress, President, State legislatures; and everybody cowardly submits. Even courts of justice and the laws of the country must conform to their dictates; they rule supremely even in civil matters, and the masses obey. But, not yet satisfied with all this, they strive also to unite Church (their Church) and State, make the latter subordinate to and support the former, acknowledge their own Church as the only State Church; and thus Protestants as the only citizens eligible for office in State and general government, and the rest (unorthodox Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Infidels, &c.) mere dummy-citizens entitled to no rights but to pay taxes and to live!

Who, then, are the more dangerous, Orthodox Protestants or Catholics? From whom is more and greater danger to be apprehended, and who need more to be watched, these Protestants or the Catholics? To a mind that sees things as they are, these questions answer themselves. And yet these very dangerous "Evangelicals" continually cry out "stop thief!" clamor against the Catholics; and the masses, even radicals, too, imitate them and cry also! They thus aid their bitterest enemies, instead of organizing and opposing them! The only remedy seems to be Liberal Leagues and the "Demands of Liberalism." Let us have them!

MORRIS EINHSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., June 24, 1875.

WHAT will people say? This question makes the mind homeless. Do right and fear no one; thou mayst be sure that with all thy consideration for the world thou wilt never satisfy the world. But if thou goest straight forward on thy way, not concerning thyself with the friendly or unfriendly glances of men, then thou hast conquered the world, and it is subject to thee. By heeding the question, "What will people say?" thou becomest subject to the world.—Auerbach.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age," an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist, With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove. Heinrich, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DÜHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FETTERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Eve.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservancy. By B. Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subject of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Education. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence. The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Doubt Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: The Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHÉLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	33.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Book-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.30
Vanity Fair.....	1.30
The Newcomes.....	1.30
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.30
The Virginians.....	1.30
Easton, and Love the Widower.....	1.30
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Deeds, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.30
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
On Sound as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEENReligion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,NEWSPAPER*Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOANG. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,SERMONS,*ESSAYS,*and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,

BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NEW MUSIC BOOKS.THE CHORUS CHOIR.

By DR. EBEN TOURJEE.

A new book of sterling merit, for the use of Musical Societies, Conventions, and "Chorus Choirs," which are now becoming quite common. 200 pages, and about 100 pieces.

Price $2.00. Per Dozen, $18.00.

LORELEY. An Unfinished Opera by Mendelssohn. 60c. Per Doz., $5.40.

A beautiful fragment, which, however, is complete in itself.

HOW SHALL I TEACH? or, Hints to Teachers. A pamphlet by Dr. Lowell Mason, with a concise description of his mode of instruction. Much sought for. 38 cts.

FIRST WALPURGIS NIGHT.

MENDELSSOHN.

Cloth, $1.25. Boards, $1.00. Paper, 80 cents.

For Musical Societies.

Curtis and Behr's New Method for the Zither. $1.50.

The Zither is an instrument like a guitar, but much more powerful, and well worth learning.

Sold by all music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10³⁰ A.M., 2³⁰ and 7³⁰ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOKCard,

—AND—

JobPRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 15, 1875.

WHOLE No. 290.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL of this State have refused to commute the sentence of Jesse Pomeroy, the child-torturer.

THOMAS NAST, in one of his late cartoons, posts the New York Tribune as—"Founded by Horace Greeley, and co-founded by Whitelaw Reid."

ROBERT DALE OWEN is reported to have become mentally deranged. The many friends he has won by a long life of probity and purity will be deeply grieved, if the report is confirmed.

ADMIRABLE ROUS defends cock-fighting in the London Times, and writes amusingly enough on his hobby, which one of his profession could hardly be expected to condemn. Indeed, is not the gallant Admiral himself a "Lancashire black-breasted Red"?

MORE than one orator has lately quoted this well-known and apt metaphor of Fisher Ames: "A monarchy is a mighty man-of-war—staunch, iron-ribbed, resistless when under full sail; yet a single hidden rock sends her to the bottom. Our Republic is a raft, hard to steer, your feet always wet; but nothing can sink her."

THE FAMOUS frigate Constitution, or "Old Ironsides," is now in the Philadelphia Navy Yard, hauled up for repairs. But it is proposed to break up her weather-beaten and war-beaten hull, because Congress omitted to make a special appropriation for repairing her. This, too, in the season of Centennials! Even the ghosts of the Guerrière and the Java should rise in protest against such vandalism.

REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE is guilty of improving on the Scriptures, in his fourth of July oration: "The time has happily come when, though one should speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not the TRUTH, he will become as a sounding brass and as a tinkling cymbal." Paul would have done better if he had consulted Dr. Clarke in advance, whose emendation we heartily approve.

APPARENTLY the Republican party intends to commit itself unambiguously to a hard money platform. The Iowa platform declares explicitly: "Gold and silver are the only reliable and permanent legal tender, and we favor the earliest attainment of a currency convertible with coin, and therefore advocate gradual resumption of specie payments by continuous and steady steps in that direction." Such an utterance from a Western State is especially encouraging.

BISHOP WHITTINGHAM, of the Episcopal Church of Maryland, has narrowly escaped an ecclesiastical trial for refusing to put on trial two of his clergy, who had adopted certain ritualistic practices. If people profess to believe in church discipline, why should it not be enforced? The Bishop is not entitled to the least sympathy for liberality, if he shirks a duty imposed on him by his office. But the Church is a mush of concessions now-a-days, too intelligent to believe its creed, too politic to enforce its discipline, and not honest enough to discard either.

GOVERNOR CHAMBERLAIN, of South Carolina, delivered an address to the Yale Law School which on one point of great importance was healthier and truer than President Woolsey's address to the Phi Beta Kappa Society (noted last week). We refer to universal suffrage, which the venerable ex-President declared he "did not believe in," and which the applause of his audience showed that they too did not believe in. But Governor Chamberlain spoke on this subject a high and hopeful word which is a lesson greatly needed by the college graduates who have lost faith in American ideas. In another column we republish this admirable passage of Governor Chamberlain's speech.

DR. CLARKE says that the New York Nation "has carried its honest hatred of tawdry sentimentalism so far as almost to have invented a new kind of cant—the cant of anti-sentimentalism." This is slightly preposterous, for the Nation has not coined any cant on the subject. As to its anti-sentimentalism, we heartily like it; or should do so, if that able paper did not sometimes confound sentimentalism with the moral sentiment—a very different thing, and one which the Nation is doing its best to foster in regard to the corruptions so prevalent in politics and business. A stern insistence on justice is no more "sentimental" than a stern insistence on "honesty," which is the Nation's hobby. One hobby is as good as the other; success to them both!

WHEN DR. CLARKE is not talking Unitarian Christianity, he talks excellently well, as in more than one passage of his late noble oration of the fourth of July. Among other things he said: "It is not a mere coincidence, but rather a happy Providence, which makes this old city of Boston, the place 'where American freedom raised its first voice'—the Cradle of Liberty a hundred years ago—to become again today the Cradle of Reunion and of National Brotherhood." Yes, Boston was once the Cradle of Freedom, and is now the Cradle of Fellowship; and Dr. Clarke rejoices at it. Why does he not rejoice that it is also the Cradle of Free Religion,—which is Freedom and Fellowship fused into one? If he could only shake off his Christian spectacles, he would see that Free Religion is the very essence of the United States Constitution, which is the summary of all the victories that we are now so enthusiastically centennializing.

TEN YEARS ago we advocated the establishment of negro suffrage at the South on the ground that self-interest would in that case compel the whites to educate their former slaves, and thus fit them for citizenship, which could not be expected if the latter had no political power. It is pleasant to see that things are actually working as we predicted. Says the Memphis Appeal in a recent issue: "All the trouble between the two races in the South can be traced directly to the ignorance of the blacks [?]. It is, therefore, to the interest of the South that the negroes be educated. It is a saving to the tax-paying whites to see that the non-tax-paying negroes are educated. And it is certainly the duty of the Southern States to educate the masses." This belief must spread and conquer; and it ought to reassure the grumblers and groaners over the fact of universal suffrage—which must precede universal education, and not vice versa.

UNDER the head of "Foreign Notes," one of the Boston dailies recently had this item of news: "The Katie King imposture has been matched in Paris, but, instead of being allowed to remain simply an exploded humbug, the French fraud has been followed by the trial and punishment of the swindlers. They consisted of a photographer, the editor of a Spiritualist paper, and the inevitable American who always turns up in the novel swindles abroad. They had a thriving business, and were so successful that, although the charge for spirit photographs was but twenty francs, the victims of their delusions voluntarily gave in some cases as high as four hundred francs for portraits of deceased friends. Yet no swindle was ever more palpable. A lady assistant contrived to get some idea of the appearance of the deceased person, and then from a large collection of photograph faces one was selected, stuck upon a doll dressed in white muslin, and a hazy photograph was taken. This was clearly proved, and the 'spirit box' and the collection of photographs used were produced in court. Yet the defence had a superabundance of witnesses whose faith could not be shaken by the exposure. The two Frenchmen were sentenced to a year's imprisonment each, and the American accomplice to six months' confinement."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHA, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

The Lilies.

READ TO THE FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY OF SPARTA, WISCONSIN, JUNE 27, 1875.

BY W. H. SPENCER.

Consider the lilies, how they grow.—MATT. VI., 28.

I think Jesus was a Nature-lover, there is such an aroma of the fields and flowers about so many of his sermons. He saw God in the lilies of the field; the grass which to-day is, and to-morrow is cut down and withereth; the falling sparrow; the rain that comes alike to just and unjust; the sheep that feed on the green hills, and the shepherd that watches them; the grape-vines with their purple clusters; the fig-trees and mustard seeds, the waving grain, and the sunset clouds. All natural objects around him, the fishes of the sea, birds of the air, flowers of the field, were revelations of the God of Nature and Father of Men.

It is true he respects the "Law and the Prophets"; but dearer than any of the old stories about what Jehovah had said was the voice of the Ever-Present, as he heard it on mountain, in valley, and by the rippling waters of Galilee. "See the lilies, how they grow!"

It was a characteristic of the Nazarene that he was impressed, not so much by the grand and sublime in Nature, as by the beautiful and lovely. He saw God less in tempests and thunder-bolts than in the twittering sparrows and lilies of the field. It bespoke his own gentle, lovely nature; for we see as we are.

The world is full of books about God, but what is so full of God as the flowers! I may get sceptical over books, and cry, "I cannot find thee;" but let me take the simplest flower and look into its face and commune with it a moment, and a light, as from above, comes over our two faces, and my soul sings, "I cannot lose thee!" In the flower I find the Father. Each lily-bell seems to ring out to my ears in a voice soft and sweet,—

"Thou believest in me, believe also in him that sent me,"

And I believe.

To most of us, spring is the loveliest season of the year, perhaps because in the newly resurrected life we get nearer the life-giver. In March how impatiently we look for May! Winter always lingers in the lap of spring,—hangs on like a tiresome lover, till the last minute. Miss Spring hinted plainly enough these two or three mild days in March, that winter had better be gone; but he never takes a hint in latitude forty-five degrees. "Good riddance to you," she finally cried, as the old rheumatic fellow in white hair and furs skulked 'out the back door of the year, and limped off toward the North Pole; "go up to your own house among the icebergs, and look after your school of seals and walrus and droves of polar bears, and let me and my flowers alone!" And we clapped our hands with glee, as we saw old winter vanish under the cover of a north-east storm! Welcome, ever welcome, to sunny-faced, golden-haired spring! Our hearts went out to meet her coming, when she was yet a great way off. How we watched the green tide, as it came rolling up from the south, climbing the hills, winding through the valleys, and bathing the shivering earth with its flood of living glory!

"The brown trees, swelling with buds, become nets to catch the sunshine; and then the golden sunshine caught turns into crinkled leaf and the whites and crimsons of the blossom. The ferns and mosses and vines, little ones of the woods, steal into the rooky arms and creep up along the bodies of the great trees with loving hug, with no fear that they shall be repulsed. No secret place is left unvisited by spring. The lone plant in a desert, the seed buried under a leaf, the brown bush we put into the cellar last November out of sight, the very potatoes in the barrel, all hear the whisper and feel the touch and turn to life again. Within the room of a sick girl in some foul city-garret, stands a solitary rose in an earthen pitcher, cut off like a caged bird from the companionship of kin. The spring, flying over, knows its child; stops there, and bids the plant and the sick one with it turn again to life and beauty. She works for no eyes. She works for all eyes."

The first wild flower we find in these parts generally is the anemone, or, as we call it, the Badger,—perhaps because we fancy the Badger State a little ahead of her sister States in wide-awake, up-in-the-morning spirit. Then comes the bashful trailing arbutus, very rare about here, peeping through the leaves almost before the snow is gone. Next the blue violet and the blood-root; and, hurrying after, the dandelion puts out her plump yellow face, as unconcerned as though troops of boys and girls were not hunting like greedy wolves to devour her. Close by, the buttercup peeps up with cheek so polished and look so prim, congratulating herself that she was not born an unlucky dandelion to be rooted up just for greens,—while over the brooks, bending low to catch the music of the waters, the downy buds of the willow appeared, and then the poplar and elm; and last of all the lazy oak put on his spring suit, and bid us good-morning as we passed. Six weeks are gone, and spring has thrust her hands down deeper into her basket of flowers, and scattered through gardens cherry blossoms, apple, and plum, lilac, tulip, and snow-ball, peony, pink, and pansy. Wide over fields the white clover has come out, to tempt the honey bee that has appeared expressly to be tempted; and over all is shed the glory of unnumbered roses, while, growing near, are the lilies of the field.

Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these! Take the simplest flower and go through its labyrinthine chambers; note its complicated mechanism, the delicate structure and exquisite finish of every part. It is a tiny cathedral; a miniature universe. What matchless colors! What artist mingled them? Did spring dip her brush in the sunset flame, and borrow of the rainbow its hues?

"Consider the lilies, how they grow." I rejoice every spring morning, and all the summer long, that one need not be a scientific botanist to delight in the flowers. The little girl loves the lily, perhaps as much as Prof. Gray. She knows not the name of one of its parts. If you should describe to her the lily as perianth, funnel-form, colored, of six distinct sepals, spreading or recurved above, deciduous; stamens six, included; anthers linear, style elongated, stigma triangular, etc.,—she would probably take you for a foreigner asking her name, and naively reply: "I am mamma's girl!" Yet the untaught child loves the lily, kisses its pure lips, and preserves it as a thing of beauty and a joy to last for many days. Happy for us, we may love the lily and God in it, though we are ignorant of physiological and structural botany, of the process of inflorescence and the hard nomenclature. Its beauty speaks to us in our mother tongue. Still, it is true, that not half the secret wonders of the floral kingdom reveal themselves except on intimate acquaintanceship. Only the botanist can truly say, "I see the lily; how it grows."

It is not my purpose, however, to-day to analyze the lily or explain the process of its growth, but simply to offer some thoughts which the flowers suggest. There are plants and flowers which remind one instinctively of people he has known or read of.

There is the big, red-faced sunflower friend of ours, and the primrose maiden. Some men ought to be named lignum-vite, and some good mothers balm-of-gilead. One meets every day the common catnip sort of people. Some children grow up like cotton-wood, and others like the willow or the hickory. Some people, when once introduced, like buckwheat, are intrusive, and persist in coming in and out of season. Others introduce themselves and stick, like quitch-grass and Canada thistle. Some wild flowers, like the Indians, retreat before civilization, while others advance with it. The plantain was called by the Indians the "white man's foot," because it follows his tracks.

The American aloe is a hundred years in getting ready to flower, so are some men; while others, like the gourd or the hop-plant, grow like Jack's beanstalk. The trailing arbutus is quite common in New England, but it is nomadic. I have gone miles to search for it where it appeared the spring previous, and found not a sprig of it. Like the Arab, it had struck tent and silently stole away. Sometimes it seems to prefer gravelly knolls, and then again it seeks the edge of pasture bogs and the shade of the woods. Like some men's opinions, it cannot be depended upon. You never know where to find them, in religion or politics.

There is a whimsicality in some plants that matches any eccentricity in man. Why do a honeysuckle and a bean-vine wind in opposite directions, the one to the left and the other to the right? It is said that either will swing in the wind or sprawl over the ground, rather than turn the other way. They strikingly remind us of that perverse creature of whom it is written:—

"When she will she will,
And when she won't she won't."

Of the freakishness of other flowers a writer offers the following:—

"The keturia opens at nine o'clock in the morning and shuts at ten, as if it had a visual weakness; while a bed of portulacas never expands unless the sun is out, and the hotter he shines the wider they spread themselves; and the evening primrose waits until he has gone down, and then comes open with a snap, like a subdued kind of fire-cracker. But most unaccountable of all, perhaps, is the night-blooming jasmine. You see a simple tree-like plant, with a plain style of leaf, at the base of which grows a spray of yellowish green tubes, like lilac buds, suggesting more than anything else a string of small candles. You look at them in the middle of the day, and they are 'only that and nothing more'; and you might, if you did not know their ways, forget all about them. But when evening comes forgetting is impossible. The room is full of fragrance, rich as orange flowers, and almost as subtle as violets; and lo, your little candles are all lighted, and from somewhere about them comes that perfume that is so delicious and so mysterious as to its source. The next morning they begin to contract; by noon, the five points are all close packed, and there is no scent to them or about them at all, till night comes on again; and so they continue, scentless through daylight, but of exquisite sweetness when darkness appears." They are the nightingale of the flowers.

The fringed gentian always suggests to me Thoreau. It is found only in the most secluded spots, late in the autumn. It seems to shrink from the sight of man; and, hermit-like, to delight in solitary places. Like the arbutus, it refuses to be tamed. When torn from its native home, it pines away. Bryant's beautiful poem dedicated to this flower is commended to those who cannot see the flower itself.

When the young maiden touches her lips with rouge, and her cheeks with "lily-white"; decks her hat with the ostrich plume, and borrows of the silkworm her covering; and subsidizes hair-dresser, mantua-maker, and milliner,—we see that she has designs on somebody. She doesn't put on that rouge just for the mere fun of it, or to please cat or canary. She has early learned that there is a utility in beauty; that a pretty face and neat dress attract; and, to tell the truth, she has arranged her bow to catch a beau, to keep one already caught, or win admiration of those she admires. She is not aware that she is practising an art which the flowers employ. They know the secret of attraction, and they teach us the utility of beauty. Do you imagine that the beauty-spots on the lily, and all the brilliant colors of fuchsia and pansy, columbine and clover, are put on just to please one another, or because they had nothing else to do? Not a bit of it. These gay dresses of the flowers take the eye, and the heart too, of the bee and the butterfly; and where beauty is, they make their morning and their evening calls. It is one of the curious discoveries of Mr. Darwin that flowers have become beautiful solely to attract insects to assist in their fertilization. He adds: "I have come to this conclusion from finding it an invariable rule that, when a flower is fertilized by the wind, it never has a gayly-colored corolla." Thus we see that, in the floral as in the animal kingdom, beauty has its utility, the highest form of beauty being a beauty of mind and heart. But there are, as Mr. Greg has pointed out, some counteracting agencies to the perfect operation of the law of sexual selection and "survival of the fittest" in man which I cannot consider to-day.

How much, too, we may be likened to the flowers in this respect: we are both the creatures of circumstance, dependent on external relations!

Many things are necessary for the lily to flourish.

First, there is sunlight. For every lily a sun, a globe of fire more than one million times larger than the earth, is required.

Secondly, sun-heat. Shut that off—muffle up the sun, and not only lily would soon die, but everything on earth would speedily perish. It has been estimated that if, by any mishap in Nature or judgment of the Almighty Ruler of the universe, we should be robbed of all light and heat from the sun for three days, not a vestige of animal or vegetable life would remain on the globe, unless it were among deep sea fishes and the subterranean inhabitants in limestone caves. Herschell says that the first forty-eight hours after the loss of the sun would suffice to precipitate every atom of moisture from the air in deluges of rain and piles of snow, and there would set in a universal frost such as Siberia or the highest peak of the Himalayas never felt—a temperature between two and three hundred degrees below the zero of our thermometers. That would certainly be rather chilly for our beautiful lily.

Thirdly, not only must it have the sun, but it must have it just at the right distance—not too near nor too far. If our planet should be moved up to where the planet Mercury is, the lily would be burned to death in a few minutes; for Mercury, when nearest the sun, receives ten and one-half times more light and heat than we do, so that, if there are a fauna and a flora on that luminary, they must be very unlike ours. On the other hand, if our earth were removed out to the limits of our solar system—out to where Uranus and Neptune are, the lily would freeze to death in a minute; for their distance from the sun is so immense that the sun would only appear like a bright dog-star, and their climate must be arctic, even in summer; while the winter of the Uranians (if there are any) is more than forty years long, during which period they get not even a ray from their little sun. How dark and frigid that long night must be! If the planet is inhabited at all, it must be by a race of beings entirely different from us, unless there is some special provision for light and heat which we cannot conceive of. It is safe to say that our lily would not grow on arctic Uranus more than on torrid Mercury. It must have the sun just as it is, and where it is.

Fourthly, not only light and heat, but also moisture it must have. For it a sun blazes in the sky, and an ocean becomes a watering-pot. Nature carries barrels of water, on the wings of the wind, to sprinkle the lilies with,—squeezes it out of the spongy clouds, and flings them up against the sun to dry. What a world of care one lily requires! A sun to light and heat it, and an ocean to water it!

Fifthly, it must spring, like the good seed, from "good ground," or it will wither and perish. If it falls by the wayside, the flower-girl will pick it before it has fairly blossomed. If it springs up in stony places where there is not much earth, it will get scorched when the sun is up, and because it has no root it will wither away; or if it fall among thorns, the thorns will choke it and it will perish.

In order to grow one lily, all Nature becomes a servant. Sun and earth, wind and water, are the prime ministers of the lily, and obey its nod. When we see it growing so silently in the valley, we do not realize how dependent it is upon a thousand subtle relations, how it is a creature of circumstance, apparently the sport of the fickle elements, but really a child of destiny as truly as man is, held in the grip of a universal and invariable law, but a law that is good, and spelled with four letters, L-o-v-e.

If the lily is a creature of conditions so is man. He is the offspring of the earth, perhaps, in a more literal sense than we think of. There is some cause for the dark skin of the African, red skin of the Indian, yellow hue of the Mongol, and the white face of the Caucasian. Blood will tell? But there is something back which makes blood.

If all mankind sprang from two parents (which is a mooted question), then it would appear to be external influences alone which make the difference between races of men. If they did not so spring, it is certain that difference in soil, climate, food, and the outer life of people, for many generations, will produce marked divergences from the original type. It is safe to assume that the tropical sun of Africa has had something to do in blackening the skin of Africans, and that the frigid temperature of the arctic regions and their blubber diet has done much to dwarf mind and body of Esquimaux. Physical man is only a complicated vegetable—a plant with a nerve-system. When Nature plants him under the equator, he springs up, but the bud of his energy is scorched by a too tropical sun. When she plants him in polar regions, the sinews of his strength are chilled and shrivel up, and, like the dwarfed fir-trees there, the arctic man is a pygmy. Nations, in order to wax strong and great, must be suckled well by Mother Nature, or, like the lily, they will not grow very much, though they toil and spin with all their might. Icebergs will crush out any one's energy, and tropical heat will dry up any one's vitality. In order for this vegetable organism which we call man to grow and flourish, he must be favored with two things on earth; namely, soil and climate. Look at that vast Continent of Asia, and you will see that the regions that have become populous and have attained to civilization are those where the soil is fertile, and climate temperate. All along the southern rim of the Continent, from China around the Indian Ocean States to Palestine, have arisen those great nations—Medes, and Persians, and Babylonians—that warred against the great nations of Greece and Rome further west; while Central Asia, which is for the most part dry and barren steppes or sandy deserts, has been the home of wandering savages, the great hive of those swarms of barbarous Tartars that have at different times overrun China, India, and Persia. Such soil never has borne and never can bear anything but a kind of Canada-thistle civilization. The human lily is choked by the thorns of hard circumstance. Humanity must pack its trunk and get out of that sand, before it can develop, get wealth, wisdom, and power, and found cities and republics. The Arabs, so long as they hung around their little oases in Arabia, and tried to climb up the road of civilization on the camel's back, with the simoom blasting them in the face, could never get higher than the science and philosophy of Moses or the Magi; but when they drew their swords in the seventh and eighth centuries, and struck for richer soil, and captured the gardens of Eden in Palestine, Asia Minor, and Northern Africa, and crossed the Straits of Gibraltar, and seized the purple vineyards of Southern Spain, then Arabian civilization reached its zenith and blossomed forth in the best scholarship, science, and literature of the middle ages. Good fertile soil is as essential for nations to grow in as for lilies. Plant men in a desert of Sahara, and they will come to nothing but wandering Bedouins.

Of course, the wonderful progress of Islamism, as well as of Arabian science, was not wholly due to the wealth which flowed from the rich countries they had conquered. As Mr. Carlyle says: "Mohammedanism triumphed with the sword. But where did it get its sword?" Its sword was its fiery zeal for the new-born faith. No question about that. It was a profound religious conviction that conquered. But suppose that same conviction had swept, like a flood, over a desert or a barren rocky land, would a harvest of ideas have rooted and ripened there? The swelling seed-thoughts fell on rich ground, and, because they did so fall, they sprang up and brought forth an hundred-fold.

The river Nile was the great artery that fed the ancient civilization of Egypt. It was the jugular vein of the brain that builded the Pyramids. Sever that, and the Pharaohs and Ptolemies had never been born, and Memphis and great Thebes had never been builded. Nations do not grow on rocks like lichens, nor among thorns more than lilies; they must have loam. Not only were all the great nations of antiquity sown on fertile soil, but also in a favorable climate. If you will look at the map of the world, you will see that it is within a belt of land forty degrees wide that this earth has always raised her best crop of men—a belt north of twenty degrees and south of sixty degrees north latitude. Above this, it is too cold, and below too warm, to grow men strong in body and mind. Outside of this form of Nature there are thorns that choke and a sun that withers the plant of humanity, or frosts that forever nip the bud of its promise before it comes to fruition.

Nations, almost as much as the lilies, are creatures of circumstance. What we are and what we become depends very much upon where we take root and spring up. Not that we can ever lose our human characteristics. The lily, whether planted in Shanghai or San Francisco, in Boston or Cape of Good Hope, remains a lily—it never springs up a cucumber or a sun-flower; and the Anglo-Saxon if planted in Patagonia or Greenland will never come up a white bear or a whale. He will probably greatly degenerate, but will not revert to the original progenitors of the race. He will remain essentially a man, and perhaps for generations retain his Saxon features; but ultimately he will sink to the level, or nearly so, of the natives of the soil,—lose his refined taste and manners and his mental acquirements and capacity.

A very low thermometer all the year round is incompatible with a high civilization. Man falls as the mercury falls when you get above a certain parallel of latitude, which might be called the civilization line, the limit of the pendulum-swing of intelligence, the mental solstices—when man must follow the sun back to the south, or freeze under the cold light of the Auroras. Keep to this forty-degrees belt of earth, and behold how man with the lily shall grow! Step outside of this charmed circle, and Nature cuts you off almost as surely as the rebel guard at Andersonville and Belle Isle shot down the prisoners who stepped over the "dead line." It is Nature's dead line. God does not save you, if you pitch your tent on the north-west quarter section of Greenland. He cannot afford to send the sun up there just to warm you. He says: "Come into this warmed circle with my chosen ones, and ye shall flourish like the green bay tree." America is there, and, if the sun keeps up his fire, and the poles of the earth stand fast, climate and soil have written for her a great destiny.

How much, too, have the mere circumstances of birth to do with our religious beliefs! If you are born in Mecca, you will probably grow up a Mohammedan; if in Bengal, a Brahmin; in Peking, a follower of Confucius or Buddha; in Rome or Vienna, a Papist; in Boston or Chicago, a Protestant. So that our religion is very much a question of latitude and longitude. What we spring up is largely determined by where we take root and grow.

I would by no means follow out the Buckle-theory of civilization to the extent to which his promises would apparently lead one; but there can be no doubt that climate, soil, and food, or in general the outer relations of men and nations, directly modify their habits, disposition, character, beliefs, and life, and do much to make and mould them into what they are. One wonders whether custom, conservatism, a slavish worship of the past, is not indigenous to the soil of China. Do you say it is in the people, not in the soil? But are the people not of the soil, grown from it, part of it, bone of its rock and blood of its water? It has been suggested that the impression produced by the broad, monotonous deserts of Arabia, apparently infinite in extent, generated in the mind of Arabians the idea that God, like their desert, was One—an unbroken whole, an infinite unit; and, on the contrary, that the mountainous scenery of Hindustan, heaving with earthquakes and smoking with volcanoes along the Himalayas, begat a belief in many gods, and inspired superstition. Their country was broken into many parts, and so was their god-belief; they saw as many god-heads as mountain-peaks.

It is a notorious fact that sailors are far more superstitious than soldiers. The reason is evident. The sailor lives on an ever restless ocean, and is subject to the mercy of winds and waves, the laws of whose coming and going he cannot trace out and explain. The soldier treads on solid earth, and can reckon on the morrow with comparative certainty. But the sailor is never certain what the morrow may bring forth. It depends on the winds, and whence they come or whether they go is a mystery to him. He seems to be at the sport of chance. He cannot see that his ship is always steered by the rudder of Law, bound by the chain that binds the whole universe, whether she sinks or swims; and so his fancy is free to reel off the thread of his superstitions to supply the unseen links. He does it. He sees in the flight of a bird, the spring of a fish, the flap of a sail, the cry of a sea-fowl, and a hundred other casual events, omens of good or ill, and a fortune that favors or threatens. Now as there is thus something about the sea that generates superstitions, as it surely does, may it not be that different scenery and natural phenomena on land may, at least in part, account for the variety and infinite diversity of religious opinions which men hold. Are not our religious convictions more literally the product of the earth than we imagine? But whether they are or not, in so strict a sense, certain it is that our religious convictions are shaped by our intellectual surroundings. We cannot escape the influence of the habits of thought, the fashion of belief, the laws and customs of the people, where we live. We are in a very great degree the children of circumstances. We are the offspring of the forces operating in Nature, both without and within. Our convictions are no more under the control of our will than the tides are. As easily can the tiger-lily change its spots, as we our beliefs by an effort of will simply. We have the freedom of the ship, but we must go with the ship, though we face the storm.

Events are sweeping us on, though we know it not. The Eternal Power directs the thought of the world; man is simply one of his ideas. If you call this fatalism, I call it Providence.

When we realize how much we are the products of circumstance; the resultant of forces beyond our control; how our beliefs are made for us rather than made by us,—does it not inspire you with more patience, toleration, and charity for the follies of belief, and the errors and misdeeds of men?

Another thought is suggested by the text, "Consider the lilies, how they grow." Like man, they not only require a favorable sun and soil for their perfection, and are shaped according to their environment, but I think I see another resemblance. The plants extract from the juices of earth, the dews of air, and the very atmosphere itself, just these elements needed to feed them.

Here in a garden we see growing, side by side, apple, peach, pear, plum, grape—potato, peas, beet, beans, corn, and cucumbers, melons, and mushrooms: what a variety of flavors coming from one source, all dipping their invisible cups into one great common bowl, as the Orientals do in eating! One earth and air supplying such a diversity of wants—apple-blossom elaborating from the crude juices of the soil a pippin or greening or baldwin, just as you please; and a little grape-blossom making over the same kind of sap into a Concord or Catawba, Delaware or Isabella, just as you please. Analyze that sap. It is all the same: presto! Now it is pumpkin, onion, potato—now it is grape, now gooseberry. Nature has an excellent assortment; order what you like, and she will deliver it on your table for dinner. It seems like magic. From one soil and one air she will furnish you a hundred varieties of fruit, as the magician will extract from one hat provision, crockery, and bedding enough for a whole household. Nature is the great magician, the best miracle-worker.

As the generous garden gives to each plant just what it desires for spice and flavor, so, in like manner, does not each human being extract from the great world of truth around us what he needs—at least what he wishes? Is there not a wonderful harmony between the man and his religion? The doctrines he holds seem to fit him exactly. The Catholic head craves a religion of ceremony and show; the Quaker a sober and quiet religion. One is like the poppy or gaudy tulip, the other like the modest violet and retiring arbutus. The great garden of thought gives to each man what he needs. The Unitarian and Universalist want to see every one saved, and so it is to them. They get sweet juices from the earth. The Calvinist seems to demand another belief: God ought to, and therefore God will, damn some people. They get what to us is poison ivy and night-shade. The thought fits their nature, no doubt. Like the old lady (I think it was an old lady) who said that "some people believed that God would save everybody, but she hoped for better things." The "better" state to them is where the noxious Unitarian and Universalist and radical weeds are rooted up from the garden of the future, and flung over the fence. But what if there should be no fence there! No doubt there is such a fence in some brains, but is there in heaven? As a little hair on the object-glass of the telescope will make a great crack in the heavens, so does the fence in men's brains make a fence in their heavens. But whose brain is entirely clear? Are not our God and our heaven and our hell merely a projection of our own mind and heart?

"For aught my eye can discover,
Your God is what you think good:
Yourself flashed back from the glass,
When the light pours on in its flood."

So I believe that we, like the plant, imbibe and incorporate such sweet, or bitter, or bitter-sweet thoughts, from the great world-garden of ideas, as are natural and appropriate.

The crab-apple takes one flavor, russet another, pippin another. But it by no means follows from this that all are equally good. There is a gradation of ideas as of fruits. The Catholic religion is a sect of crab-apple religion. It is not refined. And this brings us to another thought. Though men do imbibe those ideas which at the time appear essential to their peace, happiness, and development, still after a time they must re-adjust their old faith to the new thought, in order to keep the enlarged faculty in harmony with the intellectual surroundings. Their creeds must expand with their growing needs; or, in the language of modern philosophy, they must re-adjust the inner with outer relations, to equilibrate the individual and the environment.

The future will create new demands and must furnish new supplies. The Catholic may be perfectly content in his belief to-day, and it is well; but it is not well that he should always remain content. We must cultivate the faculties of men as we cultivate the wild flowers and fruits of this earth, and transform them into higher and richer species. Our rarest apples, if I understand Mr. Darwin correctly, sprang from a crab-tree species. Our wheat was originally much smaller both in the size of the kernel and length of the ear. Potatoes have not been much changed by cultivation, but they are apparently an exception. Cabbages, in a wild state, are an insignificant tuft of fibrous leaves, resembling a turnip-top. Radishes, beet, celery, parsnip, carrot, grape, plum, peach, strawberry, and in fact almost all of our common edible vegetables, fruits, and cereals, in their wild state were vastly inferior, and frequently quite unpalatable to a civilized tongue. Now they are fit for the table of the gods. What has wrought the change? It is cultivation that has transformed them. The lily is beautiful, but cultivation may clothe it in additional beauty. How many times it doubles the petals of the rose! Fold after fold comes out. Richer and ever more delicate shades are painted by the light as you let it in. Even so it is with man. Cultivate him, let in the light of knowledge, and he will come out of his crude ideas into riper and richer thoughts. Education is a slow process; but may it not as well transform savages into saints as crabs into pippins? Cultivate your lily, if you would see it grow more beautiful; educate man, if you would see him grow more divine. That is the secret of progress in both.

Let us a moment longer consider the lilies, how they—not grow, but go in autumn. Does man go as they go? The next spring comes, and on the very spot where lily stood another one springs up; but where is the old lily—is that dead? And what is death? It lives, we say, in the new one; it is immortal in its species. Is it so with man? Do we only live in the race?

"You say I must have a meaning—
So must dirt, and its meaning is flowers;
What if our souls are but nurture
For lives that are greater than ours?"

"Often have I," says Thorndale, "when looking up into the sky, seen a brilliant white cloud extend itself across the blue ether, in the exact model of an angel's wing,—one wing, never the angel complete." Such have been, perhaps, our visions of the future life. One wing, only one wing of the angel. But is the other not there—is only one torn wing drifting through the heavens? Does it satisfy your longings for life beyond to know you shall live in the race? That is well; but we pant for more, a personal and conscious immortality. We feel that we are good for something more than to feed flower roots, and to grease the ponderous axles of the universe of thought, or to make mortar and chink of the temple of civilization.

Be content to live for others, you say? Aye—but I must live, in order to live for others. As Mrs. Browning says:—

"Observe it hath not much
Consented the race of mastodons to know
Before they went to fossil, that anon
Their place should quicken with the elephant;
They were not elephants, but mastodons;
And I—a man as men are now, and not
As men may be hereafter, feel with men
In the agonizing present."

Immortality, as Emerson says, "is the eminent hope of human nature." Whatever the All-Wise has provided for the dying lily is all well, we feel; so will it be for dying man. Only let us, here and now, be as true to our better nature as the lily is to the law of its own development, and trusting as sweetly the Father and the Mother of lilies and of men, in the "Land of the Hereafter."

"Art thou not good enough to be a man,
Still be as good as the rose-bush's root;
Silently hidden in the earth, unseen
And unobserved, it gathers secret force;
Puts forth a stalk, then twigs, and on the twigs
Leaves, buds, and roses, even thorns; the roses
It nourishes, with fragrance filling them.
And if thou praisest, aye, or pluckest them,
It never stirs,—it feels within the power
To multiply itself a hundred-fold;
And even the thorns it beareth not in vain;
For when in spring the lamb tears off his wool,
It catches with the thorns each little flake
And holds it fast with patience till birds come
And peck and pilfer it to make their young
A soft, warm nest. And still it never stirs!
Be at least as good as the rose's root,
If thou wilt not be so good as a man."

[For THE INDEX.]

WORDS TO THE MEMORY OF FRIEDRICH WILHELM STRAUSS:

BORN AT LUDWIGSBURG, JUNE 24, 1810; DIED AT DARMSTADT,
FEBRUARY 21, 1873.

[In the preface to a collection of his minor writings, in which are included the funeral discourses, Strauss gives, as a reason for their insertion, his belief that they might prove welcome to all those who, with himself, had at heart the question whether the human race might not at length be old enough to console itself at the graves of its dead with something better than the traditional playing with soap-bubbles. This address was made in the family circle after his burial, on the morning of the 24th of February.—TRANSLATOR.]

MY LOVED ONES:—

We did not wish a funeral discourse to be pronounced at the grave from which we have just returned, because the clergyman who accompanied the remains thither could not have spoken of the deceased from any exact knowledge of his person, his life, and his character. But to say nothing of such a man would be wrong; especially for me, who have already given to many a friend the tribute of a word of remembrance after death. They say, indeed, that grief is silent,—expresses itself in tears, not in words; but silent it shall not remain. After the relief of tears, words and clear thoughts to illumine and dispel its darkness.

But our grief to-day is two-fold: we have to mourn, not his death alone, but his life of suffering. His was no happy lot. Not from fresh, vigorous activity, not from the banquet of enjoyment, has death summoned him; it has but put an end to the suffering of years, to a life full of self-denial and patient endurance. This condition was all the more painful, the more fitted he appeared to be at the outset for an entirely different fate. What rich gifts had Nature bestowed upon him; a clear, keen understanding, a firm, unbending will, a bright and free spirit, sensible to the mirth as well as the earnestness of life, and with all this an ability to work that knew no weariness, a body originally so sound and strong that others of his age might be regarded as weaklings beside him! What seemed unattainable to such endowments, cultivated as he had cultivated them, and enriched with knowledge and attainments extending far beyond the circle of his immediate calling? What a position in society, what an activity for the general good, for the great interests of the State and mankind, appeared to await him! But in the midst of the first course to such a goal, in the midst of his efforts to establish his affairs on a sure foundation, he saw himself the prey to an insidious disease [of the heart] which at first threatened his life, and finally left him with the certainty that real health was no more to be thought of. What a fate for a young man as aspiring as gifted! The bird that has lost a wing must suit itself to a life which contradicts its nature. Not to act, but to suffer; not to strive for the goods of life, but only to ward off its ills; and he who was inclined to temperate but eager pleasure must learn to deny himself again and again. In that rich, complicated organ, his life, Nature had opened the one register on which in large, black letters is written "Renunciation," a mournful register for the ears of most men, who demand a fuller harmony, a more varied charm, a more rapid transition, but a register which demands a master, and can form a master. By means of it, tones can be produced, deep and thrilling, as by no other. He who embraces as his calling the renunciation imposed upon him can reach by means of it a state of mind that even the more fortunate might envy.

In this sense, as a task set by a higher hand, in the accomplishment of which he fulfilled his duty as a man, did he regard his suffering. He planned a mode of life adapted to his bodily condition, and adhered to it with the firmness of steel. The wider sphere of exertion being forbidden him, he sought to prove himself faithful in the narrower. On the other hand, the larger aspects of suffering were so familiar to him that he was but little disturbed by the petty troubles of life; as that which men commonly call pleasure was denied to him, he knew how to derive little modest joys from the slightest circumstances. While we saw only how much he must do without, he seemed only to feel how much there still remained for him. Hence it resulted that he in his weakness could strengthen those who were more powerful; that on his prostrate form those who stood upright found support; that he who deserved pity and needed consolation had enough and to spare for others.

But only two things made this possible: First, the early culture he had given his mind, on which it could thereafter subsist as on a rich capital. Already at an age which finds recreation only in relaxation, he had found his in the study of earnest works, the best of the native and foreign, the ancient and modern literatures; his thoughts, as well as to the objects which concerned him as merchant, had ever gladly turned to the highest problem of human reflection, the questions of the nature and destiny of man, the conception of God, and had attained to clear and independent results. He had from his earliest years taken an interest in the affairs of the nations, especially of the German,—an interest which by its invigorating and elevating influence helped him through many a dull and idle hour of his later life, and preserved his mind from decay. In the second place, it was rendered possible by the fact that he had never wasted his forces in sensual pleasures, but rather had strengthened them by uninterrupted activity. Thus that strong, firm spirit, which under happy circumstances would have led to bold undertakings, manifested itself as fortitude under misfortunes; and he found within himself the recreation and refreshment which he could no longer find without.

His life is an example to us of two apparently opposite truths. In the first place, indeed, of that old one, how insignificant man is in comparison with fate,—how a breath of the latter suffices to overthrow, like a heap of cards, the proudest edifices of human efforts and projects. In the second place, however, his life was an example of the less frequently acknowledged truth, that against the clear, quiet mind, the pure, firm will, fate after all avails naught,—that it can at most change the form of human conduct, but can in no wise impair its substance or its worth, or even affect the resultant feeling of content,—that under all its aspects, as happiness or misery, health or sickness, wealth or want, it is nothing else than a variously modified opportunity for man to exercise his power, in this way or in that way, in large or in little, acting or suffering, to perform his task, to fulfil his destiny.

But by no means an easy or attractive task was that which fell to the deceased; and he disdained, besides, to make it easier by means which he did not approve. Never did he clutch at those consolations which repose on no other evidence than the wish of man's weak heart that it may be so; never did he rest in a faith simply because others entertained it likewise. To his dying breath, he would hold only to that which he could attain himself, or could comprehend, as based on the general course of natural and human affairs. But with this rejection of the consolations from an unknown hereafter, he by no means meant that man could act in the present without responsibility, according to his own will and pleasure; but rather that he must all the more diligently cultivate the span of life allotted to him, and seek to compress into this short interval the contents of an eternity.

Such conscientious, faithful labors have not missed of their reward. Notwithstanding the hard blow which his plans had encountered from his illness, he succeeded in leaving his family well provided for. He saw the pains which he had taken with the education of his sons, from year to year, more and more compensated by their prosperity and behavior,—the three elder, at least, having already through his provident care entered on hopeful careers. You have, indeed, dear children, met with an irreparable loss; for you his faithful warning, his cautious guidance, would have been desirable much longer. But deem yourselves happy that he has at least been preserved to you so long as to have left in your hearts the complete picture of his nature, and to have been able, even upon the youngest of you, to imprint the stamp of his mind and character. Let this stamp never be effaced, this picture never fade; think, when your youthful strength is like to fail in work, what your father wrought, his body worn with pain; and, when temptation shall assail you, recall his earnest countenance, not the result of suffering, but already in the vigor of youth frowning upon everything that was low and common. Strive to be sons worthy of such a father; give to all those who have known and honored him occasion to think how your father would rejoice if he could see what you had become; endeavor, as far as lies in your power, to make up for what your mother has lost.

Little did you think, you good woman, on that bridal morning, as I found him who is now dead occupied, during the preparations for the wedding, with a work on philosophy; [it was Spinoza's Tractatus Theologico-Politicus] little did you think that so sad days would in so short a time succeed the beautiful morning. It was a dark lot that you then drew from the urn of fate; and, if you could have foreseen all the nights of sorrow and anguish that you must watch by your ailing husband, you could hardly have been blamed for withdrawing your hand. But to-day, if you had still to choose, you certainly would not wish to exchange the dark lot which was to be shared with him for a brighter one without him. You would not for any thing miss the remembrance of him, of the life with him; you feel now, precisely through your suffering with him, new powers of forbearance, endurance, of counsel and comfort, have been developed in you, which would never else have unfolded themselves; you recognize now in the course of the sad days which you must pass without him, in the exchange of bodily help on your part for spiritual encouragement on his, your hearts have grown together as they never otherwise could; you see yourself, by this life of trial, lifted to a height where much that fetters and crushes others can have no more influence over you.

What I, his brother, have lost, you all indeed know; yet the whole is known only to myself. That he was my refuge in every emergency of life; that to him, apparently a broken reed, but really a strong oak, I could hold in every blast; that in all cases of doubt I found with him the most faithful and the wisest advice,—that is indeed much; but by no means, however, all. How seldom do two brothers of whom one is a man of business, the other a man of letters, stand in any other relation than that of blood and friendship, in a really intimate connection! And yet this was always the case with us! My scientific strivings have been by no one of my most learned friends more deeply comprehended, more thoroughly appreciated. For whatever I wrote, there was without exception no reader of more account to me than he. His judgment was indeed that of the brother, of the brother who was besides so considerate; but I could always discern from it whether anything had really moved him or not, and only when my work had stood this test was I content with it. This reader, this friend, this counsellor, will henceforth be wanting to me; as to us all, in whatever degree and kind of relationship we have stood to him, his faithful heart, his clear glance, his firm, immovable will will be wanting.

But why think we of ourselves, and not before all of him? Should he have suffered longer for our benefit? And has he not already for us done and left enough that is good? Let us, then, thank that higher guidance that has sent him to us, and with him so many advantages; let us be thankful that, although impaired in powers, he was still left to us as long as he could yet work; let us be thankful that he was not tried beyond his strength, that, when his task was done, his day's work ended, his measure of self-denial and suffering full, the wished-for hour of repose was no longer delayed!

SUNDAY IN ENGLAND.

THE DEPUTATIONS TO MR. CROSS.

Sir,—Disabled, and dependent on others for information, I trouble you with but a few words upon a matter in which I cannot cease to feel interest. If the people are to regard as sincere Lord Shaftesbury's profession of interest in their welfare, made in his speech to Mr. Secretary Cross on behalf of closing the Brighton Aquarium on Sundays, his lordship should propose that we have two Sundays. We have the half of Saturday; we ought to have the whole of it—Saturday as a day of rest from labor, since Sunday is made by Sabbatarians a day of rest from enjoyment. Considering how short are the lives of most of the poor, how slavish their days, how few their rational pleasures, how dreary the outlook of the future is to most of them, how feeble their physique compared with that which Englishmen ought to possess—it is impossible to witness the zeal of the Sunday Destruction Society to deprive them of those Sundays of recreation which no man will give them again on this side of the grave, without indignation at the insolence of the pity and the cruelty of the kindness by which Sabbatarians claim to be animated. If Trade Unions had any spirit of self-respect, befitting the English working people to display, they would confederate never to work on Saturday any more. I have always told those whom I have been able to address, not only to stand up against work on one Sunday, but to insist upon two Sundays. The Sabbatarians have their Sunday; the working people should demand a Sunday for themselves. Of all the Acts of George the Third, those relating to the Sunday are the most infamous. Acts which dare not be passed now should not be tolerated now. The one which has closed the Brighton Aquarium was brought forward a few years ago, and prevented the working people hearing Professor Huxley, Professor Tyndall, and Dr. Carpenter on Sundays—men who have done more in their day to reveal the sacred mysteries of Nature than all the Sabbatarians since the days of Moses.

Mr. Cross says that he has power to remit the penalties. Is he better informed of the law than Mr. Justice Blackburn, who, in his decision, which closed the Aquarium, said the 21 George III. was passed to put down Robin Hood societies bred of the French Revolution? No such societies are mentioned in the Act, no such societies were mentioned in the discussions in either House of Parliament when the Bill was passed. The Act itself came into force twelve years before the French Revolution occurred. The fines under the Act were recoverable in any Court of Request in the kingdom, on the production of the conviction of the Judge. What Act of Parliament gives Mr. Cross the power of annulling such conviction? And if any Act does, will he be so shabby as to use it, and accept the services of the informer to enforce the law, and then deprive him of the reward provided by the Crown? The informer and spy have been appointed by Act of Parliament the agents of intemperance in the Church, and Mr. Disraeli will warn Mr. Cross "not to tamper with the official hierarchy of an ancient nation." Does Mr. Cross propose to remit the fines for looking at fish on the Sunday, and enforce them against Professor Huxley and Dr. Carpenter who explain the delightful miracles of their structures? Under this Act of George III. no shareholder of the Zoological or Botanical Gardens, as Mr. Cowen has suggested to Mr. Cross, can visit them on a Sunday, for the Act says by no ticket or pretext of any kind for which any consideration has been given shall admission be had, or else the Aquarium Company might issue shilling shareholders' tickets, and let all the world in twice over. The Act declares that any hall or room, even a field, shall be regarded as a disorderly house if such admission be had on a Sunday, and according to Mr. Justice Blackburn's decision a boatman may be fined 25*l*. if he charges you for giving you a pull on a Sunday—for the sea is a "disorderly house" within the meaning of the Act. What is worse, for many for whom I care, there is not a Cooperative Hall in the kingdom in which a lecture or social tea-party can be held on a Sunday if a Sabbatarian chooses to threaten the operation of this Act.

Mr. Disraeli boasts that his Government is the friend of the working people; then let him deliver them from the infamous tyranny of these Acts. We talk of the despotism of France and the influence of the priests in Spain, or Ireland, or Italy, but there are no working-class in the world bound hand and foot on a Sunday as the working-class of England are. Uncultivated in the arts of happy recreation and the refinement of manner which would spring out of it, here the masses have no outlet save drunkenness and brutality. If this social oppression is continued it will bring evil to Sabbatarians one day, when the masses find they are masters, as Mr. Lowe says they will become; the poisoned chalice of intolerance may be poured down the throats of our exemplars who mix the ingredients for the people now. No one respects more than myself the feeling and the right of the earnest Christian to keep the Sabbath-day holy. But when he interferes with the equal rights of others he gives them the right to interfere with him.

The only way to repeal these Acts is to adopt the method devised for the people by Bentham, and form a confederation to enforce them. We may repeal them as we repealed the taxes upon knowledge, when even the newspaper press were in favor of them. The London Company might take out a license for the Aquarium as a place of worship, and license Lord Shaftesbury to preach in it, and his lordship could not object to that; and while he gave out the hymns we could look at the fish, and payment for admission would then be lawful. This is what we did in Manchester in 1841, when the old Cooperative Halls were closed by the same parties.

It is of no use going puling and praying to the Home Secretary, or petitioning Parliament. The Sunday League have done this for twenty years, and will do it twenty years more, earning only the contempt which falls to those who have not the sagacity to fight. If every Sabbatarian Act in the Statute Book was enforced, as it might and ought to be, vexation, confusion, and resentment would be stirred up in every town in the empire, and the working people of England would live no longer under the indignity and humiliation of seeing the great sights of Nature, or breathing the air of God, furtively under sufferance of the Sabbatarians.

I am, str. &c., G. J. HOLYOAKE.
—London Examiner, June 12.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE YALE LAW SCHOOL,
JUNE 30, 1875.

BY GOV. CHAMBERLAIN, OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

There is another public question, worthy, I think, of notice here, on which there is a present sentiment so marked and growing as to constitute a tendency. I mean the question of the practical wisdom of the policy under which some seven or eight years ago the so-called seceding States were restored to their practical relations to the Union. I refer particularly to the conferring of the right to vote on those classes of the people who had never before possessed it. It is not to be disguised that there is a popular impatience with the present results of that policy which has gone far to unsettle the public confidence in the wisdom of the policy itself. The grounds of that policy were theoretical and practical. Theoretically it rested on the doctrine of universal suffrage; the rights of every man laboring under no recognized disability, through the elective franchise, to share in the government of the State and nation. It was claimed that this was the true American doctrine with a few limited and rapidly-disappearing exceptions; that upon the tabula rasa, the blank pages once filled by the local governments of those States, should be inscribed the fundamental principle of equality of civil rights. Practically, and to those who approached the question under no bias of theory, this policy seemed the only means of laying a basis upon which the governments of those States could rest with safety against the recurrence of the misfortunes just experienced. In other words, to this class of minds the readmission of those States, with their powers exercised exclusively by those who had so recently yielded their armed resistance to the national authority, was a policy of danger and even madness.

The alternative policies were, first, the restoration of the States with the basis of political power substantially unchanged; or, second, the continuance of direct military supervision. It is clear that public sentiment at that time rejected with impatience both the latter policies. If present practical loyalty to the National Government was essential to a sound policy of restoration, nothing can be clearer than that a vast majority of those who had previously wielded the political power of those States did not present this essential quality in the sense in which it was felt and understood in those States which had adhered to the national cause. On the other hand, the evils of military supervision can scarcely be exaggerated. Such government had no harmony with our system. It was incapable of anything but a very rude adaptation to the wants of the people. It must be temporary, and yet while it lasted its tendencies were adverse to those habits of mind and of action which are essential to any degree of self-government.

The policy of immediate universal suffrage in those States suggested grave objections, chief of which was the ignorance and inexperience of those whom it would introduce to political power. On the other hand it presented three great merits—First, it placed the political power largely in the hands of those who were bound to the Union by no slight or common tie; second, it afforded the means of protecting the civil rights of those who otherwise might be the victims of social and race prejudices too obstinate to be voluntarily laid aside; third, it was in substantial harmony with the theory and traditions of our country. It should have been apparent to those who reflected at a distance, as well as to those who observed on the spot, that under such a policy, errors, follies, crimes, would for a time abound. Ignorance and inexperience on the one hand were matched by injustice and violence on the other. Prejudices old as the communities in which they prevailed, race barriers made firm and high by centuries of slavery, disappointments bitter as death, hopes extravagant as dreams, these were the contending forces, the inevitable conditions of the problem. The results which they have made out among them are, on the other hand, corrupt legislatures, wasteful expenditures, burdensome taxes, ruined public credit, incapacity in high offices, frequent violence and disorder. These are sad experiences surely, and some thoughtful men looking on them lose heart and say, "Better the mailed hand, or the peace of political servitude."

But stay, O patriot, lover of American freedom, and look on this other picture! Have you imagined that the great enduring forces of civilization have lost their power? Has history no lesson to dispel your fears, to call back your departing faith? Scarcely eight years have yet passed, and half the accumulated labors of two centuries are already passing away. Education is already reaching fully two-thirds of those who till yesterday never turned the pages of a book. Property, not by thousands, but by millions, with all its sobering influences, is already in the hands of those who till yesterday did not own their own blood and muscle. Experience, hitherto a sealed volume; responsibility, hitherto an unused sense; the welfare of children, the whole wide circle of humane influences, are already pouring in upon those whose most daring hopes ten years ago did not picture physical freedom even, this side of the grave.

And yet we lose faith? And yet we think our American system cannot stand the strain? Ah, ladies and gentlemen, the government which could stand the strain of two centuries and a half of a system hostile not merely to human rights, but to every form and feature of civilization, will not be moved from its foundations by ten years of tumultuous freedom. Have you forgotten these words of Macaulay: "There is only one cure for the evils which newly-acquired freedom produces—and that cure is freedom. The blaze of truth and liberty may at first dazzle and bewilder nations which have become half blind in the house of bondage. But let them gaze on, and they will soon be able to bear it. If men are to wait till they become wise and good in slavery, they may indeed wait forever." It is for us to check the popular impatience which demands from others in a day what with us has been the slow toil and fruit of centuries. It is for us to teach faith in right principles of government, faith in freedom, faith in that approved agency of freedom, the ballot, faith in our American system. Are corrupt Legislatures found only in one section of our country? Has public credit never before been prostrated in the history of our States? Has organized violence never before supplanted for the time reason, justice, and public order? And what have hitherto been our remedies? The restriction of the ballot to the wise and good? The enlargement of national powers? No; we have trusted, wisely, safely trusted to the all-conquering power of experience, of intelligence, of what Coleridge called "the free, permeative life and energy of the State, acting through its organized forms." To such influences let us sternly and confidently commit these present evils.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE VOICE OF SCIENCE.

BY C. APLIN.

I am Truth, Primordial Law,
Creative Power, avenging Might:
Me the Prophet dimly saw,
As he climbed old Sinai's height.
Stern and jealous am I; they
Who my promised land would see,
Me must worship, me obey,
Have no other gods but me.

I am Truth, Progressive Life,
Revealing Light, Inspiring Will:
O'er the earth's wild waves of strife
I will whisper—"Peace! Be still!"
Hast thou other heart's desire,
Idols fair and dear to thee?
I am Master, Lord, Messiah:
Leave them all and follow me.

I am Truth, Eternal Right,
Heavenly Goal, Celestial Way
Up through Evil's darkest night,
Passing to the perfect day.
Cast thy slavish fears aside;
Truth shall make thee strong and free:
I am Prophet, Savior, Guide:
Rise, O soul, and follow me!

PROVIDENCE, B. I.

THE SEA.

[For THE INDEX.]

O sea, I thought to speak thy glowing praise,
Beholding all thy calm and tranquil breast,
The perfect peacefulness of summer rest,
That calls from gentle poet gentle lays;
But lost are words and withered all my bays,
To see thee grandly roll and hear thee roar,
To see the long white lines of spray on shore,
And think how infinite thy works and ways!
O broad and sweeping sea, what might is thine!
Before thee pales the wondrous strength of man;
He can but worship at thy hallowed shrine,
And own the glorious breadth of Nature's plan;
For, sure, thy forces are to us divine,
And teach us more than words of Gospel can!

WILLIAM BRUNTON.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 10.

Noyes, Holmes, & Co., $1.33; H. C. Neville, $1.50; Sam'l. Warbasse, 50 cents; J. S. Thomson, $3; F. M. Holland, $3; O. N. Preston, $3; A. L. Whitcomb, $3.20; Wm. E. Gorton, $5.25; N. P. Ames, $3.20; John A. Todd, 75 cents; Edw. C. Post, $3; Isaac Sherwood, $5; R. P. Maynard, $3.70; A. H. Nichols, $1.50; Claribel Gerrish, $1.60; B. Gerrish, Jr., $4.04; H. S. Ware, $3.20; D. Muncey, $1.60; B. Vogel & Bro., $1.60; W. L. Coffenbury, $3; J. Hull, $5; Chas. Putnam, $3.20; J. E. Emerson, $3.20; J. H. Clifford, $1.60; S. L. Wheeler, $2.65.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

QUEEN MARY. A Drama. By Alfred Tennyson. [Author's Edition, from Advance Sheets.] Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1875. Price $1.50.
JOHN DOBRIEN. A Novel. By Julia Kavanagh. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
HISTORY OF GREECE. By C. A. Fyffe, M.A. With Maps. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
JOCELYN'S MISTAKE. By Mrs. J. K. Spender. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1875. [Paper.]
WHAT AND HOW TO READ: A Guide to Recent English Literature. By G. A. F. Van Rhyne. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875. [Paper.]

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

THE CONTROVERSY AMONG UNITARIANS. By the Rev. James C. Street. Belfast, Ireland: W. H. Green, 1875.
SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Vorsey.—May 2: "The Doctrine of the Atonement Immoral."—May 9: "The Atonement according to the Maurice School."—May 16: "The Real Punishment of Sin."—May 23: "The Athanasian Reductio ad Absurdum."—May 30: "The National Sunday League."
PUBLICATIONS of Thomas Scott, Esq., No. 11 The Terrace, Farguhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.—Disestablishment or Reform. By Sir G. W. Denys.—The Adversaries of St. Paul in 2d Corinthians. By R. W. Mackay.—Positive Religion: its Basis and Characteristics. Lectures III. and IV. By the late Rev. James Cranbrook.—Christianity in a New Light.—Clerical "Pooh, Pooh!" Rhetoric.—On the Mediation and Salvation of Ecclesiastical Christianity.—A Review of "The Fallacies of Unbelief." By W. L. Rogers.—Additional Moral and Religious Passages from the Sanskrit. By J. Muir.—Signs of the Times. June and July.
DANTE. By L. F. Soldan. Reprint from the Western.
A LECTURE on the Theology of the Coming Man. By G. Eppley, M.D. Lewisberry, Pa.: 1875.
THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM. Vol. I. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1875.
PULLMAN'S REPLY TO TALMAGE. New York: 1875.
ANNUAL REPORT of the Astor Library. Albany: 1875.
PROCEEDINGS of the Pennsylvania Yearly Meeting of Progressive Friends, at Longwood, 1875.
THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW. June, 1875. The Willmer & Rogers News Co., New York, Agents for America.
THE JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. April, 1875. St. Louis: Gray, Baker & Co.
THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. July, 1875. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. July, 1875. Boston: L. C. Bowles.
THE WESTERN. June and July, 1875. St. Louis: Western Publishing Association.
WIDE AWAKE. An Illustrated Magazine for Girls and Boys. Vol. I. No. 1. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.
THE PENNS. MONTHLY. July, 1875. Philadelphia: Penn Monthly Association.
THE HERALD OF HEALTH. July, 1875. New York: Wood & Holbrook.
THE SANITARIAN. July, 1875. New York: 234 Broadway.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 15, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

THE RELIGION of America is styled by an English journal "pewism."

SAYS the Liberal Christian of June 26th: "It seems that Mr. S. H. Morse is guilty of that dreadful thing,—keeping a journal. At least we have some 'leaves' from that book in the last INDEX, and bright and interesting some of them are. Politicians will notice his remarks concerning President Grant, whom he calls 'no ordinary man,'—one who 'has a way of coming to time in emergencies,' which is an offset for some of his reported short-comings."

AT LAKE PLEASANT, in Montague, Massachusetts, the "Spiritualists and Liberalists" are to hold a great camp-meeting and picnic, to begin August 4, and continue through the month. The Fitchburg Cornet Band, a corp of able speakers, tents and board for several thousand people, and reduced railroad fares, are some of the attractions. There will probably be a great gathering, if the weather is fair. For further particulars, see the advertisement elsewhere.

IT is astonishing that so intelligent a gentleman as ex-President Woolsey should make such rapid criticisms as these: "We are constantly met by the assertion that education is going to do everything for this country; that the common school, which supplies ninety-nine hundredths of the voters with their knowledge, will make the children of the land worthy of their birthright and equal to their responsibilities, or at least will lay the foundation which is to be built upon afterwards by the local newspaper and the local politician. But, for my part, I fail to see how all the knowledge that the school will give, and tenfold more, is going to make a self-restrained, trustworthy, contented, unexcitable people, men who abhor a lie and abhor liars, who love fair play, and don't believe an evil report lightly. Where is the education of character to come from? Has the common school ever been equal to this higher department of training, and are there any signs of its enlarging its sphere, or do not all signs point in the opposite direction? The teacher must not tell a child that God hates falsehood, because it is in the Bible, and it would portend on that account a union of Church and State. The formation of character seems to be no part of the school's business." How is it possible to take views so narrow as these? The common school is one of the best places for the "education of character" that can be named, even if Bible precepts should never be preached in it. "Character" includes self-reliance, ambition, energy, pluck, generous emulation, disinterested friendship, a sense of human equality, and a thousand other things that cannot be learned anywhere better than in school life. Truthfulness and honor, to which President Woolsey had special reference, are not derived from abstract eulogiums upon them, or glib assertions that "God hates falsehood," but rather from the experience of human society itself; and the school gives this in the form most useful for children by placing them in the constant society of each other. The liar and the sneak are speedily found out at school, and the common contempt they excite does more to instil right principles of conduct than all the moral platitudes that could be rattled off by a whole regiment of orthodox teachers. It is time to dismiss the notion that practical morality is best taught by sermonizing; which is one of the able-bodied delusions that still lord it over the orthodox brain. It is just such a rough-and-tumble experience of life as is given by the common school that develops the manliest qualities of character; and he has a bat's vision who sees nothing in the public school system but the "three R's."

FORCE AND FEEBLENESS.

"To be weak," says Dr. Maudsley, "is to be miserable."—In a great many senses this is true.

Weakness of body, want of physical health, brings numerous miseries in its train. It may involve positive suffering, and inflict tortures of which the healthy can form only the vaguest conception. When we are well and strong, nothing is more difficult than to recall the actual sensations we experienced in a contrary state. Perhaps it is fortunate that memory fails to keep distinctly before us all that we pass through in periods of great agony, for a clear and vivid recollection of it would but perpetuate the unfitness it creates for common duties. But this easy forgetfulness of past pangs makes it nearly impossible for the physically vigorous to comprehend how great is the misery of the actual victims of disease, who inhabit a region wholly unknown to a large part of their fellow-beings and dimly remembered by a large part of those that have formerly traversed its dread wildernesses; and the isolation thus caused is no slight addition to the acute anguish of aching nerves. When, moreover, sickness demoralizes, as it often does, and renders the invalid a source of constant annoyance to all but the gentle angels that hover pityingly over the couch of pain unrepelled by the exactions, whims, and selfish unreason of its occupant, more miseries accompany physical weakness than can readily be enumerated.

Weakness of mind is exposed to other miseries no less real. Amidst the fierce competitions of so-called civilized society, what pity or mercy is there for him who is inferior to his fellows in brain-power? Does not the weakling go to the wall? Do not the shrewd and the able crowd him out of the "struggle for existence," and either compel him to a practical servitude or trample him under foot rough-shod? The idiot and the lunatic, perhaps, are provided for in great asylums, meant (not always successfully) to be conducted with humanity and wisdom; but how many of those who are scarcely better fitted to battle with the roaring maelstrom of the world are sucked down into its terrible vortex, unfriended and even unheeded? What unnumbered failures in life take place every day for no other reason than simple deficiency of mental power in dealing with its perilous complications? A considerable part of the so-called injustices of mankind are merely the inevitable consequences of narrow foreheads. No artificial arrangement could by any possibility equalize the stupid and the intelligent, or prevent the latter from having the advantage, should both be set in equalized conditions. An equal chance for all is all that justice requires; but till the crack of doom the wise man will make the most of his chance, while the fool will make the least of his. And it is not possible, nor would it be just, in the race of life, to tie weights to the feet of the swift, in order that the swift and the slow might reach the goal together. Justice can only demand that they be together at the start.

Weakness of character has also its inevitable miseries. It is in vain, when the weak will and the strong will are brought together, to hope that the laws of moral dynamics will be miraculously suspended. As well hope that in the scales ten pounds will balance one. Nothing can ever abolish the necessity of conflict in the world of affairs; and, other things being equal, the race is always to the swift and the battle to the strong. The value of energy and force of moral character is proportionate to the misery of moral feebleness and flabbiness. Virtue is the stake in the game between tempter and tempted, to be lost or won as that or this has the mightier will. There are few windfalls in this world that possess intrinsic worth; what is valuable must be plucked with pains and danger, and it is the muscular soul that plucks it. In all that touches character, strength is the prime necessity, the indispensable auxiliary, the eternal winner; and if true also in other things, much more is it true in morals that "to be weak is to be miserable."

What a farcical thing, then, is the "gospel of gush,"—which is the very gospel of weakness, of character all corroded and dissolved in mere emotion, of glutinous affectionateness pouring itself out in floods over everybody and everything, and making all creation sticky and unclean! It is, indeed, a caricature or burlesque of the Christian gospel, effacing as it does all the distinctions and boundaries of dogmatic thought and confounding all ecclesiasticisms in a great mutual hug of all saints and all sinners. But, as caricatures are usually made by exaggerating some chief feature of the face into ludicrous disproportion, so the "gospel of gush" is only a somewhat exclusive emphasis laid upon what is in fact the characteristic principle of Christianity—namely, love; it only exaggerates the importance of this principle in Christianity just as Christianity itself exaggerates the importance of it in human nature. When the Christian gospel teaches that "God is love," that "love is the fulfilling of the law," and so forth, it puts an emphasis on the love-principle of human nature which it altogether neglects to put on other elements equally important. Yet without these latter elements human nature itself is reduced to weakness; and the "gospel of gush," so notorious of late, is so far Christian that it might be defined as the fatty degeneration of Christianity.

Instead of the gospel of love, whether in its regenerate or its degenerate form, the outside world needs, demands, and must have the gospel of strength, of vigor, of energy, power, force. Strength of body, strength of mind, strength of character—these are the important things, compared with which it is quite unimportant that one should turn himself into a spiritual soda-fountain, and work himself up to the syrupy and creamy effervescence of eternal "gush." These ebullient manifestations are neither indicative of nor favorable to genuine manliness. It has been said that "love is the history of woman's life, but an episode in man's." Whether this saying is true or not, it is true beyond question that love alone is not big enough to make a religion out of for the modern world. Vigor of intellect, force of will, and power of conscience, concerning which Christianity has little or nothing to say, are the main requisites of a religion that would escape the fate of the superannuated; and, under whatever name, we should welcome its advent.

INFERIOR AND SUPERIOR.

Perhaps there is no question which a man can put to himself, that is suggestive of more profitable reflections, than this: which company do I like better, and in which do I feel more at home, that of my superiors or my inferiors? For I take it that he who is filled with the desire to live the best life, and to secure the results of the highest culture that is possible to him, will naturally seek the best society that he can find: the society that is the wisest and noblest. And this he will do, because he knows—if he knows what is true—that it is not from books alone that we get our culture, but from the companionship of men and women, out of whose thoughts and experiences books are made. The student and the scholar, who spends his time in his study and in libraries, and who by choice keeps himself aloof from the great toiling, thinking, suffering, enjoying, living world of mankind,—no matter how learned such a man may become from much reading and study, he is only half-cultured and half-educated. Whatever else he knows, he does not know live men and women; and these are the most interesting and instructive things in the world.

But as there is a choice to be exercised among books, so no less is there among men. Ruskin says there are two classes of books; one for the hour, and one for all time. Do we not find that the same distinction holds among men and women? There are plenty of persons that one likes well enough to meet, and laugh and chat with for a little while, but with whom it would be dreadful to think of having to live for weeks and months and years. You can see right through them in a few moments; in an hour or two you have taken a complete look at their characters, have measured perfectly their ability to amuse and instruct you; and any further acquaintance with them is like listening to a hand-organ that plays the same tunes under your window day after day. Then again there are others whom only a very long period of time can enable you to know well, so deep are their souls, so rich and varied their lives, so far-reaching into realities their thoughts and feelings. Such persons are like the rare books which you wish to read over and over, and in which you find some new and profound meaning every time. Of such companions, as of such books, one needs but a choice few to make one's life very much enriched. Sad however is the condition of him who does not seek, and who does not possess, this superior company of books and friends. One wants both. The loss of neither can be compensated wholly by gain of the other. As a good public library is essential to every community, so no less are a few high-toned, noble, pure, cultivated men and women. The privilege of associating with such persons is almost equal to that of going to a university. How even one such man or woman tones up the manners, morals, and ideas of a whole village! Where they have shed the refined light of their personality, it is impossible but all should think somewhat better thoughts, and live somewhat better lives. It is the rarest piece of good fortune that can fall to any young man or woman, to possess the considerate friendship of such a gifted soul. It creates for them a noble ideal, and helps to keep them loyal to it. And when such an inspired man or woman happens to have chosen the profession of a teacher (as is sometimes the case), and they succeed in keeping the freshness and glory of their spirit unquenched by the awful machinery of our general school system, what an unspeakable source of life and light they are to the youth who are so happy as to be instructed by them! To the latest day of my life shall I bless and revere the memory of a superior man who, in my boyhood, was not only my teacher but my friend as well; and to whose affectionate counsels and ever-glowing appeals I owe many of the best impulses that have quickened my being. When once we have well tasted the rare quality of superior companionship, either of books or friends, we scarcely can be satisfied long thereafter with any inferior associations. Hence it is of the first importance that we early and continuously cultivate acquaintance with whatever is able to become the medium to us of a higher, and constantly higher, influx of life and light.

And yet we must not forget that it requires a very nice discrimination to discover the difference between superior and inferior; to discover where one is, and the other is not. Is it not all gold that glitters? Then, too, all that is not superior, which is in superior's place. Sometimes the really best books have the poorest binding, and bring the lowest price. A second-hand book-stall is a place which often cannot be bettered for buying some of the rarest books which a choice reader wants. So also it is that we have to hunt low as well as high to find the best people. Whom the world scorns or lets alone, in seven cases out of ten that is the one whom a truly wise soul desires to cleave to. Some of the most superior men and women are socially neglected; they find themselves abandoned by society as it runs. Often it is that the very rarest souls in any large community are the obscurest ones. You are quite as likely to find them in the attic as in the parlor, in the secluded room as in the club, in corduroy and calico as in broadcloth and silk, scrubbing the doorsteps or sweeping the stairs as sitting in the drawing-room. Some are superior for one thing, and some for another. Superior and inferior are most times joined in the same character. We need to look sharply, therefore, lest we get the two confounded. Only the humble and the kind heart can guide us—the proud and the scornful one never. The best way, perhaps, is to seek a large experience with all sorts of men and women, giving our best to all, and seeking the best from each,—being ever on the alert for the choice soul, and grappling to it wherever found. It is astonishing how interesting one sometimes finds a so-called wicked person to be! In many respects, one of the finest young men I ever knew had been in a State-prison six years. He was as good when he went in, and better when he came out, than a multitude of people who are too "respectable" ever to be put in such a place. The difference between him and them was that his badness had been found out by the State, while theirs never had. But superior and inferior were alike united in him as in them.

We should remember that the task given us in this life is to live with those we do not like, as well as with those we do; to live with both, so that we shall give them our best without getting from them their worst. A noble soul once said that "it is better to give than to receive." But we cannot give without receiving; and we usually receive just the same kind that we give. What goes from our bosom returns to it again—good measure, pressed down, and running over. Therefore let our hearts fling wide their portals. The more that goes out, the more shall come in. Verily is it so, that what is for us is surely coming to us. What is of our kind is as sure to come to us as the needle to fly to the magnet.

A. W. S.

PROFESSOR NEWMAN ON EVOLUTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I have just read the generally wise and valuable letter of Professor Newman in THE INDEX of June 3d, but I cannot comprehend the antipathy of so earnest a believer in progress to the doctrine of evolution. The professor identifies it with that degraded form of fatalism in which the belief in the inevitable power and purpose of Allah, which animated Mohammed to such vigorous action, has assumed in the effeminate Turk,—a passiveness surely far more to be explained by ethical than by theological influences,—and says that, if slavery had been left to evolution, it would have evolved itself over the larger part of the United States. But certainly the uprising of the North in resistance must be claimed as a main part of the evolutionary force through which America has outgrown its arrested development. What is evolution but the "divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will"?

I am, &c., MONCURE D. CONWAY.

2 PEMBROKE GARDENS, LONDON, June 21, 1875.

Mr. Moncure D. Conway is prepared to deliver Lectures in the United States, during the coming season, on the following subjects:—

London.—The Evolution of London—Haunted London—Scientific and Literary London—Clubs—City Companies—The Lord Mayor—The Arts—Wealth and Poverty—Two Seasons—Things Growing and Things Fading—English Characteristics—Social Tendencies—The Queen and her Court—The Future of England.

Oriental Religion.—Persistence of Religious Types—Physiognomies of Religion—Aryan and Semitic Characteristics—Religious Evolutions in China, Japan, Egypt, Arabia, Persia, Assyria, India—The Indian Book of Job—The Brahmo-Somaj—The Hindu Convert in London—Modern Transformations and Tendencies in the East.

The Devil.—Genesis of Demons—Primitive Dualism—Degradation of Deities—Fallen Spirits—The Natural History of Demons Represented in their Names and Legends—Impediments in the Struggle for Existence—Hunger Demons—Elemental Demons—Animal Demons—Theological Origin of the Devil—Ahriman, Satan, Eblis—The Devil of Popular Superstition—The Devil in Art and Poetry—Milton's Satan—Goethe's Mephistopheles—Science and the Problem of Evil.

St. George and the Dragon.—Light and Darkness—Extinct Monsters—Dragon Forms—Dragon-slaying Deities—Indra slaying Ahi and Vritra—Apollo and the Python—Bellerophon and Chimæra—Perseus and Medusa—How the Mantle of Dragon-slaying Heroes fell on the Cappadocian Butcher, St. George—His Spear and Flag at Rome—The Dragon-slaying Angels and Saints—Myths Spread by Coins—Teutonic Heroes and Dragons—Curious Survivals in France—Dragon Myths in England—St. Petrox and the Serpents in Cornwall—St. Patrick and the Snakes—St. Columba and the Rats—The Laidley Worm—Wormley—The Worms of Sockburn, Lambton, etc.—The Monster Boars of Kentmere, Brancepath, and Oxford—The Dragon of Wantley—The Cemetery of Dead Religions.

The Fossil Man.—The Controversy Concerning the Antiquity of Man, its Rise and Decline—Sir Charles Lyell—The Bone Caves of Europe—Curiosities of Scientific Progress—The Career of Baron De Perthes under Napoleon I.—The Baron's Discovery at Abbeville—A European Congress gathers around a Skull—The Testimony of the Skull—The Method of Science in Verification—The Laying of Old Spectres and the Raising of New.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—There is a general aversion among some free-thinkers to the subject of a future life, which may without offence be termed morbid.

This aversion palpably arises from two features prominent in the Orthodox view concerning a life after death. The one feature is the gross and unwarrantable manner in which that future life has been depicted down to minute details drawn, of course, from the wild fancies of the New Testament, and supported by such poets as Dante and Milton.

The absurdity of any attempt to realize the conditions of a state after death is sufficiently revolting to make men of common sense dismiss the subject with impatience, whenever such airy ground is even approached.

Free-thinkers cannot for a moment be blamed for refusing to consider gravely such perfectly unknowable questions. The other objectionable feature referred to is that rewards and punishments are made the special motives for interest in that future life, and the grounds for the proper regulation of our conduct (or belief) on earth. This is no longer possible to men who have already risen to a morale elevation from which they discern the intrinsic beauty of goodness, and the intrinsic baseness of its opposite. Not to love and pursue goodness for its own sake, regardless of all pain or pleasure which may result from it to oneself, is to be behind the age in which we live, and to be little better than a pagan. In like manner, only to avoid sin through fear of punishment is to confess oneself to be on a level with the brute or the savage. Admitting to the fullest extent the repulsive character of these features in the Orthodox views of a future life, I venture to say that these are not enough to warrant the free-thinker and the searcher after truth in shutting out entirely all reference to, and thought upon, a life after death.

Premising that it be regarded only as a hope or expectation, and that all attempts at delineation be scrupulously avoided, there seems to me nothing irrational in giving to the subject its due place in our thoughts and aspirations. Its due place, I say, because the consideration of it must be kept subordinate to our interest in, and our fulfilment of, our duty to each other in the present life; and on no account must it be allowed to absorb our minds in useless contemplation, still less to take up either time or energy which should be spent in the service of mankind.

With these limitations I conceive that a hope for immortality has its very useful and necessary functions. In the first place, as a legitimate encouragement to virtuous action, the hope of a future life is very strong. There can be nothing base or ignoble or selfish in the hope of perfecting our natures, in the desire to increase our own capacity for goodness by the daily practice of what we know to be right. For the love of goodness for its own sake implies that desire, and cannot well be divorced from it. To be good, as well as to do good, is surely typical of the noblest character.

To desire perfection is therefore a noble aspiration. And just as the hope of success in any endeavor gives additional strength and zeal to that endeavor, so the hope of perfection in a life to come will strengthen our efforts to become good here below. To know that when we have reached our highest moral point attainable on earth, our work (as far as our own characters are concerned) will be thrown away, is at the very least a dampener on our energies, and, so far as it is realized, a discouragement to our efforts in perfecting our souls.

To hope for a future life is also reasonable to those who hunger and thirst after knowledge. I do not say that any really noble mind would be less eager for knowledge if the hope of the future were shut out; but it would add intensely to his joy in the pursuit of truth to believe that some day he would know the whole truth, or at all events start afresh on his journey of discovery with ever increasing opportunities and powers.

There is surely not a single really scientific man who would not gladly welcome the evidences (if they were forthcoming and trustworthy) that death would be no interruption to his investigations and researches into the mysteries of Nature. I do not say anything should be believed simply because it is pleasant; but merely state it as a matter of fact that the hope of a future life is not inherently at variance with science or the scientific mind, but is simply yet without any foundation in hitherto established scientific facts.

A third ground on which the hope for a future life is reasonable and justifiable is the intense affection subsisting between some persons and their relations and friends.

Many lives would be absolutely darkened; many brains would go mad; many hearts would be broken, if the hope of future life were taken away. Affection—the purest, most unselfish in the world—needs this corollary to justify its indulgence. We are fools to love each other so much, if there is absolutely no ground for hoping that we shall somehow and somewhere meet again. The truest wisdom would be to form no attachments, or to weave them so slightly that there will be no pain when they are riven. And then, where will you find one man or woman out of a million, who could exercise sufficient tyranny over his or her nature as to reduce the affections to the freezing point? We are all under the stern necessity to love—some more, some less—but love we must, enough to give us bitter pain in separation by death, even where the hope of reunion is strong. How unendurable that pain would be when there is no such hope to rescue from despair!

I have said nothing about our nearer approach to God, or on the theological aspect of the question, for I desire to rekindle interest in the subject in the hearts of those who have gone furthest in the track of free inquiry. I ask them not to shirk the question altogether as incapable of rational treatment, simply because as yet there is no evidence for it as a fact. I ask them, too, not to let the monstrosities of the Orthodox view deprive them altogether of the immense privileges and comfort of entertaining the hope, although it be only a hope, of a life to come.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., June 21, 1875.

Communications.

A SHORT ESSAY ON SELFISHNESS.

If it is true—and I think there are many good reasons for believing that it is true—that “self-preservation is the first law of Nature,” then it inevitably follows that selfishness is the ruling characteristic of man's nature; because selfishness is the most essential quality necessary for self-preservation.

Therefore, for this and other reasons which I shall endeavor to give, it is my conviction that man is, at all times and under all conceivable circumstances, selfish; that the gratification of this particular passion is his constant desire from the time he enters into the world till he makes his exit; that for this he plans, and toils, and suffers, and in many instances even risks his life.

This declaration is very broad and sweeping, and no doubt will strike the ears of many good people as being, not only horrible, but so entirely wild as not to merit a moment's consideration.

Well, let us, if we possibly can, lay aside for a short time the natural prejudices we have in favor of ourselves, and with calmness and honesty examine into the matter a little, and see what the result will be.

There is a common and much applauded saying that “Honesty is the best policy.” I believe that every one, whether saint or sinner, not only admits that this is true, but points to it as an excellent rule for the government of our conduct. Its popularity is universal. On all occasions when morality and kindred topics are discussed, it is quoted with an air of confidence which seems to say, “Here, in this little sentence of five plain, unpretentious words, is contained the sum total of all that pertains to the highest and most refined order of virtue.” This idea is as erroneous as it is popular. True, he who in his intercourse with his fellow-man squares his conduct with it deserves much credit, but not nearly so much as is generally awarded to him.

If we penetrate the true meaning of this popular saying, we shall find to our astonishment, as well as chagrin, that it contains the very essence of selfishness. If we are honest because it is the best policy, then it is patent we are honest because we think it will result to our advantage to be so; in other words, because we think it will pay.

The man who leads an honest life for policy's sake, although unquestionably the better citizen, is not an iota less selfish than he who leads a dishonest life; because both are aiming at the same object; namely, the enhancement of their individual interests. But, honesty being the best policy, the former has chosen the wiser course, and will therefore be more successful in the accomplishment of his desire than the latter.

“Do unto others as you wish them to do unto you” is a rule which, if followed, is the sum and substance of all the religion necessary for the welfare of mankind. It is deservedly called the Golden Rule. It is as near to equity as anything we are capable of conceiving. But, meritorious as it is, it is nevertheless strongly tinged with selfishness. The value of this rule is far beyond the comprehension of the unthinking many. It is impossible for them to see that compliance with it can be productive of any benefit to themselves, and therefore it is to them a dead letter. Those only who have arrived at a higher stage of perfection dimly see its merit. When any of this class live in accordance with it, which is, however, very seldom the case, they do so for the gratification of self. They live in accordance with it mainly for the purpose of counteracting or modifying any evil intentions which others might have toward them—for the purpose of preventing any obstacle being thrown in the way of their progress toward comfort, or happiness, or some other gain: in short, the gratification of their selfish propensities.

If, as happens sometimes, we minister to the wants of the needy or the distressed, we arrogate to ourselves an amount of credit that is both ludicrous and pitiful. On such occasions we suffer our vanity to puff us up into ridiculous proportions. We flatter ourselves that we have done something extraordinarily praiseworthy, and entirely free from anything like self-interest. What shallow-pated simpletons we are, when a little investigation would dispel this illusion! Can we do anything without a cause? Is it possible for us to act without a motive? Reason and common sense answer emphatically, No! Then, if this is so, what motives prompt us to acts of charity, of philanthropy, and the like? Are our motives disinterested? However foolishly we may persuade ourselves into any such belief, the truth is to the contrary. The real and true reason why we do acts of charity, relieve distress, etc., is to get the applause of the community; or, if we happen to be of a finer nature, in order that our own feelings may procure relief. In either case the object is the same; the desire of benefiting ourselves being the first consideration, and the relief of the other party the second. Were it not that our natures are so constituted that, in order to benefit ourselves, we are compelled to benefit the party in need of our assistance, the amount of interest we should otherwise have in said party could not be discovered by the most acute and intent observer.

A mother undoubtedly is honest in believing that the love she has for her babe, and the watchful and tender care she bestows upon it, are alike free from anything approaching selfishness; and she would feel that great wrong were done her, if told that the opposite was the truth. But it is, nevertheless, positively so. The great love she has for her child springs from the certain knowledge of the fact that it is her own offspring, coupled with the pretty firmly fixed idea that in it she is herself perpetuated; and the reason she bestows so much care upon it is because her nature requires it for the gratification of her own feelings. This gratification of her feelings is solely for her special benefit; and, being for her special benefit, it must be selfishness.

All of us are, in a greater or less degree, sympathetic. This is an excellent quality of our natures. Sympathy is praiseworthy in him who gives it, and generally acceptable to him who receives it. It is the fountain from which spring all our feelings of kindness toward our fellow-creatures. It is the golden chain which links together in affectionate relationship, not only all the members of the human family, but to a certain extent man with the inferior animals. It is, undoubtedly, the most divine (giving the word the popularly accepted definition) of all our attributes. Yet this same sympathy, this quintessence of our most refined feelings, cannot be cleared from the charge of selfishness. Let us take a passing look at the principles which govern sympathy. First, let me say that it is pretty conclusive to my mind that we never give anything, except with the expectation of receiving in return, immediately or in the future, if not more than its value, at least its equivalent. In fact, I think, if I were to say that in every instance we expect a full return with interest added, it would be nearer the truth. It is contrary to the laws which govern our natures to give anything without a recompense, and sympathy is not an exception. Therefore we give play to our sympathy for the minor reason that it is consoling to the other party, but for the main reason that it relieves our own feelings. Whenever another person has succeeded in arousing our sympathy, we immediately become connected, as it were, by an invisible cord, which draws us with such tremendous force that, if we make resistance, our very heart-strings seem in danger of being pulled asunder; and, therefore, if not actually for self-preservation, at least for the purpose of procuring relief from a feeling that is excruciatingly painful, we are forced to move toward the person with whom we are for the time being thus invisibly and inseparably connected.

If further evidence were needed to prove that the ruling characteristic of man's nature is selfishness, it could readily be furnished in such abundance as would fill volumes without limit. It would be an easy task to show that our loves and our hates, our desires and our aversions, our virtues and our vices, our prayers and our curses, yea, and even our honest and maturely-formed religious convictions, are most unmistakably all prompted by this single and powerful motive of selfishness. But let the foregoing suffice.

It will be observed that in these remarks I have not been condemning, or even finding fault with, selfishness. My intention has been far from this. My object and desire has merely been to show the fallacy of notions that are extensively prevalent in regard to what is called unselfishness or disinterestedness. On the contrary, I find no fault with selfishness, except where it exists in too great a degree. In fact, it is impossible for me to banish the belief that selfishness is right, because it is strictly in accordance with the economy of Nature, where I have never yet been able to discover mistakes, but where I have always found everything harmonious and perfect. We know that eating, drinking, etc., are totally selfish qualities, but we know they are absolutely necessary for our self-preservation or existence. Therefore, if it is right that we should exist (of which there can be no doubt, else Nature would not have brought us into being), and if selfishness is necessary for our existence, then selfishness is right.

J. R. S.

PIONEER WORK NEEDED STILL.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Allow me to offer a few remarks on the leading point in Mr. Voysey's truly excellent letter in THE INDEX of June 10. He says: “I am led to infer that the popular mind is much more ready than it was years ago to examine into the truth or falsehood of the Orthodox beliefs. . . . They need at this spring-time of independent thought some help in shaking off their shackles. And this, too, not on the deeper problems of the age so much as on the A, B, C, of Christian tenets; namely, the fall of man, the curse against the race, everlasting hell, and atonement of blood. If this be so, some of us must begin our work over again, and go down to the level of the awakening mind.”

My own experience during the last twenty-five years confirms the correctness of Mr. Voysey's inference. Whenever these strong points of the Christian faith were attacked “without laughing their hopes and fears to scorn, and they were calmly and respectfully reasoned out of their foolish alarm,” their prejudices gave way, their attention and interest were won, and afterward those “deeper problems” were demanded, and eagerly received. The greatest results always followed no holding back the truth for fear of “hurting somebody.” The strongest arguments in an Orthodox community against the plenary inspiration of the Bible, Original Sin, Total Depravity, Election or Foreordination, Free Moral Agency, the Trinity, the Divinity of Christ, the Vicarious Atonement, Infant Damnation, and Endless Punishment, were well received, when logically and calmly presented. As then, so now.

I have never for one moment believed, when told by many reformers that the pulling-down process had been thoroughly done, and that nothing now was required but to build up, that such was the fact; hence my appreciation of Mr. Voysey's article. When I see new and more costly edifices erected for the worship of God, greater efforts made to Christianize the heathen, more money annually expended for Bible and Tract publication and distribution, larger appropriations, donations, and gifts to sectarian colleges, increased efforts put forth to harmonize all religious sects, the Young Men's Christian Association consolidating North and South (see Richmond, Va., Convention, May 26, 1875), and declaring war against infidelity, herculean attempts made to put the evangelical God into the National Constitution; when I see all these demonstrations, and many more, of thrift, culture, power, influence, means, zeal, determination, and numbers united, how can I but feel that there never was a time, since we first began to batter against the strongholds of Biblical and clerical authority, when there was more need of staunch defenders of liberty, of conscience and speech, and opposition to aggressive theology than now.

I have never laid down my battle-axe since it was first raised in 1851; and though others have sowed the seed where the breaking-up plough of the hardy pioneer had made it easy, or gather the harvest that others had planted, I have always been on the defensive, and felt myself called to resist every encroachment of individual right and privilege, and speak against every doctrine, however time-honored and sacred, if I felt it was untrue; therefore, I am still in fighting order, and trust that, while THE INDEX and its supporters are battling for “The Demands of Liberalism,” they will not forget that, before those demands can be granted, the slave power of old theology must give way, and that, before that will yield, much hard pioneer work must be done by some one.

Those reformers who are not in conjunction with Christianity, and only associate with liberal minds, have but a slight conception how deep the root of conservative tradition is still planted in the minds of the people, and how great the need of the exposure of the monstrous doctrines on which rests their hopes of eternal salvation. It is surprising how little many Christians know of their own Bible; therefore, some of us infidels, as we are termed, must do our work over again, and keep on doing it till science takes the place of revelation, and knowledge supersedes faith.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

“PRAYER AGAIN.”

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I cannot see how any one who had taken the trouble to read my communication on prayer could so utterly fail to see the drift of it as the writer of the communication in THE INDEX of June 17 has done. The only view I took of the province of prayer, in the sense of petition, was that it has no province if God be infinite. This view, whatever its shortcomings, is at least clear. If the printer or farmer idly folds his arms, any amount of prayer, accompanied with any amount of faith, will fail to secure to him the result of labor; and, if with his own hands he sets the type or sows the seed, he cannot, and neither expects nor wishes to, secure any more than the result of his labor by adding prayer to his labor. If by prayer is meant personal effort to secure the object of prayer, or the desire that leads to such effort, then I am ready to admit that it is efficacious. My argument was in the main an a priori argument, and the only results spoken of as subject to observation were answers to petitions for material things. I am afraid that the person who calls an a priori argument a “material measure” lays himself open to the charge of being an heretical materialist. From my article no inference could be drawn as to my opinions respecting the nature of God, of Christ, or even the efficacy of prayer. I simply tried to show that, if certain views of God are correct, then prayer can have no effect upon him. At the point where the question would naturally come up whether God is infinite or not, I dropped the discussion. But the objects of my knowledge are not all contained within the space occupied by myself; and, if infinite wisdom and goodness were conceded to God, it is not clear how it follows that infinite extension must be attributed to him. Indeed there are those who say that, as God is incorporeal, extension cannot be attributed to him at all. If God does fill all space, there is no room for anything but God; and in holding this view we become pantheists, and Dr. Stearns would say that all pantheism tends to a system of atheism and physical necessity. So that our friend is, I am afraid, in as bad a plight as the “sceptical” young man who pays more attention to his studies than to his prayers. I should not like to call people who pray for rain and food and health “selfish,” “fools,” “hypocrites,” “ignorant,” “idiotic,” and say that their God is “a very stupid, weak-minded God.” I happen to know good people, and people of learning and talent, who make just such prayers. If the fact that Jeremy Taylor recommended them proves him to have been either hypocritical or idiotic in spite of the evidence we have to the contrary, then surely it is poor policy to couple his name with a plea for any kind of prayer. Then “that flower of humanity, Christ,” taught his disciples to ask for bread, and that through fasting and prayer they might have power to cast out the demon of epilepsy with a word.

The fact is, that those who pray for both spiritual and material gifts are more rational than those who pray for the former alone. It is said that we are not to ask God to set aside the laws of the universe in order to minister to our physical wants, but that we may ask for spiritual blessings with the assurance that we shall receive them. By spiritual blessings I take it we may mean comfort in distress, strength to resist temptation, and a quickening of the intellect, so that we may see spiritual things more keenly.

You can comfort a man by making him feel your sympathy, by making good his loss, by showing him he is the gainer by it, or that his loss is only temporary. He can be made more firm by giving him more will power, or (what will in the end amount to the same thing) by enabling him to picture to himself more vividly the evil results of yielding to temptation. A man's intellect can be quickened by altering its constitution, or that of its bodily organ, or by a direct communication of truth. Communion with God, if it means anything, must mean that, as the soul cries out to God, so God speaks to the soul in language intelligible to it, or makes himself more largely perceptible to the inner faculties. Now we know that keenness of intellectual perception and force of will can be cultivated by simply using them in accordance with the laws of their development. There is, therefore, no more reason for expecting God to give us force of intellect or will than strength of body in answer to prayer. Those who believe in God either believe that we find the proof of God and of his leading attributes (if indeed they are capable of proof, and are not among the so-called intuitions of the soul), in the universe by a right use of our reason, or that they are first taught us by revelation, and confirmed by study of the universe. If we know God and his goodness by intuition, or through the Bible, we have all the consolation we need, certainly all any one pretends to have; and surely God cannot be expected to reiterate by special revelation to each soul what it knows by its very structure, or may know through a revelation accessible to all. If we can know him by the study of Nature, again we must not expect him to give us what we can get by simply using our faculties of observing and reasoning.

Precisely the same objection then, whether valid or not, applies to all prayer. But "that we will receive the spiritual blessings, when we pray for them, we feel in our souls." So a friend "felt in his bones" that our Harvard nine were going to win a match game, put up five dollars, and won. The next time they played he had the same feeling, and put up ten dollars, and lost them. He never afterwards had such a feeling in his bones. John Wesley and Whitefield both had the testimony of the Holy Ghost that, in answer to prayer in the name of Christ, God had pardoned their sins and changed their sinful natures into holy ones. But when they had their celebrated controversy about predestination, Whitefield got ahead of Wesley; for the Holy Ghost had testified to his soul in favor of predestination, while Wesley had no counter testimony to give. That people have feelings in their souls I do not at all doubt. But when their interpretation of their feelings leads to illogical conclusions, I do doubt their ability to interpret them correctly.

I have no more to say in criticism of my critic, except that words and not acts are blasphemous. Professor Francis Bowen has made me acquainted with a view of prayer derived by him from Malebranche, and which he thinks obviates any difficulty in conceiving God to answer even such prayers as that for rain, found in the ritual of the Episcopal Church. The theory is in fact that of a preestablished harmony of prayer, and the events transpiring about us and in us. It supposes the infinite past and future to be present to God, and foreseeing from the beginning what would be the future states of mind and body of all his creatures. He so arranged things that in their natural development should be found the answers to the prayers to be made. Now I have great respect for Professor Bowen both as a former instructor of mine and as a thinker of acknowledged ability. Still it seems to me that he attaches too much importance to this theory. It certainly is not without difficulties of its own. Professor Bowen, as all who have studied under him know, is an ardent supporter of free will. I need not say that very many philosophers and theologians and even some of those who believe in free will are not able to believe it possible for God to foreknow the thoughts and actions of a free agent. Then it supposes that God made the universe with its laws, which would not be conceded even by a great many Christians. But to attempt to make the discussion complete would be to make it of interminable length.

W. J. LLOYD.

{ HARVARD DIVINITY SCHOOL,
{ Cambridge, Mass., June 29, 1875.

NOTE FROM REV. MR. JONES.

NORTH ABINGTON, Mass., June 15, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In the Independent of June 2, 1870, page 3, middle column, is an article entitled "Boston Theology," beginning near the bottom of the column. A little way from the top of the next column occurs the following passage:—

"The President, O. B. Frothingham, made the opening address, in which he carefully reviewed the past of the Association; and made the clearest statement of its position which has yet been offered to the public. He announced the different basis above referred to,—a basis which will exclude such persons as the Rev. Jesse Jones, who spoke last year, and whose speech was a defence of Evangelism as such. The admission of such speakers in such a way would convert the platform of the Association into a battleground of the sects. All sects are invited, but not as sects."

Now I think no one can read this passage without seeing that it was the most natural thing in the world for me to feel that an organic change had been made in the constitution of the society for the purpose of cutting me off; and that some one who was inside had rather indiscreetly told out of school the animus of the action. I am privately told that no such action was taken, and that there is no ground for my conclusion. If so, I am glad to learn the fact.

One thing I beg to add. No Christian can consistently go anywhere except as a Christian, and, if that is sectarian, then as a sectarian. The Church always and every where has rightly been an aggressive, overcoming power, moving with all the energy at its command to supplant every other religion on the globe. I, therefore, as one sent to proclaim the Christian religion, must and mean to be one who sets forth Jesus Christ and his work as the one exclusive religion which is to exclude all the others, and so fill the globe that not a whit of any other religion will be left upon it. Only in such a spirit, which is my view of the very essence of Christianity, can I ever act with any body of people; and when I can thus come, I shall be glad to appear on the Free Religious platform, for I have something to say.

JESSE H. JONES.

[We wish Mr. Jones had quoted more, for he has not quoted enough to explain the "different basis above referred to." Be it what it may, the Independent was under an enormous misapprehension, for no "different basis" has ever been adopted by the Free Religious Association than the original one. Mr. Jones can be a member of it with full rights of membership, if he chooses to join it, and is in favor of absolute freedom of thought.—ED.]

THE BIBLE AND TEMPERANCE.

The town of Manchester, Mass., has been much excited of late over the temperance question in its relation to the Bible; whether the "Bible is a temperance Book." The contest between clergymen and free thinkers became so hot, that at last the former sought to decide the question by inviting Rev. W. H. Cudworth to speak on the subject. Undoubtedly Mr. Cudworth has correct ideas on the subject of temperance, and is himself a temperance man; but we should advise him to leave the Bible out of the question, if he expects to bring rational beings to a temperate life. We doubt if any one could have made an abler argument, for there is no argument at all on that side; as he said himself in conclusion, "It may seem pretty thin, but that's the best I can do." When challenged by men on the other side, men who believe in doing the right for its own sake and in following their own moral convictions rather than the teachings of any book, he was completely "non-plussed," and unable to reply with any satisfaction to his audience. His weakest defence was of the passage quoted to him from Nehemiah, which he excused by saying that the "strong drink" was meant for medicine; if so, then why not the fat oxen, &c., as well? He defended Christ's drinking wine in this wise:—

Christ was without sin. Christ drank wine. Therefore, for him to drink wine was no sin. Sin has no respect for persons. If it is a sin for any one to drink wine, it is a sin for any other one to do so.

More absurd was his apology for the turning water into wine. The speaker averred that, as Christ made the wine out of water and not from grapes, therefore it could not be intoxicating; for wine made from water could contain no alcohol. If the accepters of the Bible will admit that Christ could not make alcoholic wine from water, where are all the miracles they depend on for proof of his power? Surely, if he made wine from water, it was wine, and not colored water; else where the miracle?

On the whole, the free-thinkers did not lose much ground by his exposition.

Intemperance is the reigning terror of our country; temperance in all things is its surety for future happiness and well-being; how to secure universal temperance is the present problem. Intemperance will never be conquered by force, either in the form of license or prohibition; and as for the power of the Bible in that direction, we surely do not see any great change for the better in regard to temperance during all the years of the Christian era. It is not the infidels and scoffers who are the drunkards; too often, alas! the church members. There must be a mighty upheaval in a different direction. The people, the children, must be taught morals instead of creeds, self-restraint in lieu of Bible texts; to study themselves and their relation to the world and each other, and not that to be under the shelter of a church is safety and insurance. This evil must be stopped at the fountain-head: and as the time has gone when distilleries can be shut, the only course remaining is to educate the children from infancy to resist temptation, practise self-restraint, to respect themselves and the God who made them.

LEA.

CHRISTIANITY AND ANTI-CHRISTIANITY.

The definition and the laws which our Christian authorities have made compel any consistent man or woman who has been born of Christian parents to be for or against Christianity. If I am for Christianity, I must believe in its essential doctrines and abide by the laws. If my reason brings me to the conviction that universal liberty and a broader religion of humanity cannot exist with those contending sects of this established form of religion, I must oppose them wherever I am. And just as much as Jesus and the apostles were anti-Jews, I strive to be anti-Christian, and do my part for the development of a better form of religion than Christianity is. All men have religion, but every one thinks his or hers the best; each one has a right to believe so, but to force our belief upon others is arbitrary, and leads us to gross mistakes. Many of our so-called liberal Christians do not accept the definition of the Christian Church, or try to manufacture a new one. They call themselves Christian ministers, and remain in the Church; but whether they do it for the material support which the Church can give, or from consistent convictions, they themselves must decide. It is a pitiful condition of mind to have had a specific form of religion for eighteen hundred and seventy-five years, and not to have yet a definition of it which all can agree upon. Volumes and sermons seem to have confounded and not expounded.

"Names and sects and parties fall;
Thou, our God, art all in all."

CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N. H., June 30, 1875.

"FREE METHODIST" CAMP MEETING AT OVID, MICHIGAN.

I will not attempt to describe the senseless shrieking and physical contortions claimed as religious exercises; but one noticeable effect of the meeting I would briefly allude to. Ovid is a little village of scarcely more than one thousand inhabitants. To and from this town, on Sunday, June 20, special trains, at half-fare rates, were run for a considerable distance in either direction. With these facilities, considering the nature of the attraction, an enormous mass of human beings congregated.

All of the usual "drinking places," including two hotels, and numerous temporary ones erected for the occasion, were in active operation during the entire meeting. Sunday morning found one saloon supplied with twenty-seven kegs (holding about seven gallons each) of beer for the day's business; which were all emptied at retail long before night, when a team was sent to the nearest brewery for another load.

Probably not less than one thousand men in the town and about the camp grounds were more or less intoxicated. The vices usually accompanying intoxication were not absent. So long as such results persistently follow in the wake of these annual paroxysms in the "cause of Christ," thorough, earnest, conscientious workers in the cause of truth and justice may well be appalled at the magnitude of their undertaking.

G. F. CORBIN.

ST. JOHNS, Mich., June 26, 1875.

AN INSOLUBLE PROBLEM.

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, June 23, 1875.

Solomon is said to have been a very wise man, and I think modern experience is demonstrating it. He says there are three things, yea, four, which were past his comprehension. The three were, "The way of an eagle in the air, the way of a serpent upon a rock, the way of a ship in the sea." It will at once be conceded that to determine the above three things would be no easy matter, and we should not be surprised that even Solomon with all his wisdom "gave it up." But to me at first thought it is a little surprising that he should fail to determine the fourth; the "way of a man with a maid." That Solomon, with all his experience, opportunities, and wisdom acknowledges his inability to determine the truth in this matter is, when closely looked at, but another proof of his great wisdom and the inspiration of the Bible. For only consider what is now going on in our midst: fifty witnesses (more or less), half-a-dozen of the best lawyers in our country, a very learned and impartial judge, have now for three months been trying to determine this very question, and have not yet succeeded. And they never can, for they now have the case in such a state of wretched distraction, that the best thing the jury or public can do with it is to make a very wild guess at the matter, and let "slip." Thus is the wisdom of Solomon and inspiration of the Bible clearly vindicated. Don't you give it up?

E. L. CRANE.

THE RADIOMETER.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., June 18, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your issue of yesterday, we noticed that Mr. Crookes' discovery of the Radiometer elicits a lively interest among scientists, who seem at a loss how to explain the singular phenomena it presents. At the risk of being deemed ambitious and immodest, we would inquire whether the motion attributed to light, as such, might not result from angular currents of electricity, into which an equivalent of light has been transformed by the wheel acting as a helix? The fact that motion only follows the absorption of light seems to favor such a view. That such transformations occur in the vegetable leaf and many other objects in Nature, by which interesting and important changes transpire, seems highly probable. That light actually enters the opaque tissues of the vegetable leaf, and there decomposes the stubborn compounds for vegetable growth, is doubtful. But that light may be changed by the converging veins and peculiar structure of the leaf into electricity and other forms of force, capable of doing such work as organic change demands, seems possible. If this idea should prove correct, it would aid in solving the curious phenomena of budding and grafting, by tracing the relations between the diversified forms of the leaf, and a corresponding variety of its products of wood, sap, and fruit.

Very truly yours, W. TWITCHELL.

AN ATTENDANT at Mount Vernon, not long since, found a lady weeping bitterly and audibly, with her handkerchief at her eyes. He stepped up to her and said, "Are you in any trouble, madam?" "No, sir," she sobbed. "I saw you weeping." "Ah!" said she, "how can any one help weeping at the grave of the Father of his Country?" "Oh indeed, madam," said he, "that's it! The tomb is over yonder; this is the ice-house."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " " 8 " "
 " 26 to 51 " " 6 " "
 " 52 " " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston,

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address,

THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address

THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. HIGGINSON, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. WASSON on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. POWELL, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. WASSON on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. CHENEY on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. HIGGINSON on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. CHANNING on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. POTTER on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. VICKERS, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. CHADWICK on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. MILLS on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. ALCOCK, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. GANNETT, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. HIGGINSON, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. THOMSON, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and HIGGINSON of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. WASSON.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. CHANNING. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. POTTER. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. PARTON. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World- Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. All volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old. of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede.....	2.00
Romola.....	2.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	2.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	2.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Comedy. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Political Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	3.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	2.00
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additions to Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essay on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHellen (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorous, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.0
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	1.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Santarinas.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.3
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX
ont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL
SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN.
EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address
S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.
The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874
(Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.
Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

R E P O R T S ,
SERMONS,
ESSAYS,
and PAMPHLETS,
Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by
GEORGE H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address
THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

SPIRITUALISTS' AND LIBER-
ALISTS' SECOND ANNUAL
Camp-Meeting and Picnic,
AT LAKE PLEASANT, MONTAGUE, MASS.,
August 4 to August 30, 1875.

TENTS will be ready on the 4th. Prices,
$10 for four weeks, $8 for three weeks. Advance payments.

PUBLIC EXERCISES begin on Sunday, the
8th. Address each week-day, at 11.30 P.M.
Conference, Mondays. Two addresses Sundays, and a Sacred Concert of Music by the band.

PICNIC DAYS will be Thursdays.
DANCING afternoons and evenings (Sundays excepted). Music by Russell's Orchestra.

MUSIC.—The Fitchburg Band and Russell's
Orchestra of 20 pieces will arrive on the 12th, and will remain till August 30th. A choir of singers will give vocal music assisted by J.
Frank Baxter, of Plymouth.

RAILROAD FARES.—Call for Lake Pleasant
Camp-meeting tickets, to which are attached free return tickets.

EXCURSION TRAINS will run on Sundays,
15th, 22d, 29th, from Springfield, Hoosac
Tunnel, and Fitchburg. Special train from Boston on the 15th.

BOARDING.—Mr. Dunklee, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Austin, of Springfield, will furnish table-board for $6.00 per week.

MUSIC BOOKS
For the Seaside, the Mountains,
For Hours of Leisure at Home or Abroad.

The following collections contain the best and most popular of all published Songs,
Vocal or Instrumental Duets, Rondos,
Waltzes, Polkas, Quadrilles, etc., and furnish unflinching entertainment to all lovers of Music.

Musical Treasure. Vocal and Ins'l.
Moore's Irish Melodies. Vocal.
Gems of Scottish Song. " "
Gems of German Song. " "
Gems of Sacred Song. " "
Wreath of Gems. " "
Shower of Pearls. Vocal Duets.
Operatic Pearls. Vocal.
Silver Chord. " "
Piano at Home. Four hand pieces.
Gems of Strauss. Instrumental.
Organ at Home. Reed Organ Pieces.
Home Circle. Vols I. and II. Ins'l.
Pianoforte Gems. " "
Pianists' Album. " "

Large, Handsome Books, which are for sale by all prominent dealers.
Price of each book: Boards, $2.50; Cloth,
$3.00; Full Gilt, $4.00.
Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

Is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious,
Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents
wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & CO.,
Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,
IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E.
Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPU-LAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN
THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c.,
of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.
By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"
"Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Her-etics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.
Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE

IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.
New Edition of Josiah Warren's
TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow."
Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHI-

LOSOPHY.
Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticism on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-
Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K ,
Card,

—AND—
Job
PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,
7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol.
8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published;
he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The New York TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying:
"It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.
Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN
RELIGION.
A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains.
It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities;
and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith.
These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion,—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUT-
LOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David
A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF
THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John
Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS.
By Wilham J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis El-lingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O.
B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMER-ICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ed-
nah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM.
By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O.
B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom,
Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S.
Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E.
Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe,
C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C.
Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss,
Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H.
Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by
THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

A C H E A P O F F E R

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

T H E I N D E X

IN ENGLAND.
THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings.
Remittances should be made by international P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

W E S T N E W T O N

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday,
April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER
Advertisement Brokers,
Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPA-
PERS a specialty.
Complete files for inspection of advertisers.
☞ Lists sent upon application.
☞ Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son
& Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York.
No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

☞ On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods.
20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1875.

WHOLE No. 291.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.
- Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

MISS LOUISE ALCOTT is reported to have received sixty thousand dollars from her writings already, with a fair prospect of more.

MR. JOHN T. DELANE, the editor of the London Times for thirty-five years, is reported to have had the offer of a baronetcy from Mr. Disraeli.

CORNELL UNIVERSITY has won a triumph at the Saratoga regatta of which it may well be proud. "Fresh-water colleges" will soon be a title of honor.

SOMEBODY wants to have Queen Victoria invited to attend the national centenary at Philadelphia next year, and the Independent indorses the suggestion. Such an invitation would be the height of incivility.

EX-SECRETARY McCULLOCH writes home from London that the country is again disgraced abroad by the failure of some of the States to pay the interest on their bonds. Is there to be no end to such stains on American honor?

DR. PHILIP SCHAFF says that there is talk of bringing before the Pan-Presbyterian Council, at Edinburgh, a proposition for the revision of the Westminster Confession—a bit of audacity which will strike horror to the soul of Professor Morris, who declared that "no man has any purpose in his inmost heart to change or alter it." Even Calvinism has to melt under the sunshine of increasing knowledge.

THE DISCOVERY by Mr. Crookes that light is a mechanical force bids fair to prove one of the greatest scientific achievements of the age. The problem of planetary motion may be closely connected with it; and the hitherto mysterious motion of the comet's tail is already thought by high astronomical authorities to be explicable by it. The progress of science is rapid enough to take away one's breath. Every step she takes leads mankind farther and farther away from the idle hopes and fears of Christianity towards the calm, eternal truth.

NOTWITHSTANDING the seeming successes of Moody and Sankey, the rapid spread of Rationalism in England is so marked a feature of the times that it excites great alarm in Evangelical quarters, as instanced by the Huddersfield Daily Chronicle: "Unbelief is gaining such rapid ground—in our Universities as well as in our work-shops, in our learned magazines as well as in the vulgar rhetoric of penny periodicals,—that it must be resisted on all sides. With the precise shade of unbelief we are not concerned. Whether it impeaches the inspiration of Scripture, or rebels against the divine assumptions of Christ, or sees a God in Nature but none in revelation, or insinuates itself with 'light and sweetness' in the cultured and scholarly pages of Literature and Dogma, or enunciates itself with the rude blasphemy of Bradlaugh, is to us a matter of indifference."

REV. DR. MANNING, Secretary of the London Tract Society, in a recent address at Cincinnati to the Western Tract Society, stated that, whenever he had visited the schools in this country, and asked, "How do you deal with the religious question?" he received the answer, "We cannot say anything about religion. We have children of all classes—Jews, Infidels, Atheists, Catholics,—and it would not be right if we were permitted to teach religion." "Most reluctantly," added Dr. Manning, "I have come to the conclusion that that is the only alternative, if we would keep the lightning blast of Romanism out of the schools. I have accepted this with great reluctance as the solution of the public school questions here and in England." Thus a dread of Catholicism has accomplished what the love of justice apparently cannot in the Doctor's mind, and he "reluctantly" consents to be honest because honesty is the best policy.

THE WESTMINSTER CONFESSION declares that "all synods and councils since the apostolic times, whether general or particular, may err and have erred; therefore they are not to be made the rule of faith and practice, but to be used as a help in both." This states precisely the ground on which Dr. Clarke has so often defended the use of creeds, as "helps," but not "fetters." No doubt the Westminster Assembly sincerely meant to avoid trammelling their posterity by the Confession they adopted. But how all creeds work, and must work, changing inevitably from "helps" to "fetters," is shown in the declaration of Professor Morris, Moderator of the last General Assembly of the Presbyterians, who, notwithstanding the disclaimer of the Confession itself, proclaimed it as "the basis and the test and the standard of our belief."

THE Christian Union of July 7 ridicules our regard for the consciences of Evangelical believers on the Bible question as quite superfluous. It changes the whole proposition we were discussing, however, which was, not to insert Bible extracts into school-readers, but to make the Bible itself a "text-book"; and it apparently is quite ignorant that we were considering the case of Evangelical Christians who reverence the Bible as Divinely inspired in the honest old sense of those words. "It will be perfectly safe for Mr. Abbot," complacently concludes the Union, "to let 'Christian believers' define their position on this question for themselves." But it will not be safe for any of the parties concerned to let such exceedingly loose "Christian believers" as edit the Christian Union, and are equal to the task of believing a dozen different religions consecutively and simultaneously, "define the position" of those who believe in Christianity unbewitched. When this more than semi-rationalistic paper undertakes to speak for all "Christian believers," it is necessary to remind it that it assumes altogether too much, and that there are millions of Christians in this country who still believe the Bible to be unlike all other books, infinitely superior to them all, and not to be put on the level of readers and manuals without offering a direct insult to God. These people are Christians; but, much as we admire the Christian Union, we see precious little Christianity in it—except its name.

A "GRAND National Congress of Freethinkers," in which more than sixty organizations were represented by one hundred and fifty delegates, was held at Manchester, England, in the latter part of May. Mr. Bradlaugh was the presiding officer. Each of these Secularist societies has a benevolent fund for the aid of its own poor, sick, or persecuted members; and this undoubtedly gives a social vitality and strength which accounts for the flourishing condition of these organizations. The Congress empowered its President and Council to examine all volunteer lecturers as to their honesty and ability, and to give diplomas to such as were approved; and for no others is the Society to assume any responsibility. A sort of "Free-thinkers' Bible" is also to be issued, containing in condensed form the facts and arguments supporting the Secularist views. A "National Secular Hall Company" was also established by the Congress, for purchasing or building halls throughout the country. A resolution of sympathy with Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, whose ill-health prevented him from being present,—resolutions "greeting in advance a Free-thinkers' Congress to be held in America during the Centennial celebration," congratulating the Investigator on the completion of Paine Hall, and sympathizing with the Belgian Secularists,—were also adopted. Why cannot the Liberals of America unite in some efficient way for the prosecution of common ends? The English Secularists put us all to shame by their earnestness, business energy, and determined spirit.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

Mr. Spencer on Social Evolution.

FROM THE LONDON "FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW" OF JANUARY 1, 1875.

BY PROFESSOR J. E. CAIRNES.

Anxious as all who take an interest in social speculation cannot fail to be for the completion of Mr. Spencer's forthcoming work on the principles of sociology, they will scarcely regret that he should have allowed himself to be drawn aside for a time from his principal occupation in order to compose the present volume.* Several reasons concur to make it desirable that such an avant-coureur should be sent forth; but it is sufficient here to mention one. With every possible disposition to acknowledge the great services of M. Comte in his masterly ébauche and partial development of the science of society, it is impossible not to see that even the elementary principles of this branch of inquiry have yet to be formulated. To constitute these, or at least some portion of them, is doubtless the aim of Mr. Spencer's grand undertaking. It is to this that the labors of his life have been leading up; but if his work is to prove in any sense definitive, it is plainly an indispensable condition that it should be preceded by a tolerably full and thorough discussion of the more elementary doctrines of the new science. Mr. Spencer has not, indeed, waited till now to give the world his ideas on many social topics of the highest importance; but it was well thus to bring together into a single volume his sociological views scattered over many essays, and, by giving them fresh exposition and illustration, to invite fresh criticism. Never before has the conception of a social science been put forth with equal distinctness and clearness; and never has its claim to take rank as a recognized branch of scientific investigation been placed upon surer grounds, or asserted with more just emphasis. The wealth of illustration lavished on the various topics discussed is almost marvellous; and, when one considers that Mr. Spencer has already on hand a great work on the same subject, augurs a rare profusion of resources. The purpose of the present essay, however, is not to render to Mr. Spencer a homage of which he has no need, but to invite attention to some positions of his philosophical system, so far as it has been given to the public, which have scarcely yet received that amount of consideration and criticism which their great importance demands. As will be seen, and indeed has already appeared, the following remarks have been conceived from the point of view of one who fully accepts the possibility of a social science, and who, to a large extent, concurs in Mr. Spencer's conception of the nature of that inquiry.

The part of Mr. Spencer's social philosophy to which he has hitherto given most prominence, and which he has elaborated with most care, is his doctrine of social evolution. The idea was put forward by him many years ago in a well-known essay entitled the "Social Organism";† it has since received further elucidation in a discussion with Professor Huxley in this review; and it has once more been expounded anew, and with fresh illustration, in the present volume. There is a certain sense in which, I presume, the doctrine of "Social Evolution" would be now pretty widely accepted, at least among those who have concerned themselves with the philosophy of history and kindred speculations. I mean the sense in which it expresses the fact that each stage in human progress is the outcome and result of the stage which has immediately preceded it, and that the whole series of stages, beginning with savage life and ending with the most advanced existing civilization, represents a connected chain, of which the links are bound together as sequences in precisely the same way as in the instances of causation presented by other departments of Nature. Some such assumption as this must necessarily form the basis of all attempts at a rational interpretation of history. But, as enunciated and expounded by Mr. Spencer, social evolution carries with it a meaning much more precise and significant. As his readers are aware, Mr. Spencer insists very strongly on the analogy of evolution, as exhibited in the animal kingdom, whether in the individual animal or in the species, and evolution in human society—in other words, between the development, individual and specific, of the animal organism, and the development of what he calls "the social organism," meaning, thereby, organized social life. He finds in this analogy not merely a metaphor and an illustration, but a type, and even a clue.* Thus he observes a law of development governing the growth of an individual organism from birth to maturity; and, again, a similar law governing the development of species from existence in an all but amorphous germ to the attainment of a very high and complex form of animal life; and he transfers these laws from physiology and zoölogy to the domain of social science; treating them not merely as the means of elucidating social phenomena, but as exhibiting the real character of the processes by which mankind have in fact attained their present civilization, and as foreshadowing, also, the lines along which society in its future development is destined to move. It is, for instance, a characteristic of the evolution of individual organisms under the laws of animal growth, as well as of that of the several species of animals under the influence of the struggle for existence and the law of the "survival of the fittest," that development takes place "spontaneously,"—that is to say, is the incidental result of actions not consciously undertaken with that object in view.† This is evidently so in the growth of an individual animal, and it is no less certainly so in the development of species. In neither case is the progress attained the result of efforts consciously put forth for its accomplishment. And the whole drift of Mr. Spencer's teaching on this subject is to show that the process is similar in the case of human society; that its growth and development are in no degree, or at all events in quite an insignificant degree, the consequence of efforts put forth by those who compose it to improve their social condition, but mainly, if not exclusively, the result of actions undertaken with quite other ends in view. A favorite illustration, accordingly, with Mr. Spencer of the process by which society undergoes development is the growth of language.

"Not only has it been natural from the beginning, but it has been spontaneous. No language is a cunningly devised scheme of a ruler or body of legislators. There is no council of savages to invent the parts of speech, and decide on what principles they should be used. Nay, more. Going on without any authority or appointed regulation, this natural process went on without any man observing that it was going on. Solely under pressure of the need for communicating their ideas and feelings, solely in pursuit of their personal interests, men little by little developed speech in absolute unconsciousness that they were doing anything more than pursuing their personal interest." (Essays, vol. iii., p. 129.)

And this is given as a typical specimen of the "workings-out of sociological processes"—of the marvellous results "indirectly and unintentionally achieved by the cooperation of men who are severally pursuing their private ends." The numerous and complex arrangements which, under the stimulus of individual self-interest, have arisen in this and other civilized countries for the distribution of wealth, and the growth from small beginnings of our vast system of credit and banking, serve as illustrations of the same principle. "When it is questioned," he remarks, "whether the spontaneous cooperation of men in pursuit of personal benefits will adequately work out the general good, we may get guidance for judgment by comparing the results;"—and he proceeds to give examples which could only lead to an affirmative conclusion.

The nature of social development is thus, according to Mr. Spencer, essentially identical with that of development in the animal kingdom; and it is a necessary corollary from this that the course of both should lie along parallel lines. Thus, when we find the individual animal growing from birth to maturity, developing its structure and functions according to a regular scheme; and, similarly, the several species of animals constantly tending, under the influence of the struggle for existence, to adapt themselves more and more perfectly to the conditions of their environment, and so to rise into a higher and higher order of being; when we find all this, and perceive that the processes by which society is developed are exactly analogous, the conclusion seems inevitable that so it must be also with social evolution,—that here, too, progress and improvement arise by way of spontaneous growth in the natural order of things, and that consequently efforts to advance the common interest are superfluous—much more likely, in effect, to impede and disturb than to assist the harmonious order of human development.

Such, so far as I have been able to extract his meaning from his various essays on this subject, is Mr. Spencer's theory of social evolution. The practical effect of such a doctrine on all engaged in helping forward, according to the measure of their strength, the cause of human well-being, it is not difficult to perceive; nor does Mr. Spencer altogether blink this aspect of the case. In the last two pages of his recent work he has the following remarks:—

"If, as seems likely, some should propose to draw the seemingly awkward corollary, that it matters not what we believe, or what we teach, since the process of social evolution will take its own course in spite of us, I reply that, while this corollary is in one sense true, it is in another sense untrue. Doubtless, from all that has been said, it follows that, supposing surrounding conditions continue the same, the evolution of a society cannot be in any essential way diverted from its general course; though it also follows (and here the corollary is at fault) that the thoughts and actions of individuals, being natural factors that arise in the course of the evolution itself, and aid in further advancing it, cannot be dispensed with, but must be severally valued as an increment of the aggregate force producing change."

Whether this explanation will be satisfactory to those who draw the "seemingly awkward corollary" may, perhaps, be doubted. Mr. Spencer apparently does not rely much on the practical efficacy of his answer, for he at once proceeds to supplement it as follows:—

"Though the process of social evolution is, in its general character, so far predetermined that its successive stages cannot be antedated, and that hence no teaching or policy can advance it beyond a certain normal rate, which is limited by the rate of organic modification in human beings, yet it is quite possible to perturb, to retard, or to disorder the process. The analogy of individual development again serves us. The unfolding of an organism after its special type has its approximately-uniform course, taking its tolerably-definite time, and no treatment that may be devised will fundamentally change or greatly accelerate these; the best that can be done is to maintain the required favorable conditions. But it is quite easy to adopt a treatment which shall dwarf, or deform, or otherwise injure; the processes of growth and development may be, and very often are, hindered and deranged, though they cannot be artificially bettered. Similarly with the social organism."

If I am not mistaken, however, the case of the social organism is not similar. The favorable conditions which it is important to maintain with reference to the individual organism are conditions external to the organism; whereas that condition of social development, the efficacy of which forms the question in dispute, consists in efforts after social improvement made by the units composing the organism. The analogy, therefore, of individual development completely fails us here, unless, indeed, Mr. Spencer supposes the objectors he is addressing to be standing outside the social organism, and proposing to experiment upon it as upon a foreign body. But, not to dwell on this point, the conclusion arrived at is, that "by maintaining favorable conditions, there cannot be more good done than that of letting social progress go on unhindered"; whereas "an immensity of mischief may be done in the way of disturbing, and distorting, and repressing, by policies carried out in pursuit of erroneous conceptions." Indifferent comfort this for the friends of humanity; but it is all Mr. Spencer has to offer. He adds "a few words," however, "to those who think these general conclusions discouraging. Probably the more enthusiastic, hopeful of great ameliorations in the state of mankind, to be brought about rapidly by propagating this belief, or initiating that reform, will feel that a doctrine negating their sanguine expectations takes away much of the stimulus to exertion. If large advances in human welfare can come only in the slow process of things, which will inevitably bring them, why should we trouble ourselves?" A very natural question. And what is Mr. Spencer's answer? Simply that on visionary hopes rational criticisms cannot but have a depressing influence. But "it is better," he adds, "to recognize the truth."

Doubtless "it is better to recognize the truth"; but before accepting as true a doctrine admittedly so depressing, carrying with it such "seemingly awkward corollaries," it will, at least, be well to subject it to a somewhat careful examination. And, in the first place, there is this remark to be made, that no verification whatever has yet been offered, or, so far as I know, attempted, of the theory of social evolution set forth with so much appearance of scientific authority. It represents a speculation transferred from the domain of physiology and zoölogy into that of social inquiry, and the speculation, so transferred, is applied without question or scruple to the interpretation of human affairs; no attempt having been made to ascertain how far the course of these affairs hitherto has corresponded with the doctrine thus formulated. The range of human history now covers upwards of three thousand years, and presents, in a very incomplete and imperfect manner, no doubt, the

* The Study of Sociology, by Herbert Spencer. 3d edit. Henry S. King & Co. 1874.

† Essays: Scientific, Political, and Speculative, by Herbert Spencer. Second series. Vol. ii. 1863.

 "And yet metaphors are here more than metaphors in the ordinary sense. They are devices of speech hit upon to suggest a truth at first dimly perceived, but which grows clearer the more carefully the evidence is examined."—Study of Sociology, p. 330.

† This seems to me to be the sense in which in the main "spontaneity" is used by Mr. Spencer in connection with the subject of social evolution; but, as will hereafter appear, it is by no means the only sense in which it is employed by him even in this connection. In the Principles of Biology I find such phrases as the following: "The very conception of spontaneity is wholly incongruous with the conception of evolution" (vol. i., p. 205); and again, "No more in the case of man than in the case of any other being, can we presume that evolution either has taken place, or will take place, spontaneously" (vol. ii., p. 497). In these passages "spontaneity" is opposed to external influence; whereas, when employed in the discussion of social evolution, whether in the essays or in the recent volume, it is in general opposed to deliberate purpose. As a consequence it is predicated and denied of evolution with equal emphasis.

phenomena of moral, intellectual, religious, and other evolution in numerous societies of men. Surely, before propounding his speculation as a law of human society, from which he is at once justified in deducing consequences of the largest kind bearing upon human conduct, Mr. Spencer was bound to consider what amount of countenance or support it received from the evidence derivable from such fields of research; but from the application of this test he has wholly abstained. Will it be said that our knowledge of past history is so exceedingly slight and untrustworthy as to be unfit to furnish a datum for social speculation, and that verification had thus to be dispensed with as impracticable? Such a defence, it seems to me, is scarcely available in the present instance; for, while it is true that about particular events in history there is in general much room for doubt and for difference of opinion, this is not the case, or is in a very slight degree the case, with regard to certain broad generalizations which come out with considerable distinctness from the study of the past, and which are in effect the very generalizations needed in order to test Mr. Spencer's doctrine. Thus there cannot be much doubt that certain nations have during certain centuries of their history made rather rapid progress in civilization, but have afterwards suffered an arrest, which has in some instances been followed by temporary or permanent decline; while, on the other hand, others, and these by far the more numerous, have continued for thousands of years in a condition almost, if not altogether, stationary. In his work on Ancient Law, Sir H. Maine does not hesitate to say that:—

"The stationary condition of the human race is the rule; the progressive, the exception." "In spite of overwhelming evidence," he remarks, "it is most difficult for a citizen of Western Europe to bring thoroughly home to himself the truth that the civilization which surrounds him is a rare exception in the history of the world. . . . It is indisputable that much the greatest part of mankind has never shown a particle of desire that its civil institutions should be improved, since the moment when external completeness was first given to them, by their embodiment in some permanent record."*

Again, it is a point upon which, I suppose, it may be said historians are agreed, that even in Europe for many centuries—starting, let us say, from the age of the Antonines, and ending with the eleventh or twelfth century—the movement in human affairs was on the whole steadily backward; the state of things existing at the latter date being, according to all the main tests of human well-being, far in arrear of the condition attained in the former epoch. It may be that these generalizations are superficial, that the learning of the world is here at fault, and that history better understood would support Mr. Spencer's view; or it may be that the current beliefs on the points in question are capable of being reconciled with the new doctrine. Be this as it may, it is not the less true that the verdict of history, as now understood by its most competent interpreters, is distinctly opposed to the theory of social evolution enunciated by Mr. Spencer. Now this is a fact which has been completely ignored by that distinguished writer; he has simply passed it by as not concerning his argument; and in doing so has, as I contend, set at naught one of the best understood canons of the inductive method—the canon which requires that hypotheses, before being accepted as laws of Nature, or made the bases of confident deduction, should be carefully verified by comparison with all available facts pertinent to the question in hand. M. Comte, who, as regards the particular point under consideration—the necessarily progressive character of human evolution—is at one with Mr. Spencer, understood otherwise the claims of the positive philosophy, and does in fact fairly attempt to grapple with the historical difficulties to which I have referred. It is true indeed his argument is by no means successful—at least so it seems to me—in establishing the required conclusion; but it is, at least, more satisfactory than total silence.

It follows then that Mr. Spencer's theory of social evolution can only be regarded, as matters now stand, as an unverified hypothesis, with this presumption against it, that it is at variance with such knowledge as we possess of the past history of mankind; and the doubt as to its soundness which this circumstance cannot but suggest will, I think, find confirmation, when we look closely into that analogy between the social and the animal organisms on which the whole speculation is built up. In the striking and ingenious essay in which Mr. Spencer first traced this analogy, he frankly admits that it does not run on all fours, and he enumerates no less than four points in which the analogy fails. There will be no need at present to refer to more than one of these: it is to the effect that, unlike the sentient life of animals, which is concentrated in the brain, the sentient life of societies is diffused equally over the entire surface.

"A fact," says Mr. Spencer, "which reminds us that, while in individual bodies the welfare of all other parts is rightly subservient to the nervous system, whose pleasurable or painful activities make up the good or evil of life, in bodies politic the same thing does not hold, or holds to but a very slight extent. It is well that the lives of all parts of an animal should be merged in the life of the whole; because the whole has a corporate consciousness capable of happiness or misery. But it is not so with a society; since its living units do not and cannot lose individual consciousness; and since the community as a whole has no corporate consciousness. And this is an everlasting reason why the welfare of citizens cannot rightly be sacrificed to some supposed benefit of the State; but why, on the other hand, the State is to be maintained solely for the benefit of citizens. The corporate life must here be subservient to the lives of the parts, instead of the lives of the parts being subservient to the corporate life."*

I have called attention to this admission, because it appears to me to involve very much larger consequences than Mr. Spencer seems disposed to allow—consequences, if I mistake not, fatal to his theory. For what does it amount to? To this: that however closely the two organisms he has been comparing may correspond in certain details of structure and function, the main purposes of the two schemes—the ends for which alone all the contrivances exist, and with reference to which their goodness or badness must be judged—are essentially different; the aim of the one being to sustain the corporate existence, and to contribute to the corporate happiness; while that of the other can properly have regard only to the existence and happiness of the individual elements which compose it. This being so, what can be more preposterous than to erect the modes of organization furnished by the animal kingdom into patterns and exemplars by which to regulate the relations of social life? What does such doctrine come to but a proposal deliberately to sacrifice the substance to the shadow—the ends of social existence to the establishment of a fanciful analogy? The reader of Professor Huxley's essay on "Administrative Nihilism"† will probably remember the passage in which he turns the analogy in question against Mr. Spencer, and converts it into an argument in favor of extending the functions of the State, or rather shows how it might be thus converted.

"The fact is," says Professor Huxley, "that the sovereign power of the body thinks for the physiological organism, acts for it, and rules the individual components with a rod of iron. . . . The questioning of his authority involves death, or that partial death which we call paralysis. Hence, if the analogy of the body politic with the body physiological counts for anything, it seems to me to be in favor of a much larger amount of governmental interference than exists at present, or than I, for one, at all desire to see. But, tempting as the opportunity is, I am not disposed to build up any argument in favor of my own case upon this analogy, curious, interesting, and in many respects close as it is, for it takes no cognizance of certain profound and essential differences between the physiological and political bodies."‡

And Professor Huxley proceeds to point out one of those profound and essential differences which, if the reader will refer to his argument, will be seen to come, in effect, to very much what Mr. Spencer himself had admitted, in his original essay, in the passage which I have quoted. As the reader is probably aware, Mr. Spencer replied to Professor Huxley's attack in an elaborate article, now printed in the third series of his collected essays; but, though he might have claimed to have anticipated the objection urged against him by pointing to the passage in which the failure of the analogy in the circumstance in question was admitted, and even insisted on, he did not take this course. In truth, though he might thus have avoided the reductio ad absurdum with which he was pressed by Professor Huxley, and might also have saved his own consistency, he could only have done so by the entire surrender of his main position; for he must have admitted that the all-sufficing analogy, "curious, interesting, and in many respects close," as no doubt it is, was yet, for the purpose of political argument, entirely destitute of cogency; and this was an admission which Mr. Spencer did not see his way to make.

It may still, however, be contended that, though of small account as a criterion in practical politics—in the sphere of what we may call the statics of sociology,—this analogy between the individual and social organisms may nevertheless possess value in reference to the dynamical aspects of the social problem, as throwing light, that is to say, on the course of social evolution. And such, it appears to me, is the case, so long as we confine ourselves to a very primitive stage in the social history of man. In that primitive stage (as Mr. Darwin has taught us), while man remains still a savage, and even perhaps for some time after he has emerged from the savage condition, the influences which mould his social development are substantially the same with those which govern the development of a species. It is not strange, therefore, that evolution in the human and in the animal kingdom should, during this period, follow a very similar course. But a time arrives in the progress of social development when societies of men become conscious of a corporate existence, and when the improvement of the conditions of this existence becomes for them an object of conscious and deliberate effort. At what particular stage in human history this new social force comes into play, we have no need here to inquire. What I am concerned to point out is that it is a new social force, wholly different in character from any which had hitherto helped to shape human destiny—wholly different, also, from those influences which have guided the unfolding either of the individual animal or of the species. We cannot, by taking thought, add a cubit to our stature. The species, in undergoing the process of improvement, is wholly unconscious of the influences that are determining its career. It is not so with human evolution. Civilized mankind are aware of the changes taking place in their social condition, and do consciously and deliberately take measures for its improvement; and this brings us to the central point of our argument: How far have such measures, consciously and deliberately taken by men for their social improvement, affected the course of social evolution?

Measures of the kind in question may be conveniently considered under two heads: those which have been carried into effect through the instrumentality of the State—in other words, the political institutions and modes of government of different countries; and, secondly, those which have resulted from the conduct of individuals, separately or in combination, acting in their private capacity.

Confining ourselves for the present to the former of these, we have to consider Mr. Spencer's doctrine that political institutions are themselves examples of spontaneous development.

"We all know," he says, "that the enactments of representative governments ultimately depend on the national will; they may for a time be out of harmony with it, but eventually they must conform to it. And to say that the national will finally determines them, is to say that they result from the average of individual desires; or, in other words, from the average of individual natures. A law so initiated, therefore, really grows out of the popular character. In the case of a government representing a dominant class the same thing holds, though not so manifestly. . . . Even where the government is despotic the doctrine still holds. . . . So that such social changes as are immediately traceable to individuals of unusual power are still remotely traceable to the social causes which produce these individuals: and hence, from the highest point of view, such social changes also are parts of the general developmental process."*

Understood with the due limitations, there is nothing in this passage that need be objected to; but, in making this admission, we must be on our guard against metaphors. Political institutions may perhaps, in a certain sense, be said to "grow"; but "growth" may be employed, and is in fact employed by Mr. Spencer, to cover very different meanings. The word is, I apprehend, employed in its proper sense when used to express the increase of a plant or animal by a natural process. When it is extended to describe the process by which a species of complex organization is evolved under the struggle for existence from one of inferior type, or, again, the process which takes place when results of any kind—for example, social and political arrangements—come into existence without being deliberately designed, it is employed metaphorically, and the metaphor, it may be allowed, is a reasonable and expressive one. Mr. Spencer, however, stretches the word beyond any of these meanings, and speaks of institutions and practices as having "grown," and as being "spontaneously developed," when they have been deliberately created or adopted by intelligent beings for the precise purpose which they serve. Now this last use of the word appears to me to be unwarrantable, and calculated, in a controversy like the present, to serve as a cover for fallacious inference. On referring to the passage just quoted, it will be seen that the entire plausibility of Mr. Spencer's argument for the spontaneous development of political institutions depends upon his employment of the word in this sense. Institutions are determined by the national will; therefore they result from the average of individual natures; therefore they grow out of the popular character; and they are therefore parts of the general developmental process. To such reasoning the following passage from Mr. Mill's Representative Government will serve as a useful corrective:—

"Let us remember," he says, "that political institutions (however the proposition may be at times ignored) are the work of men; owe their origin and their whole existence to human will. Men did not wake on a summer morning and find them sprung up. Neither do they resemble trees, which, once planted, 'are aye growing while men are sleeping.' In every stage of their existence they are made what they are by human voluntary agency. Like all things, therefore, which are made by men, they may be either well or ill made; judgment and skill may have been exercised in their production, or the reverse of these."†

Political institutions, then, do not "grow" in the sense in which plants and animals grow; they are not the "products" of a community in the sense in which the fauna and flora of a country are its products; but are due to causes and to processes of an entirely different kind. Under these circumstances, to describe them as examples of spontaneous development, and to class them with the ordinary phenomena of organic life, is to use language, and to adopt a classification, fitted to obscure and to confound, rather than to elucidate, the problems of social existence.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

THE DOWNFALL of Louis Napoleon recalls the cutting repartee which he is said to have received from Lady Blessington. The countess had befriended him when he was a poor adventurer in London, and went to Paris to be near him after he had become prosperous. Much to her chagrin, he paid her no attention; but one day when their carriages were abreast in a thronged street Napoleon said, "Countess, how long do you expect to remain in Paris?" She answered, with dignified and ominous wit, "Only a short time. How long do you expect to stay here?"

* Essays, vol. ii., pp. 145-147. "Forms of government," Mr. Spencer tells us in his recent work, "are valuable only when they are products of national character."‡ But, according to the principle contended for in the passage quoted above, all forms of government are "products of national character"—are "parts of the general developmental process"; from which it seems to follow that all forms of government are equally valuable, or—shall we say?—equally worthless.

† Representative Government, p. 4.

‡ Study of Sociology, p. 275.

* Spencer's Essays. Vol. ii., p. 154.

† Fortnightly Review, November, 1871.

‡ Ibid., p. 535.

* Ancient Law, pp. 22-24.

A NEW PLANK IN PLATFORMS.

There have been several political State Conventions within the last month, and in the platforms of several of them a new and vital issue has appeared. Whatever is mentioned in a platform is not only a subject of general interest and thought, but it is something upon which positive opinions are entertained. Yet the subject to which we allude is one that has not been very generally discussed in the papers, and is one of the topics which it is thought unwise to mention. But it is none the less of the most fundamental importance, for it is nothing less than the public-school system. The fruits of the policy of silence upon this subject are shown by the present threatening aspect of the assault upon the schools. Had it been promptly exposed and resisted when it began, it would now be comparatively harmless. But it was thought a dangerous subject to touch. As if a public evil which it is dangerous to touch were not much more dangerous if left untouched. The enemies of the schools wished nothing more earnestly than silence. If they could only be left unobserved, they could sap the foundations, and gain an immense advantage before the alarm was given.

This has been their good fortune. The press generally has been silent, until it is found that the assault is general, resolute, and hopeful, and now suddenly the conventions raise the cry of danger. And danger there is. The public-school system of the United States is threatened, and can be saved only by the Republican party. The chief points of attack have been in the States of Ohio and New York, and the attacking column has been the Democratic party. The leaders of that party know the character of their following. They depend largely in all the great cities and centres of population upon the ignorant foreign-born vote. A very large part of that vote is Roman Catholic, and its political policy is dictated by Rome and its immediate agents, the bishops. The price of its support is acquiescence in the policy of Rome. Consequently the Democratic leaders, orators, and newspapers constantly flatter and cajole the Roman Church and its members, and the propositions in legislatures and conventions to propitiate the hierarchy by special favors and bribes to the Catholic interest proceed from Democrats. The Roman mastery of the Democratic party in New York has been forcibly and constantly set forth in the contributions of Mr. Eugene Lawrence to our columns, and the proposal has been openly made by the Roman interest in the city of New York to overthrow the public-school system under the plea of adopting parochial schools.

The Republicans of Ohio were the first to declare the imperative duty of maintaining the schools as they are. California echoed the declaration; and the Democratic Convention of Ohio, forced to speak, pronounced against sectarian control. Then it confesses there is danger. From whom? Undeniably from the Roman Church. But that church works through parties. And which party has it used in Ohio and in New York? Is it the Republican or the Democratic? Which party did slavery use? Which did secession use? Which does the rum interest use? Which party everywhere depends upon the ignorance and prejudice of the voters? Which is strongest in the slums of great cities, and in the rural parts of the Union where there are fewest schools? That party is the one that Rome uses to overthrow the public-school system; and the Democratic declarations of 1875 in favor of unsectarian schools are just as worthy of respect as the Democratic declarations of 1872 in favor of the equality of all men, and of exact justice to all, of whatever race or color. "When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be." The party that slavery manages is not the party of freedom; that which secession controls is not the party of Union; that which demands inflation is not the party of the public faith; that which sneers at "niggers," and kisses the feet of the White League, is not the party of equal rights; and that which truckles to the purposes of Rome, and buys by subsidies the support of the Catholic vote, is not the party of the unsectarian American public-school system.

Having been forced to show American colors upon this subject, as many a copperhead newspaper in 1861 felt itself compelled to show American colors of another kind, the Ohio Democratic Convention wrathfully denounces the Republican platform, which it was compelled to echo, as "a base appeal to sectarian prejudices." But, if it is so, the Democratic declaration is equally base. The ringing words of the Republican manifest are: "We stand by free education, our public-school system, the taxation of all for its support, and no division of the school fund. Under our Republican system of government there should be no connection, direct or indirect, between Church and State; and we oppose all legislation in the interest of any particular sect. Upon this subject we should not fail to profit by the experience of foreign governments, where the efforts of the Church to control the State constitute an evil of great magnitude, and endanger the power and prosperity of the people." Nothing could be truer, or more plainly said, or more timely and useful than these words. The political attempt that the Roman Church is making in Europe to withstand liberty and civilization it is making here, with the aid of the Democratic party; and the clear and forcible Republican exposure of its plots is naturally denounced by the Democratic Convention as a base appeal to sectarian prejudices.

If there are such prejudices, who has aroused them? Why now for the first time do political party platforms declare that the unsectarian school system must be maintained? Has the Presbyterian, or Methodist, or Baptist, or Episcopal, or Unitarian, or Congregational sect, or any sect known as Protestant, attacked it? Have the Israelites, or those who own no sectarian Christian name, assailed it? But there is confessedly an assault upon the schools. There is a strong and crafty effort to make them sectarian. It is so powerful and pronounced that the party conventions begin to condemn it. And the whole country knows which sect is plotting the overthrow of unsectarian schools, for it boldly avows its design. It is the Roman Church, by means of the Democratic party; and the Democratic party in Ohio, in order to aid and protect this deadly assault upon the schools, declares that to expose it and to oppose it is to attack religious liberty. That party must hold, then, that to connive at the Roman overthrow of the schools is to maintain religious liberty. This issue alone, were there no other, would give the most vital interest and importance to the election of 1876. The schools are to be saved, and they can be saved only by the Republican party. By the necessity of the case, the Democratic party, could it regain power, would yield to Rome precisely as it would yield to the White League. But, happily, the friends of equal rights and of unsectarian schools need not look to the enemies of both for their protection. The Republican party stands no less for religious than for personal, civil, and political liberty.—Harper's Weekly, July 10.

THE VALUE OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

EXTRACT FROM THE ORATION OF REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE BEFORE THE CITY GOVERNMENT AND CITIZENS OF BOSTON, JULY 5, 1875.

We have also demonstrated, by our experiment in America, that free institutions can give a wider education to the people than has yet been given by a monarchy or an aristocracy. The people of this country were early so sagacious as to see that the permanence of free institutions depends on the intelligence of the people. And they also saw that this intelligence could only be obtained by a public-school system which would give every child in the land free elementary instruction. When the people are to govern, the people must be educated. A government by the people will not be a government for the people, unless the people are able to know what is really good for them; and, foreseeing that the time would come when women, as well as men, would vote, they have made the schools free for girls as well as for boys. Public free schools are, indeed, the chief defence of a free people. They make standing armies unnecessary, for an intelligent people will always be able to defend itself. No matter how large the sum spent on free schools, this expenditure is the wisest economy, for it increases the wealth and taxable property of the whole State by increasing the producing power of every individual. Educated intelligent labor, as we all know, is vastly more productive than ignorant labor, and, besides this, it has been abundantly proved that education diminishes crime, and in this way is also a great economy. I find, for instance, a paper by that well-known scholar and wise philanthropist, Mr. Charles Loring Brace, in the reports of last year's Prison Congress at St. Louis, in which these facts are given: "In 1871, out of 50,000 prisoners in New York jails, nearly 20,000 could not read or write. Of the illiterate class in the city, which amounted to about 60,000, one in every three had committed a crime that year, for which he was sent to prison, while of those who could read and write only one in twenty-seven was thus guilty." Taking the whole State of New York, it appears that one-third of the crime is committed by the illiterate, who constitute only one-sixteenth of the population. In Massachusetts the proportion of criminals in jail who cannot read or write is usually about thirty percent. of the whole number. In 1871 about one in every twenty of those who could not read or write were sentenced for crimes, while of those who were able to do so only one in one hundred and twenty-six committed these offences.

Now, it may be true that such education as is given in our common schools does not necessarily make Christians, and it is not meant for that purpose. The home and the church are for that purpose. But it is very certain, if there is any truth in facts and figures, that this common-school education does have a strong tendency to prevent persons from becoming thieves, burglars, pickpockets, intemperate, and murderers. Schools cultivate habits of order, regularity, industry, and self-control. They take children from the streets and from idleness. They open their minds to thoughts of large interests. They indirectly encourage what is good and right in all their lessons. To denounce them because they are secular, and do not teach religion, is therefore pure folly. What are Sunday-schools for but to teach religion? No sensible man pretends that when you have taught children to read, write, and cipher, you have given to them all they need in order to become wise and good men and women. But you have given them "the key of knowledge." You have put their feet in the right way. You have reduced their chance of becoming criminals from thirty-three in a hundred to three in a hundred. And you have made it certain that the majority of the voters who are to make your laws, and decide what shall be done with your property, cannot become the blind tools of selfish demagogues.

Mr. Maurice Block, a recent French writer on Social Science (L'Europe Politique et Sociale), tells us that in the United States popular instruction comes nearest to its ideal. He adds that it is the only country in the world which can dispense with "compulsory education"; but adds that it is the first country which has declared it to be the right of the community to insist on elementary instruction, quoting the laws of Massachusetts in 1668, and of Connecticut in 1650.

The United States has led the way in giving universal education to the people, and making this education purely secular; leaving religious instruction in the hands of the churches where it belongs. Holland followed our example, in 1806, by separating the school completely from the Church; and, in spite of the efforts of the Catholic Church, the law of 1857 maintained the neutrality of primary schools. Sweden and Norway also give gratuitous education in primary schools, and make it compulsory on parents. Switzerland has followed this example. Even Turkey has adopted free elementary schools and compulsory education; and it is stated that ninety-five children out of a hundred are in the Turkish schools. All the countries of Europe recognize the right of government to insist on the education of the people. But all, with perhaps one or two exceptions, are behind this country in the sums expended for education, in the proportion of children in the schools, and in the statistics of illiteracy.

We have been able, in the United States, to make education almost universal by making it, first, secular; and, secondly, free. Free schools, supported by the whole community, and carefully abstaining from any interference with religious opinion, have produced this result. In Europe, where the whole power of an absolute government has been at the service of the Church to enable it to educate the people, the people have not been educated. The object of the Church has always been, and very properly from its point of view, not to educate the intellect, but to train the heart in religious sentiments. The Church did not desire that the people should learn to read and write, but that they should be carefully taught the catechism. Consequently, in 1866, the French minister of war reported that out of a hundred conscripts only thirty could read. By tables published in Turin, in 1864, by the ex-minister of public instruction, it appeared that, out of a thousand males in Sardinia and Lombardy, four hundred and sixty-one did not know their letters. In Tuscany, six hundred and forty-one out of a thousand were equally ignorant. In Naples and Sicily, eight hundred and thirty-five men out of a thousand, and nine hundred and thirty-eight women out of a thousand, could not read or write. Since Italy was united, things have improved; yet, by the census of 1864, out of twenty-one millions, less than four millions could not read and write. In Spain, about seventy-five percent. of the people are equally ignorant. In Spanish America, seven-eighths of the people are in the same condition. Meantime, in the whole United States, including young children, the recently emancipated slaves, the poor Southern whites, and foreigners, only four millions and a half, out of thirty-eight millions of the population, could not read in 1870. In Massachusetts, including children and foreigners, only one in twenty is unable to read; and two hundred and eighty-seven thousand out of fourteen hundred thousand are at school. In the whole United States there are one hundred and forty-one thousand schools, and there are more than seven millions of pupils in attendance. The money expended in the whole United States for schools, in the year 1870, was $95,000,000, or about $2.50 for every man, woman, and child in the Union. Sixty-four millions of this was raised by taxation for the public schools.

Compare with this vast sum, freely given for education in this country, the trifling amount levied by taxation in England, which in 1867 amounted to less than two million dollars; all the rest of the education of the people of England being left to local endowments and private charities. Twenty years before that time, in 1847, Macaulay, in one of his most powerful speeches, had pointed out how the absence of general education in England had led to terrible riots, the direct effect "of the gross, brutish ignorance of the population, left brutes in the midst of Christianity, savages in the midst of civilization." "No proposition," he adds, "can be more strange than this; that the State is bound to punish its subjects for not knowing their duty, but at the same time is to take no step to let them know what their duty is."

If Macaulay justly charges the ferocious, riotous character of the populace of England to the absence of universal public instruction, we may say, on the other hand, that our own wonderful spectacle on the 17th of June may be partly credited to the influence of our public schools. Massachusetts, with fourteen hundred thousand inhabitants, pays every year for education nearly five millions of dollars, of which over three millions is for its public schools. The county of Suffolk, with a population, in 1870, of two hundred and seventy thousand, had fifty thousand children at school. Is there any other city in the world which could have collected a crowd such as we saw here on that day; so orderly, so quiet, so well-dressed, where you could scarcely find a single drunken or noisy man; a crowd amid which the most delicate lady or child could everywhere go, as safely as in a private parlor? I think, Mr. Mayor, and citizens of Boston, we have a right to take some pride in that remarkable exhibition of the results of a system of universal education, begun by our fathers in 1612, and maintained to the present hour. This great result of republican institutions is not likely to be abandoned. It began with the Puritan fathers of New England. The Catholic World, certainly an impartial witness, when it praises the Puritans in the number for April, 1870, says that "it is to the credit of the American people, at least the Calvinistic portion of them, that they have, from the earliest colonial times, taken a deep interest in the education of the young;" and that "the present system of common schools at the public expense" originated among the Congregationalists and in Massachusetts. William Penn, Washington, and Jefferson all exhorted this nation to "educate the people." And since every other system has proved ineffectual, and since our system of free schools, indepen-ment of every sect, and teaching the poorest child the elements of knowledge, has proved so successful, the people of this country will continue to maintain it, as one of the greatest blessings born out of republican principles, and the methods of a free State.

THE "IMPRESSIVE PREACHER" AS THE REMEDY FOR PUBLIC SCEPTICISM.

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS AT AMHERST COLLEGE, JULY 7, 1875.

BY HON. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

I turn to my other topic, not of inferior importance, and far more difficult to treat, but which I trust I may dispose of more briefly. That is,—

The growth in the Church of indifference on the one hand and ritualism on the other; the former developing into scepticism, the other into superstition,—neither of them healthy symptoms in the Christian world.

Am I right in my observation of this tendency, of merely in America, but over a great part of Christendom? If so, the causes are not, in my mind, far to seek. I shall treat of them here solely in connection with my subject,—the demands of the age upon its colleges.

Religion, the bond between mankind and a sovereign Creator beyond the reach of the senses, is largely compounded of the two strongest passions engrafted in the race. The one, love; the other, fear. These forces irresistibly prompt the worship of that unknown Cause in ways more or less regulated by reason. In one class emotion predominates. In the other, it is in large measure qualified by reflection. The former depends upon effects produced on the imagination through the presentation of images to the sense. The latter is equally maintained by the pressure of arguments forcibly convincing to the reason. So long as these forces moved in harmony under the common standard of the Savior and his revelation, there was no sufficient jar among the arms of faith seriously to impair the unity of the church he founded. But the temptation of temporal power came in, and it opened a door to discord which ultimately rent it in twain. The result we all know. The papal and protestant powers have now for centuries maintained toward each other an attitude of antagonism. But during this interval the condition of these opposing forces has been very differently affected. Whilst on the one side the Roman Church has steadily rallied all its followers upon its central point of union, emotion stimulated by fear, the protestants, planting themselves on the right of private judgment, have seen their unity slowly and steadily unpaired until the multiplicity of conflicting doctrines has completely undermined the strength springing from a common bond of faith.

Thus it turns out that, while the pope has lately been formally invested with powers little short of omnipotence over the faith and duty of countless millions of the human race, the Protestant Church, which once fought against him shoulder to shoulder, then animated by one spirit, and who then won its liberty, finds itself exposed to a danger never dreamed of at the start; the danger of disintegration, spreading so far and wide as even to arrive at indifference, if not the absolute ice of entire unbelief.

It was the master-mind of the eloquent Bossuet who powerfully touched this chord, dissuading doubters wandering in uncertain paths from leaving the only permanent standard of faith. And his argument remains to this day the most dexterous and persuasive of all resorted to by his school. It cannot be disputed that over millions of the race who cling to support from a higher power against the promptings of a tender conscience, and the fear of the torments of the damned, the force of an authority to relieve, sustained by the most effective appeals to the imagination, becomes positively absolute.

Against this powerful array, drawn up to catch the common mind, what has been relied upon as effective to stay the conscience and quiet the terrors of myriads of earnest yet anxious dissidents? The chief resource has been calm appeals to naked reason, maintained by partisan arguments. For awhile this proved strong enough to hold many generations in their places, excellent people as ever lived, stern and zealous upholders of what to them appeared as pious gospel truth. So long as the spirit of controversy was kept alive, no matter in what direction, against Rome abroad or backsliders at home, there was little danger of decay. It is peace and harmony that as bred indifference and desertion. Indifference tolerated the introduction of doubt and uncertainty. Then followed the desertion of churches not provided with especial objects of attraction, either imposing ceremonies, or preachers seductive whether by true dramatic accomplishments or their startling extravagance. On the one hand appeared multitudes crowding toward lame imitations of the splendor of Roman Ritualism, and, on the other, eager devotees to the fantastic sentimentalism of dancing-masters at the pulpit. Then, too, the ice-bound scoffer had the courage to make himself seen, and to pretend that he who saw no future at all was the wisest of the prophets.

This may appear to some of you to be much too charged a picture of the present religious state of Christendom. And, even if conceded to be but partially accurate, I may be asked if I have thought of any counteraction or remedy.

To which I respectfully reply that, if remedy there be, in my belief it must be found in our institutions of education. We must raise up a fresh class of the clergy, thoroughly fitted for the precise conflict to which they are called. I have reason to believe that the study of the arts, which made an impressive and zealous orator, have by some excellent people been regarded as utterly inconsistent with the character of a grave and pious preacher of the gospel. It is the doctrine, only, which is essential. The manner of communication may be as it pleases God. The consequence of this sort of reasoning has been the production of many very worthy men as teachers, who never studied at all the modes of attracting the attention of their hearers, and who naturally left the experiment to take care of itself. What was the result? Gradual but silent secession, either to cherish indifference at home, or else to go to more stimulating, if not so estimable, preachers. One church, possessed of a star performer, is crowded to its utmost limits; while another, occupied by a far better but less eloquent man, is attended, possibly, by forty or fifty devoted friends, and no more. Is it a matter of wonder that the innocent sufferer should be discouraged? He has missed his path. Why? Because, when he was taught, all that was inculcated as necessary was sound doctrine. The means of making it acceptable to the hearer were wholly overlooked. The demand of the present time is for sympathy, bordering, it may be, upon passion. In my humble opinion there never was a fairer field of action to animate and confirm the shivering confidence of thousands in the pure doctrines of the Savior, than at this moment is presented in these United States. There is great need of a revival, and of successors even to such as Whitefield and Wesley to bring it about. I am an earnest advocate of a special school of instruction directed to this end alone. I want no extravagance, and still less the graces of the dancing-master; but rather the lofty consciousness of power skilfully devoted to the penetration into the innermost recesses of the mind and the confirmation of the reason, and a deep well of sympathy from which to heal the soreness of every faltering heart.

In saying what I have, I mean no offence to those whose province it has been heretofore to teach in this department. Whilst I fully believe that in no country are to be found a greater proportionate number of pious, learned, faithful, and assiduous servants in the Church, I trust it will be no disparagement to them if I frankly confess a craving of many years for a warmer, a more effective, and a more sympathetic manner of communicating their valuable lessons both of law and love.

I know I shall be told, as I often have been, that there is no use of endeavoring to instruct the young to make them masters of the means of leading their fellow-men by oratory; that this is a natural gift acquired at birth, which can no more be created than taken away. To this I can only reply that in my experience, many years ago, while officially visiting the primary schools in the town where I reside, I took some pains to observe the difference in progress between the children there taught to read. There I soon perceived that some learned quicker, and some better, than others; but that none were born readers, and none were unable to learn by teaching. I further discovered that one could do a great deal more with all scholars than another; but I nowhere discovered children able to read at first sight; or, if left alone to get on as best they could, proving good readers at once. So I have met with very bad readers coming from very good schools. As a general rule, the reading followed the will of the teacher. All this did not convince me that any one child was an orator, born like Minerva out of the brain of Jove. What is thus said of primary schools is equally applicable to all advanced teaching in this or other branches of knowledge. It will not be really effective unless the spirit of the teacher be communicated to his pupil as by an electric chain. This sort of teaching is the want of the present age. All the born speakers it has been my lot to hear have betrayed more or less deficiency. I can think of but one thoroughly accomplished speaker in the Commonwealth, and he never failed to impress the hearer with confidence, springing from the most careful culture. I have heard many speak well, who would have done much better if they had had good advice. Away, then, with all this nonsense about innate oratory, or dancing-school instruction! The germs of this power may be more thickly sown in one man than in another; but their full development can only be the result of a careful education; and when the full man comes forth before the view of his fellow-men, where shall you find a more efficient instrument of good, if only his antecedents have been certainly pure? His single voice may not only elevate the character of his own generation, but spread a healthy influence over that of many yet to come.

Neither let any one who ventures upon the study of this art be discouraged by the tone of disparagement which prevails in too many of our colleges. Let him remember that the great orator of Greece, Demosthenes, whose works are even now models of excellence well worth the study of all later generations, signally failed in his first appearance before the people of Athens. Cicero, too, the most eminent of the many gifted speakers in the most flourishing period of the republic, in his first effort betrayed so clearly his ignorance of the proper mode of modulating his voice, that he did not lose a moment to set about the correction of that single defect; and it was not till he was master of it that he trusted himself to speak again. He tells his own story very frankly, and it furnishes a good lesson to those who yet maintain oratory to be a gift and not an art, down to the present hour.

Thus I have spoken of the necessity of a special attention to instruction in our colleges to promote the advance in public usefulness of two classes of men, whom, for different reasons, the country greatly needs—the independent journalist and the impressive preacher.

ITALY AND SPAIN.—You (Jesuits) claim the liberty to instruct. For some centuries you have held in your hands, at your discretion, at your school, under your ferule, two great nations—Italy and Spain, illustrious among the illustrious; and what have you done with them? I am going to tell you. Thanks to you, Italy, of which no one can think nor even pronounce her name without inexpressible filial grief—Italy, that mother of genius and of nations, which has diffused over the whole world the most astonishing productions of poetry and art—Italy, which has taught our race to read, does not to-day know how to read herself! Yes, Italy has, of all the States of Europe, the smallest number of native inhabitants who are able to read! Spain, magnificently endowed—Spain, which received from the Romans her first civilization, from the Arabians her second civilization, from Providence, and in spite of you, a world—America; Spain has lost—thanks to you, thanks to your brutal yoke, which is a yoke of degradation,—Spain has lost that secret of her power which she received from the Romans, that genius in the arts which she received from the Arabs, that world which God gave her. And in exchange for what you made her lose, what has she received? She has received the Inquisition. The Inquisition, which certain men of a certain party are endeavoring to-day to reëstablish with a modest timidity for which I honor them. The Inquisition, which has burned upon the funeral pile five millions of men. Read history. The Inquisition, which exhumed the dead, in order to burn them as heretics. Witness Urgel, and Arnaut, Count of Forcalquier. The Inquisition, which declares children heretics even to the second generation. It is true, in order to console Spain for what you have taken from her, that you have surnamed what you have given her Catholic. Ah, do you know you have drawn from one of the greatest of men that dolorous cry which accuses you, "I would much rather that Spain should be great than that she should be Catholic"? See what you have done with that focus of light which you call Italy. You have extinguished it. That Colossus which you call Spain, you have undermined. The one is in ruins, the other in ashes. See what you have done for these two great nations.—Victor Hugo.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

Just views of life and this great world of ours;
Just views of man and his enlarging powers;
Just views of God—the Infinite Supreme,—
Just views of heaven of which we ever dream:
All these attained would make our life complete,
Would bless our days and make our dying sweet;
And these just views, Religion's perfect prize,
Are seen and known, when Science is the bride!

For Science must with true Religion wed,
Ere life its full and joyous light hath shed;
For Science is the sun that wakes our day,
And grows in grace and ever-widening sway;
And men rejoice beneath its blessed beams,
And spend their lives as in the land of dreams;
And so Religion needs the glowing light
Of Science sweet to make and keep her right!

Oh, such Religion will a blessing be,
As fresh and fair as God's unfettered sea;
And all mankind will share its earnest good,
Be bound as one in love and brotherhood,
And aim for freedom free from faintest thrall,
Our common strife that is so dipt in gall;
For such Religion pure the nations wait,
And Science opens thereto the golden gate!

With darkness men descend to brutal state,
And in the dark for rising light they wait;
Yet fear the light so new as far it spreads,
And man in ignorance saving knowledge dreads;
Oh, cast aside these foolish wars and fears,
Behold the sun of Science warm and cheers;
It blesses earth and heaven with wisest love,
And joins in one the serpent and the dove!

WILLIAM BRUNTON.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 17.

Emily J. Leonard, $2; C. L. Pierce, 50 cents; T. Lees, $3.35; A. R. Godfrey, 25 cents; M. H. Dibrow, $2.20; A. J. Davis, $1.15; M. C. Perkins, $10; Richard Owen, 75 cents; Jas. Stoll, 25 cents; J. Deansore, $1.60; T. H. Johnson, $3.20; B. A. Cleveland, 75 cents; M. E. Zakrzewska, $3.70; Frank Lessman, $3; S. W. Rathbone, $3.20; A. S. Waite, $3.20; T. B. Skinner, $4.40; A. Hanauer, 50 cents; F. Clement, $3.20; J. Alexander, $1.50; Jacob Rummell, $3; Dr. Erich, $3.20; Henry Shreve, $3.20; C. Brown, $5.25; J. C. Kearns, 50 cents; E. Rider, 30 cents; R. Israel, $3.20; Robert Bailey, $3.20; Free Reading Room, $3.20; J. S. Worthman, $3.20; E. D. Lucas, $1.60; W. C. Kelley, $1.20; F. Smith, $3.20; R. S. Barker, $3.20; Geo. B. Wheeler, $3.20; Geo. Allen, $3.20; Willard Nye, $3.20; W. Cross, $1.50; L. C. P. Freer, $3.20; J. D. Caldwell, $6; John Curtis, $6; E. M. Lathrop, $1.20; W. T. Lewis, $3.20; J. Solomon, $3; J. O. Martin, $4.50; Clara P. Bourland, $6; Henry Lantz, $7.50; R. G. Ingersoll, $6; Louis H. Prince, $6; H. H. Potter, $4.50; B. F. Sibley, $6; J. E. Oliver, $10; Jerry Brockway, $1.20; A. Ashton, $3.20; C. Blakesley, $5.25; Josiah Gooding, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 22, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALLER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

SAYS the Manchester (England) Evening News: "At this moment the attack upon the tenets of Christian people is made with exceptional vigor by men of the highest intellect, whose position and style command for them the attention which has been denied to the humbler men of smaller culture, who have been exponents of the same sort of unbelief in the past. Where Mr. Bradlaugh would be contemptuously ignored, and his writings left unread, Professor Clifford will appeal to a larger circle, and gain for his arguments consideration and often sympathy. The paper of Professor Clifford, which the Bishop of Manchester made the subject of a special discourse, is a remarkable proof of the increasing audacity of the most enlightened among the assailants of religion of any kind, which rests upon a supernatural basis. The fact that an article of its character should appear in the Fortnightly Review is in itself a fact of no little significance. Ten years ago, we may say with certainty, it would have been possible to read an essay of a similar purport only in the National Reformer, or journals of a cognate description. It is throughout an absolute denial of a spiritual nature in man."

THIS PARAGRAPH from the Christian Union is excellent of its kind, and is a fresh proof of Mr. Conway's brilliant powers as a press-writer: "Mr. Watts, an English artist, has a picture in the Royal Academy which represents Christ seated in mid-air; he folds between his knees five children, one of whom is black, the latter alone being enough to tell the artist's purpose—namely, to represent the races of men in their needs, under the guise of infants. Christ is crowned with thorns, and looks upward to the heavens with an expression of great sorrow; beneath him the earth stretches dark and desolate. This allegory of unity and humanity contrasted with the divisions and persecutions of religions on earth is dedicated to all the churches. The idea of this picture is almost identical with that of Ary Scheffer's Christus Consolator. One would think the meaning plain enough for anybody's comprehension; but Mr. Conway says that a group of young ladies, finely dressed, was standing before it, when one said: 'I wonder what five churches he means?' The rest at once took their cue from this profound critic, and made it out to their satisfaction that the five children mean the three English—High, Hard, and Broad,—and the Greek and Roman Churches. In spite of the lack of artistic training in this country, we think it would be hard to match this dulness among the groups of finely-dressed ladies that throng our Academy of Design. But Mr. Conway gives us another example still more amusing. Mr. Boughton has a picture in the Royal Academy, called 'The Bearers of the Burthen.' It shows a powerful fellow, with a brutal cur appropriately at his side, hands in pocket, pipe in mouth, striding along the road, while behind him three women, carrying various burthens (one with an infant), drag themselves wearily along. While Mr. Conway stood gazing with increasing admiration upon the subtle effects of this picture, two well-dressed men came up and looked upon it also. Presently one said to the other, 'What a sad picture. What is a man to do who finds himself in that position? Three women and a baby hanging on to one workingman!' Mr. Conway looked around to see if the critic was joking. He found the face serious. He says: 'I never expected to find in real life that child who, when shown a picture of Daniel in the lion's den, expressed sympathy with one poor little lion in the background, which seemed unlikely to get its share of the prophet; but here it was grown up.'"

THE REPUBLIC'S NEED.

At this time, when so many of our most eminent men—Curtis, Dana, Adams, Woolsey, Clarke, Chamberlain, and others—have been giving their best thought to their countrymen on themes of the highest public concern, it befits every American who cherishes deep convictions on public questions to give them utterance, and not to withhold what may seem to him of supreme importance to the welfare of the great nation in which it is his proud privilege to be a citizen. Even those who have filled no conspicuous station in the public service may yet have somewhat of value to say; and it need argue no overweening vanity in private men to think that what they have to say possesses value. Truth is truth, no matter who may utter it, and lays its solemn obligation on every one who believes himself to have caught even a glimpse of its majesty and glory. All the more incumbent is this obligation, when the people are infatuated with delusion, and worship shams instead of realities; and especially when their honored teachers confirm them in their idolatries.

In his late address to the Social Union of Amherst College, the Honorable Charles Francis Adams discussed two topics:—

"1. The decline of sensitiveness to the force of purely moral obligation in civil life.

"2. The spread of indifference, if not of scepticism, in the Church, on the one hand, and of ritual worship, on the other."

The first of these evils the distinguished orator attributed to the fact that "a principle of corruption" has been suffered to derange the balance of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the government, the executive department having been entrusted to "feeble hands," and "a large part of its vital energy having been transferred to, and divided among, those holding for the moment the legislative power." "The surrender of this power of patronage, in a large measure, into the hands of three or four hundred legislators, with no permanent responsibility, is equivalent to the formation of an equal number of beds of corruption, in which the whole welfare of the country is made subordinate to the interests of narrow and selfish combinations of men, spread over the entire surface of the land. Can it, then, be a cause of surprise that there has been a decline of sensitiveness to the force of purely moral obligation in civil life?" From these statements it is unlikely that any observant and thoughtful citizen will much dissent; though the chief mischief lies not so much in the transfer of patronage from executive to legislative hands as in the fact that appointments to office depend on "patronage," when they ought to depend rather on a well-devised and well-administered system of promotion by merit. The remedy proposed by Mr. Adams for this first evil is the "independent journalist," whose influence is to disintegrate parties that have become hopelessly corrupt, and constitute the nucleus of parties of purification.

The second of the two evils, indifference to Christianity culminating in scepticism, Mr. Adams attributes to a rending of the Church through the "temptation of temporal power," and the discord thereby engendered. He points to the conflict of the Papal and Protestant powers, the Roman Church "steadily rallying all its followers upon its central point of union, emotion stimulated by fear," while the Protestants have become almost endlessly subdivided by the "right of private judgment." On the one hand, Papal Infallibility; on the other hand, Protestant disintegration and "indifference, if not the absolute ice of entire unbelief." To earnest controversy against Popery succeeded in the course of time "peace and harmony"; then "indifference and desertion," "doubt and uncertainty"; and at last, by reaction, "lame imitations of Roman ritualism," "fantastic sentimentalism of dancing-masters in the pulpit," and (horribile dictu) the "ice-bound scoffer." Such being the dismaying situation, Mr. Adams by way of remedy prescribes "a fresh class of the clergy, thoroughly fitted for the precise conflict to which they are called"—in a word, the "impressive preacher," who is to be armed with the omnipotent weapons of "sympathy," "oratory," and good elocution. "There is great need," he says, "of a revival, and of successors even to such as Whitefield and Wesley to bring it about." Very well: they are not far to seek. All that is wanted is to shorten the furlough of absentee evangelists, and try the effect of our own persuasive Moody and Sankey on the "ice-bound scoffer." If he will not hear them, neither will he hear though one should rise from the dead.

Of the two "evils" thus singled out and deplored by the illustrious orator, one is real and the other imaginary. It is indeed an evil, a great and terrible evil, that the obligations of a high public morality should sit lightly on the consciences of our public men; although the blame must be laid ultimately on the people themselves, whose toleration of official malefeasance and whose own moral apathy constitute in fact the cause of the bad figure cut by the government of their choice. But that there should be a growing indifference and scepticism with reference to the Christian religion, so far from being an "evil," must rather be reckoned one of the chief signs of national progress. There is no degeneracy, or tendency towards it, in this characteristic of the age; there is no disposition to value truth the less in the disposition to place a less value on the churches. Far from it. The indifference and scepticism do not extend to anything good and true in the churches, for goodness and truth have at least as strong a hold on the human mind as ever they had; they extend only to that which is bad, false, and evidently perishing. No one has cause to fear that such elements of pure morality, such fragments of noble thought, such influences towards better lives and improving social conditions as are contained in Christianity and its institutions, will ever be cherished less sacredly by mankind than they have been in the past. But it is becoming the conviction of thousands of the best heads and hearts of the nation that these good things do not at all depend on Christianity as an instituted power in society, but will only be many times more influential when disconnected from the formalisms, the bigotries, the usurpations, that have marked the career of the Church from the beginning. Instead, therefore, of lamenting with Mr. Adams, we rejoice to see the signs of the time in this direction.

But, even admitting that Mr. Adams is wiser than we in considering the decay of reverence for Christianity an evil, we must still consider his conjectures as to the cause and the remedy of it to be erroneous. The "temptation of temporal power," to which he attributes the evil, was not so much a cause as an effect. It was the very nature of Christianity to aspire to power, temporal as well as spiritual. The claim of the Church to govern society as well as the soul followed irresistibly from the original gospel that "Jesus is the Christ,"—that is, the divinely ordained Ruler of the world. With such a claim, the unity and triumph of the Church could only have been secured by subjugating the entire race to the visible representatives of Jesus, the priests. To resist this claim was the prerogative of free humanity, and the struggles to break the yoke of the Church and to throw off the yoke of the gospel itself were the salvation of mankind from eternal slavery. They did not, and could not, stop with the Protestant Reformation, but continued against the same enslaving principle in Protestantism itself. The "Apostolic Empire" of Rome has always been imitated on a smaller scale by the clergy in all Protestant Christian countries; and what has emancipated man from the former has necessarily tended to emancipate him from the latter too. Witness the tyranny of the Scotch Kirk, so vividly painted by Buckle, and the tyranny of the Puritan theocracy from which New England itself is not yet wholly freed, and will not be till the "Demands of Liberalism" have all been granted. The "temptation of temporal power" lies in the very heart of Christianity, and the only way to conquer it is to abolish Christianity itself.

The battle for freedom, then, involves not only indifference and scepticism towards Christianity, but positive resistance also; and the provocative to this has been the growth of human intelligence. This is the real cause of the "evil" which Mr. Adams deplores. The worst enemy that Christianity has ever had, or can have, is its own inherent falsity—the falsity of the Christ-claim on which it is built. It is the increase of knowledge, the development of thought, the enlargement of liberty, which have been sapping the foundations of the Church, and making mankind "indifferent" and "sceptical." There is nothing accidental in the tendencies mourned over by Mr. Adams; for, when they created the political framework of this magnificent Republic, they organized a force which operates every year with increasing energy to destroy the Christian Church. The United States Constitution is the real Antichrist of this Western world. Its fundamental ideas of popular liberty and equal human rights are subversive of the very foundations of Christianity, and the would-be Christianizers of the Constitution are the shrewdest friends that the Church possesses to-day in this country. But they will fail, no matter how great a commotion they may first succeed in exciting. This we have never doubted. In the great contest between the Constitution and the Gospel, all the evolu-ing forces of history side with the former: "the stars in their courses fight against Sisera." Now that indifference and scepticism have been organized in the entire political fabric of the Republic, it is vain to lament their existence or growing power; they become daily more and more influential over the minds of the young, and constitute a vast social environment which is training each generation more thoroughly to be anti-Christians. The only way to prevent this is to destroy the Republic.

Against such a state of things, how puny and powerless appears the remedy which Mr. Adams proposes—the "impressive preacher"! It will take more than "oratory" and "sympathy" to counteract the combined political influences of the land. More "preacher"! Why, that is trying to cure the patient with a hair of the dog that bit him. All the preaching in the world can accomplish nothing, so long as freedom and equal rights—which are anti-Christianity—are organized in the United States Constitution. The system of government under which a people live is well known to exert a tremendous power over their character and destiny. Preaching has been tried, and failed. It is idle, perfectly idle, to imagine that the future can produce greater preachers than the past has done. If Christianity could not maintain itself against indifference and scepticism when it had the field all to itself, it is fatuity to suppose it can ever regain what it has already lost to science and political freedom. The die is cast, and the "impressive preacher" cannot change it. No: the sceptre is passing away from the Christian religion, and belongs henceforth to Truth, Justice, and Liberty.

What is, in fact, the profoundest need of the Republic? Let us state our own answer to the question which engages now the earnest thought of so many of our purest and most eminent citizens. It is a twofold need:—

1. MORE INTELLIGENCE; and, as the only means to this, MORE EDUCATION. Our common school system should be purified from the last vestiges of church-control, raised to the highest possible pitch of thoroughness and excellence, and defended as the very apple of the eye. Further, every child in the Republic should be required to receive as good an education as the common schools can furnish, either within their walls or at home—leaving all possible liberty as to mode to the parents. And, lastly, higher institutions of learning should be so organized and multiplied that every child may be enabled to acquire the utmost amount of education which his capacity and aspiration fit him to receive. The greatest, most dangerous, and most insidious foe of the Republic is ignorance; and all the resources, and all the energies, of the nation should be concentrated on the task of reducing it to its minimum.

2. MORE VIRTUE; and the means to this end is also MORE EDUCATION. Not school or college education mainly, though this, too, doubtless tends to produce a higher average moral condition of the community; but home education, and above all self-education. Parents and guardians need to be infinitely more heedful than the majority of them are with respect to the moral influences that surround their children, and mould their characters in their tenderest and most impressive years. So soon, moreover, as the young child begins to comprehend his own destiny as a self-governing being, he should be encouraged and aided to consecrate himself to high and noble aims,—not mere money-making or mere self-advancement in any shape, but the largest culture of his own faculties of all kinds, and the largest usefulness to his fellow-men. It takes a grand moral ideal to make a grand moral character; and it is partly communicated, partly self-formed. All the external safeguards in the world, all the devices of improved political methods, improved social surroundings, and improved public opinion will fail ignominiously to produce noble citizens, unless the flame of a generous enthusiasm for private excellence and public usefulness is kindled in the individual soul. Nothing can take the place of the high, fixed purpose to live by the laws of the loftiest integrity, honor, and self-devotion. Given this purpose, the result is sure; without it, all else fails absolutely and irremediably. But to create and foster it, the influences of a pure and happy home are imperatively necessary. Would that all the inhabitants of the land were deeply impressed with the consciousness that their own homes are the nurseries of the future Republic; and that they so ordered them as to rear a noble race for the coming years!

In brief, what the Republic needs above all else is the religion of universal consecration to Intelligence and Virtue; for the spirit which consecrates to such aims as these is religious in the highest sense. It leads to all else that is pure, sweet, beautiful, and true; and nothing can give a great and glorious future to the Republic we all love and cherish except this Free Religion.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I am always doubtful whether your readers feel at all interested in the little bits of ecclesiastical gossip which I send you from time to time; and I can only overcome my hesitation by remembering that it is only through myself that such scraps of information reach your columns.

A Rev. Flavell G. Cook has refused the Lord's Supper to a Mr. Jenkins, one of his parishioners, on the ground of heresy.

Poor Mr. Jenkins' heresy is of the very mildest type, as you will see when the charges brought against him are stated.

First and foremost, he has made a collection of passages from the Bible for the use of his children, from which he has carefully excluded those portions of the sacred volume which a very moderate degree of modesty would pronounce to be "indecent." It is strange, indeed, that the vicar did not single out Mr. Jenkins for special honor for this signal service to the Bible, instead of making it a ground for public disgrace.

Next, Mr. Jenkins, again wishing to rescue the Scriptures from obloquy, has written a little book, declaring that the dogma of endless torment is not the doctrine of Scripture. Last of all, Mr. Jenkins has filled up the measure of his iniquity by denying the personality of the Devil!

This was too much for the vicar's endurance; so he vents his righteous indignation against the offending layman by an interdict which entails upon a believer in Jesus no little pain, and upon a member of society very serious disgrace. Such an interdict is but seldom resorted to, and then only in the case of notorious evil livers,—generally of the "poly-bigamous" sort. Habitual drunkards are seldom excluded from the "Lord's Table." Mr. Jenkins feels the injustice as well as the severity of the stigma cast upon him, and flies for redress to the Court of Arches; where the vicar enumerates the details of the layman's heresies, and argues that no crime can be greater than to inculcate false doctrine.

Finding himself somewhat hard-pressed by Mr. Jenkins' counsel, he mercifully opens a door of escape by which the criminal may gain access once more to the blessed sacrament, and he himself be delivered from penalties that begin to look threatening.

He pleads thus: "Let Mr. Jenkins write me a note saying that he believes in the Devil, and I will admit him to the sacrament."

Risum teneatis. But is not this funny?

Verily, Theodore Parker was right in saying that the Devil was the fourth person of the Christian Trinity!

Mr. Jenkins believes in God already, and in Christ; probably also in the Holy Ghost; but he must be "of very little faith" if he does not believe also in the Devil.

One can imagine how the Rev. F. G. Cook's version of some of the texts would read, if he were profane enough to follow the layman's impious example, and compile a new Bible; e.g., we should have the Devil taking the place of Jesus of Nazareth, and saying to his disciple, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." "He that believeth in me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water," &c., &c.

The impety of these paraphrases is not mine, but the good vicar's; who has erected faith in the Devil into an essential article of Christian belief, without which no one can be saved, or receive the Lord's Supper.

I am sorry I cannot append to this little story the dénouement; for the Dean of Arches has not yet given judgment.

My first reflection upon it is that poor Mr. Jenkins richly deserves his fate, not for his awful infidelity about the Devil, but for caring a half-penny about the sacrament, and the social advantages derived from admission to it. If people choose to be so deluded, they must take all the other risks with it. If they are afraid of being interdicted and excommunicated, they must not complain of any freaks of despotic power the clergyman chooses to display. If they attach any value to these "ordinances" of the Church, they must pay the market-price for their enjoyment. Perhaps the season of abstinence enforced by the vicar upon his erring parishioner may lead to the discovery that the deprivation is very slight, indeed, and that the appetite for the Supper has vanished in the interval.

A friend of mine, a real heretic, after some passages of arms with his vicar, was told in solemn tones: "I deeply regret that I cannot allow you to come to the Holy Communion." My friend replied in as polite language as he could summon, "I am not likely to trouble you. Wait till you are asked."

The Church's undertakers are numerous; and they are busy driving in the nails of her coffin. The journeymen are scattered about the country, doing work on their own account, like this Mr. Cook; but the headquarters of this grim business is the Jerusalem Chamber, where Convocation sits day after day, bringing the poor old Church into deeper and deeper decay and decrepitude, and so scandalizing the hearts and minds of sensible men, that Dean Stanley could endure it no longer, but rose, and saying a few words of honest indignation, left the Assembly in disgust.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., July 3, 1875.

Communications.

WHAT'S IN THE AIR?

Only a decade since it seemed ludicrous to think that our free schools, and consequently our civilization, were in peril from the demands of ROME. A man who broached the idea was thought to be dyspeptic, and frightened by the nightmare. What could a mitred, gilded, make-believe monarch, without a realm, strutting, and vociferating big words to keep up the childish illusion of monarchy, do to affect the established institutions of a great progressive people like ours! And have not his worshippers in this country—a small minority—a like interest with ourselves, in education and the blessings of a free government, and do they not soon become assimilated to the genius of our institutions? A fig for the danger!

Now political and religious conventions find it necessary to put into the declaration of their principles that ROME must not be permitted to destroy our free schools! There is alarm to-day. We have waited till the "little cloud" swells menacingly on the horizon, before seeing its significance; and we do not and will not see half that meaning yet. The deluded Roman is making his kingly sway fearfully real. He writes on our ballots and our statute books. We invite his subject to come in; we invest him with the sacred badge of a sovereign American citizen, while he worships not at the shrine of Liberty, but bows obsequiously to the will of a foreign despot, and gives him his first and highest allegiance. A foreign despot has a government within our government; and, though his subjects are in the minority, they often hold the balance of power. Here lies the secret of our danger: it is the moral weakness and the cupidity of many aspirants for office. Roman emissaries whisper in their ears: "If you will vote for our measures, our subjects shall vote for you." Thus Rome secures money for her sectarian institutions, and enacts her designs into law; and people wonder that a few years since, New York gave Rome's sect and schools nearly a million dollars, and only about one-tenth of that sum to all other sects. Rome coins hearts' blood, and uses it to obstruct the vital circulation—the free course of knowledge, which she dreads; and our weak-kneed politicians—the ones who love pelf and power more than light and liberty—are the instruments with which she enlarges her kingdom even in the very vitals of our government.

I select the point of our greatest danger first, that all may clearly see it and fortify it by putting in office true men—men who love knowledge and appreciate liberty,—who are above treason and corruption.

When a man sells himself in private, do you not know he will in public? If he is unjust to his neighbor, will he be less so with greater opportunity? Romish cardinals and priests have studied these natures, and know their weak places; should you know less of them? When a man advertises his baseness in a fraudulent contract, a theft called embezzlement, a Credit Mobiller, or State-and-Church scheme, can you not supplement that with—"Moral idiocy; self-preference: utterly unsafe"? Treason of politicians to the American idea of civilization is the first reason why our people are called to arouse themselves against the encroachments of a wily foreign despot.

The second reason for this new uprising is in the fact that our own civilization began with and still holds enough of the foreign Roman element to create a general sympathy among us with a certain phase of the Roman demand that our common schools be abolished. Now don't fire up nor faint, good patriotic friend. For has not the average Protestant as great a horror of "Godless schools" as the most servile Papist? Does not the Protestant solemnly warn you of the undermining of our liberties and of moral chaos, unless the schoolteacher drones over a few verses of the Bible, "without note or comment," while unruly boys are pinching each other, and with "hems and haws" and solemn faces practising the first lessons which go to make up a Tammany or other ring "boss"? Why this, if theology can be dispensed with in schools? Or is our common school the most important place for such teaching? Is that an essential part of its work? Then Rome is as right as you are; only Rome insists on her "Regulars" doing this, while you take a militia man. But if our common schools are to teach the sciences, foster intelligence and morality, strengthen personal judgment, and prepare children for free, progressive, earnest life; and if, further, theology and religious dogmas can be taught at home, in church and Sunday-schools, then correct this error by which Rome captures our public sentiment in order to destroy civilization. Fortify this weak place, and teach religious dogmas in their appropriate places, and let our free schools be devoted to other work.

How can we expect to maintain free schools and freedom, if we keep hot the fires in which Rome forges her weapons to destroy them? How can we go on without peril, if we prepare standing room for the enemy and invite him to it? How maintain ourselves, if we leave the weak places in our fortress unprotected, for the foe's approach?

Our own falsehood, that our common schools must be schools for particular religious training, is the door wide open for the same falsehood of Rome to enter in. Our disregard of strict integrity and inviolable morality in our law-makers and executors—these are the two causes of the condition of things, which call for resolutions of important conventions, for earnest resistance to a foreign power that has set up a despotic government on the soil of our government, and holds its subjects to an allegiance prior and superior to their allegiance as American citizens. These are the two occasions for the formation of a public sentiment which shall be as impervious to the power that declares our free common schools "are of the devil and to the devil shall go," as are the rocks of our everlasting hills to the curses and bulls of the pope of Rome.

I do not forget that there are, in the Church of Rome, many pure, sweet, loyal souls, who are clearer of the Romish spirit than are many of other sects. I cherish regard for them as of the apple of my eye; but the pope demands, and most of his subjects yield submission to his will, an active untiring effort to accomplish his designs; he has even sent his cardinal, an entirely foreign "institution," to set up a mimic court, and enforce his commands.

Rome has openly declared that our common schools, the nurseries of intelligence, are a nuisance which cannot and shall not be tolerated. Yet Rome is powerless to hurt them except through our own stupidity or treachery. It is a good sign to see the conventions "resolving." Let our enemies provoke us to good works and vigilance, if we have not enough of the love of right to stimulate us. Thank God for anything that wakes us up and sets the blood to circulating, "for a living dog is better than a dead lion."

O. K. C.]

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

PROPAGANDISM.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In reply to the interrogatory of H. Clay Neville in a late number of THE INDEX: "Shall we speak our honest opinions?" I would say emphatically, YES.

Although not a "veteran," I may be permitted to indicate the plan of operations which I have found successful in advancing the cause of free thought here. Not to be disagreeably aggressive, yet ready to speak out for mental freedom on all occasions; not to care so much what I say as how it is said; never to be silent from policy at the sacrifice of principle,—these are a few of the cardinal points upon which I act in daily contact with my fellows. Open discussions, and even public debates, of the living issues and radical problems of the day are indulged in by me on all opportune occasions. Keep cool yourself (I would say), while belaboring your antagonist with logical blows that demolish his position and destroy his argument. By a course of mildness much may be done; you avoid social frowns and the enmity begotten by a pugnacious aggressiveness. Let consistency and honesty go hand in hand. I doubt if an honest infidel is ever at a discount in the public mind, when character is estimated at its par value.

Perhaps no community in the United States enjoys such a profound degree of Orthodox (mental) stagnation as Cumberland Valley, settled and churched by the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians over a century ago; and yet here, where I do not conceal my views, or keep "mum," I am permitted to worship undisturbed "under my own vine and fig-tree," having suffered neither from loss of reputation, professional sacrifice, or social ostracism. Now and then I'm "pointed out"; but, after all, somehow I like the honor.

Ten years ago, our church-members didn't dance. Now they dance, go to camp-meetings on the "Holy Sabbath," and to the circus on week-days. Even our staid Presbyterians are doing all these naughty things. Then, too, the social picnic, of such frequent occurrence, has introduced new ways among our steady agricultural people, by which they are sometimes brought together by thousands, thus making them more cosmopolitan,—more liberal in sentiment, and more tolerant of those whose mode of thought is foreign to their own.

Next I would speak of the circulation of free-thought literature, in which I have unbounded faith. Just recently it has (as often before) come to my notice that an INDEX, sent out on missionary work, is like "bread cast upon the waters," which finally brings in a return of one or more subscribers from sources least expected. There are many who hunger and thirst for the truth as it is in—THE INDEX, both among church-members and "aliens," who need but have a copy presented to them, when they straightway repent and—subscribe. In this way I like to utilize "total depravity." Our young men are seeking for something broader than creeds, something better than "our church," something more saving than "our faith." The dicta of the pulpit are not so much accepted in blind, unreasoning faith as formerly by our fathers. The people begin to think for themselves, and there is no difficulty finding readers for THE INDEX and free-thought tracts. The American Tract Society sends out millions of pages annually. Why do not we? True, they have the means, and we have not, owing to the paucity of our numbers. Are we in earnest? Are we doing what we can? We do not pay thousand-dollar pew-rents for the "free gospel"; we do not pay for certificates of honorable membership of the Foreign Missionary Society; and yet it is doubtful if we, in proportion to our ability, contribute one-half as much to our own cause for the world's enlightenment as do the Christians. Free-thought tracts and papers will find a score of eager readers to one of the American Tract Society. Try them. When its course is traced up, it is often a matter of surprise how a little heretical pamphlet will pass around in the community from one to the other. What we need is more of the missionary system, and the spirit of giving which the Church has reduced to a science. Colportage ought to be encouraged. Who will be first to start out selling "Tom Paine" to Christians? We have as good right to make converts as any.

In conclusion, a word on organization. As yet our numbers here in Cumberland Valley are too few and scattered to crystallize into a League, which must certainly be the most efficient mode of active propagandism. Much has been done here within a couple of years. Our cause looks bright. THE INDEX is doing a splendid work, and we are working quietly, chiefly by the circulation of tracts and papers; hoping that the day is not far distant when we shall, for every league of our valley, have a well-organized, working Liberal League.

S. M. WHISTLER, M.D.

NEW KINGSTON, Pa., July 2, 1875.

[What could not be accomplished in the cause of truth and natural manhood with a thousand such spirits as the above article reveals? Positive earnestness, enthusiasm for freedom, and willingness to work together, are what this cause sorely needs to-day.—ED.]

NOT RELIGION AT ALL EVENTS, BUT ONLY RELIGION IN SOME EVENTS.

HIGHWOOD, LAKE CO., Ill., July 5, 1875.

The writer of "Religion at all Events," in THE INDEX of June 24, makes the same mistake as the writers of "Christianity Notwithstanding," and "Buddhism Notwithstanding,"—the almost universal mistake which is made in the popular definitions of all religions by their respective devotees; the mistake of defining religions by those extraneous universal elements of scientific philosophy and morality, which are really no part of the religions themselves, but which are always more or less clearly and perfectly taught in connection with every system of religion.

We do not distinguish an animal from a plant by calling it "an organic being," because the characteristic which we thus assume as a definition of the animal belongs equally to the animal and the plant, and cannot therefore serve as any distinction between the two. On the contrary, we distinguish an animal from a plant by some characteristic which is possessed by the animal, but which is not possessed by the plant. For example, among other peculiar characteristics, we popularly but inaccurately distinguish animals from plants by their peculiar and distinctive powers of locomotion.

In like manner we must distinguish the different systems of religion from each other, and religion itself from any and every other thing in Nature by its differences from other things in Nature, and not by its similarities to other things in Nature. Now to apply this principle to the subject in hand: if there are elements of truth and goodness taught and inculcated in connection with all systems of religion, it cannot be said that these elements of truth and goodness constitute the characteristics by which the systems are to be defined and judged. On the contrary, those elements wherein they differ and are antagonistic to each other are the true characteristics by which they are to be defined and judged.

If the above incontrovertible principle is admitted, it clearly follows that, however much of truth and goodness may be taught and inculcated in connection with any system of religion, such elements of truth and goodness are no part of the respective religions in connection with which they are taught and inculcated; but, on the contrary, however essentially important such elements may be in and of themselves, they are nothing more than mere adjuncts to the respective religions in connection with which they are taught and inculcated. In reality, all those elements of truth and goodness which are taught and inculcated in connection with all systems of religion, instead of being elements of the respective religions in connection with which they are taught and inculcated, are universal elements of scientific philosophy and morality.

If the above reasoning is admitted, it clearly follows that all religions, defined as they must be by their distinctive and antagonistic elements, are simply systems of superstitious belief and practice, and as such are to be removed from the world by higher education. It does not follow from the above reasoning that there are not essentially important truths concealed and buried under religious superstitions; but the point to be considered is that the naked superstitions themselves constitute the essence of the religions, if we apply fair and rational and logical definitions to the subject, while the essential truth lying buried underneath the superstitions, which is no part of the religions themselves, is simply the universal element of sound, scientific philosophy. All religious superstition, notwithstanding the terrible atrocities and outrages against the rights and interests of man to which it always leads, is always underlaid with philosophical truth, which is absolutely essential to further intellectual development. Superstition is a necessary stage of intellectual development. But it does follow from the preceding reasoning that, if we call things by their right names, everything that can fairly and logically, and in strict accordance with the canons of a strictly scientific procedure, be called religion, will be banished from the world, if the world shall ever be able to rise above its religious superstitions, and attain to the position of purely scientific philosophy and morality. We claim that this is possible at some time in the future, and is certainly the true ideal.

In support of this position, we claim that there are untold multitudes of individuals who have already attained to this position, not only in the present age, but also in all the historical ages of the past.

If these things are so, they unqualifiedly prove that religion, in all its forms, is only one of the passing phases in the intellectual progress of mankind,—one of the necessary evils connected with human progress, having a necessary basis of essential truth, which must be developed; but, as an organized institution, or system of organized institutions, productive of vast and incalculable evils, when wrested (as it is now, and always has been) to the unhallowed uses of personal ambition and partisan and sectarian power.

If we are correct in the foregoing assumptions and reasonings, then we are authorized to say, not "Religion at all Events," and for all people, but only religion for all those who are not intellectually able to rise to the regions of purely scientific philosophy and morality. HENRY H. EVERTS.

PROTESTANTISM FALSE IN SPIRIT.

Our life by its very nature and constitution is one of peace and warfare; and it may have these two distinctive elements coupled in the same act. The mind may be in perfect harmony and peace with itself, and yet at war with the world outside of it. While the individual may be at peace with himself, yet he is, by every consideration, bound to wage war against error in the world around him; but he must do this in a fraternal spirit, with a peaceable disposition. Testing our modern Protestantism by its profession of peace, we advance the proposition that, practically, Protestantism is false to its profession in that it does not exhibit this peaceable disposition.

In proof of our proposition we direct the reader's attention to the prevailing spirit of this system of religion as manifested towards all who differ from it—especially towards the Roman Catholic Church. In the natural constitution of affairs it is impossible to have a pure system of religion, and it is reasonable to suppose that there never will be a church without corruption. Every thoughtful mind will recognize, in our day, a development of religious thinking which makes us believe, beyond power of contradiction, that the true Church is not the Roman Catholic, nor yet is it the Protestant. "By their fruits ye shall know them," by its fruits we charge a large portion of Protestantism as wanting a Christ-like spirit, and we point to its bitter enmity against Roman Catholicism as a proof of our assertion. The true test of any system of religion is the principle ruling that system; if this be correct, the system will be true, and, if the system be true, then must its principle be true also. Protestantism professes to have Christ as its principle; if, therefore, the spirit of Christ pervades it, it is a true system; but if the spirit of Christ does not pervade it, then we must pronounce it false as a system of religion. The grand end and mission of Christ in the world was one of peace; everywhere he teaches doctrines of love and peace; his lips never cursed or defamed; he sent no one to hell merely because he differed from him as a man. But how is it with this Protestantism which professes to exhibit his doctrine in its history and life? Its denominational differences, its sectarian prejudices, and its bigotry,—are these an evidence of peace within its own borders? Members of the same church indulge in calumny and slander. Ministers of the gospel, rather than teach their people a true morality, will inflame their passions against Liberalism and Romanism. Is this loving your enemies? The contradictions and dissensions of Protestantism are its curse. Here we have High Church and Low Church, Ritualism and Puritanism, each maintaining its own claims in a way more devil-like than God-like. Because a man differs with me in his opinion, have I a right to treat him unkindly? Because a man is a Romanist, does that give me a right to say he is forever lost? No, God forbid! And yet this is precisely the principle upon which too many Protestants act.

"But," it may be said, "observe how we are treated by the Romanists; see the heretical curse, the horrid Inquisition and priestly tyranny." Suppose all this to be true; yet are we not told: "Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you"? Judged by this standard, where is our boasted Protestantism to-day? No one has a right to persecute us for our religious belief; neither, on the other hand, have we a right if persecuted, to return the injury; we must return good for evil kindness for injuries.

That there is at the present time an immense struggle going on in the Church must be evident to every right-thinking mind; and we must acknowledge it to be a legitimate struggle brought about by the force of historical development. Many persons can see nothing but wrong in Romanism; they look upon it as something born of hell. Rather than meet it in open, manly argument, they will heap upon it the vilest abuse, and the most unchristian slang, even. Don't let us contradict the spirit of our own free land and her liberal institutions by denying the right of conscientious worship to any man of any belief.

There is, perhaps, no greater obstacle to the progress of truth than Protestantism itself. A Puritan fanaticism has insinuated itself into our very life, which utterly condemns anything and everything that does not agree with it. Need we wonder that the Church does not prosper more? Think you that the world does not see her contradictions and hypocrisies? The road to heaven is made too narrow, and the fires of hell are made to burn too hotly; there is too much blood about Christianity, and not enough love. The noble principles of Christ's life are not generally exemplified in the conduct of those who call themselves Christians.

O. L. ASHENFELTER.

CARLISLE, Pa.

THE CENTRAL IDEA OF THE GOSPEL.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Allow a constant reader of THE INDEX (and withal not an uninterested reader, though not at all of its faith, way, or mode of thinking) to express his thought.

1. It is a fact that the Bible exists.
2. It is a fact that, for the most part, it exists as the accredited archives of a nation. It is the records, papers, etc., preserved as evidence of facts.
3. It is a fact that in this Bible there is a SYSTEM OF IDEAS designated and known as the Evangelion, or Gospel.
4. It is a fact that that system, as a whole, is comprehensive of two great classes of truths:—
(a) The things concerning the kingdom of God.
(b) The things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. Acts i, 3, 8; xii, 19; viii, 20; xxv, 28; xxiii, 30, 31, et al.
5. It is a fact that the central idea of that system, its fundamental concept, is the Messiah. This is its root-idea or ground-truth. So much cannot be denied.

But now the question arises, Is this system the same which has enthroned itself in Bible lands as Christianity, and against which you are levelling your terrible batteries? I say it is not. You say it is. And, hence, to demolish Christianity, so-called, you think (and honestly too from your standpoint) that you must demolish the Bible as well. But this is entirely superfluous, not to say impossible; and the attempt can be justified only upon the assumption that Christianity, so-called, and the Bible are inseparable,—that their relation is that of cause and effect. But this is not true. Modern Christianity, or churchism, is one thing, and the Bible is another and a very different thing. The one is responsible for the other on precisely the same principle that a genuine fifty-dollar greenback is responsible for a spurious fifty-dollar greenback. The Bible is true, and the gospel it contains is the pure, genuine gospel; and the time is sure to come when the one will be most triumphantly vindicated, and the other fully realized.

You can overthrow Christianity, so-called, but you cannot overthrow the Bible. The kingdom of God as therein revealed must and will be restored and permanently established. The divine purpose to establish a theocracy on the earth, immediately over the Jews redeemed from the hand of all that hate them, and restored again to their native land, and through them over the nations of the earth aggregated into one vast empire, and made tributary to the divine dominion—the whole placed under a most righteous system of divine government, and ruled over by that Man whom God has appointed, and given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead—must and will be executed. This done, all mankind will know that Jehovah lives, and the Bible is true. He is commensurate to the execution of his own purpose, all the world in solid combination to the contrary notwithstanding.

In your effort to demolish Christianity—and I may add in your success, for I believe it must and will go down—you will undoubtedly overthrow the faith of many in the Bible. But it will be the faith only of those who think with you that modern Christianity is one and the same with the Bible; which it is not. Modern Christianity or Catholicism in its three great branches—Anglicism, Romanism, and Grecism—was born of the mediæval period. It had many and diverse origins. It is the confluence of many streams, and represents the divine original in nothing but name and nomenclature. It is many centuries younger than the gospel. The central idea of this latter system is "the Holy Catholic Church." In the Roman branch it is "the Pope." But this is only another mode of expression for "the Church." Churchism and Messianism are not the same. The necessary logical development of the one is just what we see. The necessary logical development of the other is just what we don't see, and just what the world has never seen, and never can see, until Jesus Christ, the Man-God, returns. He is absent for the time, but will certainly come again. This with me is a matter of unflinching faith. It is my only hope. The world needs, and must have, a Man-God, one who is omniscient, omnipotent, and benevolent,—one to whom men can come, before whom they can bow, and at whose altar they can legitimately worship. Such a Man has been provided. He was born A. M. 4089. He was dead, but he is alive forevermore. He has been accredited, and ere long all mankind will bow before him, and own him the Lord Jehovah. Churchism roots itself in the great apostasy. Indeed it is the apostasy gone to seed. Messianism roots itself in the truth,—in the eternal fitness of things; and is as yet only in its incipency. The time hastens apace, when what is to-day the tiny rootlet shall become "a great and mighty tree, whose height shall reach to heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of the earth. Its leaves shall be fair, and the fruit thereof much, and meat for all." This tree you cannot destroy. No watchman will ever descend and say, "Hew down the tree, cut off its branches, shake off its leaves, and scatter its fruit." For it is eternal, ordered, and sure. Then save yourself the trouble; for all your blows so deftly levelled at the Bible will only rebound, it may be, to strike yourself with redoubled force. The Bible is true, and its gospel certain.

MACON, Mo.

LABOR VERSUS CAPITAL.

Perhaps this is too deep a subject for woman to meddle with; I dare say it is. But as there is no sex in thought, I have a thought which, at the risk of being laughed down, I will venture to give.

The inept error in our system of labor and capital is the unjust imperialism of capital over labor. Capital is as inept and powerless without labor as labor without capital. United they are a mighty power; either alone is powerless. They are the two factors of a mighty product; and, if there is a difference in value in favor of either, it certainly is in favor of labor as the primal producer. When rightly adjusted, there is no antagonism between these two factors, but harmonious action toward the accomplishment of the same purpose, the increase of the product which shall be to the impartial advantage of each. How shall this be accomplished? By the advancement of labor to a like interest with capital, and the elevation of labor to the dignity of capital. That labor is capital, I think, after a moment's reflection, no one can deny. The labor of the laborer is his investment in the business, as much as the capital of the capitalist; not his wages which he might be compelled to draw out for support (which is but a slight equivalent for his labor), but the unnamed and unclaimed advantage which is the product of a combination of his skill with the capital of the capitalist. There is not even a show of justice in all this advantage or disadvantage being turned over to the side of capital. Canvas, oils, and brushes do not make an artist; nor does capital insure success in business; but the skill and management of its working men.

Every laborer should be recognized as a responsible party in the business; should be entitled to a voice in its management commensurate with his interest, and entitled to a share of its dividends. This system would effectually destroy the imperialism of capital over labor, tend toward an equalization between them, put an end to rash speculation, check lavish expenditure, give character and permanency to our business institutions, and also to our laboring class, now a roving people little better than Arabs. In the place of the continually shifting panorama of palace and hovel, we shall have permanent thrifty homes of independent and interdependent capitalists and laborers, and a solid rock as a financial basis, instead of dangerous quicksands. This I know is in part practically conceded on some estates in England, where the laborer is allowed a share in the gains; but nowhere, so far as I know, is the principle acknowledged.

S. E. W.

CAWASERAGA, N. Y., June 23, 1875.

THE ETHICS OF EXCHANGE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Your correspondent Austin Kent, whom I have known as an author for years, is a very keen critic—a little too keen, perhaps, as I shall attempt to show.

No one, to my knowledge, ever urged "labor cost as the proper limit of price." There are other costs, beside labor cost, which enter into the production of every thing; and hence our formula is—"Cost the limit of price": quite a different thing, as should have been perceived by a man of Mr. Kent's acumen. The above formula is only a maxim like the one called the "Golden Rule," and it does not attempt to determine arbitrarily how Mr. Kent and his neighbor shall exchange carrots or any other products; they two must settle that for themselves. It is quite possible that, though Mr. Kent's neighbor may have been unsuccessful in raising carrots, he might have been quite successful in raising cranberries; and that Mr. Kent could have exchanged with him carrots for cranberries, measuring the exchange by time employed, the only perfect measure of labor or service. For want of space, the only thing that can be said here is that, if raising cranberries is, on the average, attended with more risk, is more unhealthy, disagreeable, dangerous, etc., than raising carrots, these elements will enter into the price in the exchange; and not time alone, though time is nearly always the principal element in production.

The effect of the "cost principle" would be to weed out such carrot-raisers as Mr. Kent describes his neighbor to be, and to compel him to adopt a calling wherein he would be an average producer; such as cranberry raising for instance. In other words, to use a popular phrase, it would put "the right man in the right place." Is there any objection to that?

In conclusion, please allow me to place side by side the only two maxims concerning price that are before the world, leaving all readers to select for themselves, according to their degree of moral development, which they will accept for their guidance:—

"Cost the limit of price."

"A thing is worth what it will bring."

E. D. LINTON.

CHARLESTOWN, Mass.

NO SPIRITUAL VACUUM.

A great deal is said about the wrongfulness of undermining the faith of Christians without furnishing them at the same time a satisfactory substitute. The error of these critics consists in their virtual assumption that a spiritual vacuum is any more natural than a physical vacuum. No man ever surrenders an opinion or belief until he sees something else more valuable and attractive. The very fact that he has discovered a dark corner in his soul shows that light has been admitted therein. The faith of him who really believes God is "without variableness or shadow of turning" is vastly more permanent and abiding than his who believes that God will "answer prayer;" yet the renunciation of the latter faith must always be simultaneous with the acceptance of the former. The unspeakable and worse than heathenish absurdity of the stories of miracles can never be eliminated from a Christian's theology, except on the condition of his receiving at the same time a more elevated and rational conception of Deity. Also, as of miracles, the same may be said of those other abominations—supernaturalism in its every repulsive phase, revelation, inspiration, with the whole brood of monsters that have come forth from the prolific womb of superstition, and whose sire is priestcraft.

There is no such thing as unlearning anything without learning something else, and it is impossible for us to destroy our neighbor's religious faith without his accepting something in its place. Truth asks no favors for its own reputation. It will take care of itself. It can never fail under any conceivable or inconceivable circumstances to justify its acceptance. It is not a child that must be toddled, nor a sick man that must be humored. It is God's way forever and ever. So do not let us refrain from unsettling anyone's faith for fear we can offer nothing in its place. Should any one even convince an aged father or mother, who may fold their spectacles perhaps for the last time to-night across the old family Bible, of the error of their religious creed, he need not fear but their faith was supplanted by a higher and better one. Let us remember that light advances just as fast as darkness recedes. A blow at error is always in order. Nothing can justify the withholding of it.

Z.

THE BISHOP'S PLATFORM.

UNION, Maine, July 4, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I should like more information relating to Bishop Ferrette's religious liberty platform. If I understand you aright, you think the State has as good a right to incorporate a religious society, as it has to incorporate a life insurance company. Bishop Ferrette, on the contrary, thinks the State is dealing or interfering with religion, when it incorporates a religious society. Now, the Constitution says: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion."

The question to be settled is, Does the State by incorporating a religious society recognize or interfere with religion?

Please give more light on the subject.

Yours truly,

CHAS. A. MILLER.

[We do not think that the State should incorporate a church by special act; but we do not see how it can without persecution prevent the people from incorporating themselves in a religious society under general statutes. But we are open to argument on this subject.—ED.]

MR. CONWAY informs us that a London archæologist devoted a week to the lovely fields of the North, hunting flint arrows. He was overjoyed with his success; implements from the Stone Age were found on every side until he had a large bag full of them. He employed a simple-hearted native to bring this bag of precious relics to a village a few miles off, and himself went on before. In the afternoon the rustic started to follow his employer with the bag; but, the burden being heavy and the day hot, he presently began to wonder what interest the gentleman could have in a bag of stones. This doubt was succeeded by a chain of reasoning, at the end of which stood the conclusion that one stone was as good as another, and there seemed hardly any use in carrying any one particular lot of them three miles on a hot day. Thereupon the bag was emptied of its contents, and borne lightly enough. Of course it was easy enough to fill it again from the roadside just before delivery. The rustic goes home happy with his good wages, albeit still wondering what the gentleman meant to do with "them stones;" the archæologist speeds to London, where he speedily convokes his scientific friends to view his treasures. The scene when the bag reveals its plain turnpike stones must be left to the imagination. At last accounts the archæologist was trying to add the sagacious rustic to his collection of Stone Age specimens.—Christian Union.

SOCRATES' PRAYER.—O God, grant me to become beautiful in the inner man, and that whatever outward things I have may be at peace with those within. May I deem the wise man rich, and may I have such a portion of gold as none but a prudent man can either bear or employ.

Do we need anything else, Phædus? For myself I have prayed enough.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also, worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Social Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship. Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	1.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Positive Aesthetics.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from the Life of Aristotle down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEVIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1844.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence. The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLIV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Frigid Zone.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.80
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 4 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Room Faints. English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Diderot, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10¹/₂ A.M., 2¹/₂ and 7¹/₂ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion. Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOK

Card,

—AND—

Job
PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPEY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 8 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. all money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

SPIRITUALISTS' AND LIBER-ALISTS'

SECOND ANNUAL

Camp-Meeting and Picnic,

AT LAKE PLEASANT, MONTAGUE, MASS.,
August 4 to August 30, 1875.

TENTS will be ready on the 4th. Prices, $10 for four weeks, $8 for three weeks. Advance payments.

PUBLIC EXERCISES begin on Sunday, the 8th. Address each week-day, at 11.30 P.M. Conference, Mondays. Two addresses Sundays, and a Sacred Concert of Music by the band.

PICNIC DAYS will be Thursdays. DANCING afternoons and evenings (Sundays excepted). Music by Russell's Orchestra.

MUSIC.—The Fitchburg Band and Russell's Orchestra of 20 pieces will arrive on the 12th, and will remain till August 30th. A choir of singers will give vocal music assisted by J. Frank Baxter, of Plymouth.

RAILROAD FARES.—Call for Lake Pleasant Camp-meeting tickets, to which are attached free return tickets.

EXCURSION TRAINS will run on Sundays, 15th, 22d, 29th, from Springfield, Hoosac Tunnel, and Fitchburg. Special train from Boston on the 15th.

BOARDING.—Mr. Dunklee, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Austin, of Springfield, will furnish table-board for $6.00 per week.

MUSIC BOOKS

For the Seaside, the Mountains,
For Hours of Leisure at Home or Abroad.

The following collections contain the best and most popular of all published Songs, Vocal or Instrumental Duets, Rondos, Waltzes, Polkas, Quadrilles, etc., and furnish unflinching entertainment to all lovers of Music.

Musical Treasure. Vocal and Ins'l.
Moore's Irish Melodies. Vocal.
Gems of Scottish Song. " "
Gems of German Song. " "
Wreath of Gems. " "
Shower of Pearls. Vocal Duets.
Operatic Pearls. Vocal.
Silver Chord. " "
Piano at Home. Four hand pieces.
Gems of Strauss. Instrumental.
Organ at Home. Reed Organ Pieces.
Home Circle. Vols I. and II. Ins'l.
Pianoforte Gems. " "
Pianists' Album. " "

Large, Handsome Books, which are for sale by all prominent dealers.
Price of each book: Boards, $2.50; Cloth, $3.00; Full Gilt, $4.00.
Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1875.

WHOLE No. 292.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———. Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at a regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

THE NEWEST THING in coffins is Mr. Seymour Haden's wicker casket, which the Duke of Sutherland recently gave a special entertainment to advertise and recommend.

It is said that there were "fifty thousand people in Central Park on Sunday." What a blessed exchange for the cheerless homes which were abandoned that day by the poor creatures who must get their summer rest in Central Park, or nowhere!

IN BELGIUM the Catholics and Liberals have almost come to blows, in consequence of the former having made their processions more splendid than usual. The peasantry and middle class are grossly superstitious and under the control of the priests to an extraordinary degree.

NOT LONG since our genial neighbor, the editor of the Christian Register, inadvertently dropped this utterance, meant to be jocose: "We are usually kept muzzled while on duty at the office." Whereupon a wicked friend whispers to us: "This is the most candid and honest editorial confession we have noticed this summer!"

SAN FRANCISCO must be a frightfully heathenish town. Its population is set down at 275,000; but of this number only some 32,000 are regular worshippers, while 180,000 never go to church at all. What are Moody and Sankey about, to cross the Atlantic for sinners to convert, when there is such a snakes'-nest of them at home?

HERE ARE some of the beauties of the sectarian squabble: "A few days before a man was hanged at Atlanta, Ga., a Catholic priest, two Baptist ministers, and a Methodist, called on him at the same time. They commenced discussing religion, and who had the surest means of saving him, and they became so noisy and violent toward each other, that the jailer had to interfere and order them all out of jail, and the wretch had to get along without any preacher."

M. BUGUET, the French spirit-photographer, was found out by a man who, "hearing of the success of M. Buguet, paid him a visit, obtained a photograph of himself and his wife, who he said was dead, but who was really alive, and carried it afterwards to the Prefecture of Police." On his trial for swindling, M. Buguet confessed his imposture; but one witness, to whom the judge explained that the whole process had been exposed, persisted in believing that the photograph was genuine. Poor Humanity!

QUITE a tempest in a teapot has been excited over Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services at Eton. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen thought it worth while to protest against them, and to stir up seventy-one members of Parliament to join in the protest. Dr. Hornby, the head-master, put the revivalists on a level with horse-racers, and let the boys do as they pleased about going to the show. About one hundred and fifty of the boys chose to go, and at last accounts were doing as well as could be expected.

MR. WILLIAM H. POOLE, the well-known librarian, has very severely reviewed Bancroft's History of the United States, the tenth and last volume of which has lately been issued. Mr. Poole finds Bancroft prolix, turgid, superficial, inaccurate, and radically unjust, especially to all the Revolutionary generals except Washington, to whom he sacrifices everybody. All this is a pointed hint not to write histories which it takes ten volumes and forty years to complete,—a hint that we mean very dutifully to obey.

SAYS the New Orleans Republican of July 11: "In the public schools of New Orleans, when first established, the Bible was read without note or comment every day at the opening of each school. In deference to the clamorous prejudices of our Catholic population, the custom was afterward abolished, and with the exception of an attempt to obtain from one of our numerous State conventions since the war a separate share of the school-fund, which met the failure it deserved, the Catholics of this city have left the public schools unmolested, and satisfied themselves with inducing as many children as possible to attend their own schools. And thus it will be all over the country. The Bible may be banished from the schools, and its reading remitted to the proper place—the church and the fireside,—but the school-fund will not be distributed among the various sects, and the school-system will not be destroyed."

A WRITER in the Liberal Worker of July 14 speaks of so-and-so as "the acknowledged leader" of the free religious movement. It has no leader, on the contrary, and will perish the instant it acquires one. When this writer says, "To be a Christian, as I understand it, is to be a disciple of the man Jesus," he stumbles on the precise difference between Christianity and Free Religion,—the former following a man, and the latter following ideas. How hard it is to make a man-follower comprehend those who follow no man! The difficulty is like that of the Chinaman disputing in the story with the Englishman over the relative superiority of Eastern and Western civilization. Advantage on one side being straight-way offset by advantage on the other, the dispute was at last brought to an end by the Englishman's exclaiming, "Well, our civilization must be the higher, because we can comprehend yours, while you cannot comprehend ours." In like manner the free thinker can comprehend the Christian, but the Christian cannot comprehend the free thinker.

THE Christian Union of July 14 thinks that the "Free Religious company" is in danger of dissolution because "men whose belief in God and immortality is profound, and those whose attitude toward these themes is one of cool indifference,—those to whom Christianity is vitally true, and those to whom it is dangerous error,—will hardly, we should suppose, care to remain long in the same ranks and under the same flag." Well, so long as the world is puzzled to understand how the love of truth in the spirit of liberty can make men close friends and fellow-workers, so long ought the Free Religious Association to stick together. We, at least, see no "tendency to disintegration" in it; and indeed less than ever before can we believe that any exists. In the case of some of the prophets who so eagerly predict disunion in the Association, the "wish is father to the thought," though we can hardly think that of the Christian Union; and we prefer to attribute its croakings to an honest bewilderment which is a fresh proof that the Free Religious Association has still a useful mission to fulfil.

AN ESTEEMED correspondent tells this good story in a recent letter: "A beautiful instance of Christian 'other-worldliness' came the other day under my notice. An excellent and devoted Christian, one whose sermons are long, loving and earnest, and no doubt sincere, but whose business dealings, as some think, are a little crooked at times, told me in all simplicity this story of himself. Attracted by his sober garb and mien, a stranger had seated himself by my friend in the cars, though other seats were vacant, and had entered into conversation concerning a rival sect whose 'laxity' was masked by the 'most straitest' of outward appearances. 'Are they lax in their daily lives or in their views?' I asked. 'In their theology,' said my friend with emphasis. At parting with the stranger, my friend had asked, 'Why did you choose your seat by my side?' 'Because a companion, impressed with your Christian demeanor, had said to me, 'The bark is all right—I wonder if the wood is sound.' There was something very delicious in my good friend's evident certainty that, being Orthodox, his 'wood' was all 'sound.'"

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

Mr. Spencer on Social Evolution.

FROM THE LONDON "FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW" OF JANUARY 1, 1875.

BY PROFESSOR J. E. CAIRNES.

(CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.)

I referred just now to the evidence furnished by history bearing on the course of human evolution, and in particular to the two capital facts: first, that, while a few nations rapidly progressed towards a rather high state of civilization, the great mass of mankind, after moving forward up to a certain point, became stationary, and showed no disposition to pass beyond; and secondly, that, during some seven or eight centuries, the direction of political and social movement was, in the case of some of the most important nations of the world, steadily retrograde. These are phenomena which have naturally exercised the speculation of writers on the philosophy of history; and I desire now to call attention to the explanations, or partial explanations, which have been advanced regarding them, by some of the most distinguished of those who have written on this subject.

With regard to the first of these problems—the causes which led to the Greeks, Romans, and a few other peoples making, for a time, rapid progress in civilization, while no similar progress was presented by the great majority of Oriental nations,—Sir H. Maine, in his work on Ancient Law, has offered the following as a partial explanation of what he describes as "one of the great secrets that inquiry has yet to penetrate." Writing of ancient codes he says:—

"But, whatever to a modern eye are the singularities of these codes, their importance to ancient societies was unspeakable. The question, and it was one which affected the whole future of each community, was not so much whether there should be a code at all, for the majority of ancient societies seem to have attained them sooner or later; and, but for the great interruption in the history of jurisprudence created by feudalism, it is likely that all modern law would be distinctly traceable to one or more of these fountain-heads. But the point on which turned the history of the race was, at what period, at what stage of their social progress, they should have their laws put into writing. In the Western world, the plebeian or popular element in each State successfully assailed the oligarchical monopoly, and a code was nearly universally obtained early in the history of the commonwealth. But in the East, the ruling aristocracies tended to become religious rather than military or political, and gained, therefore, rather than lost in power; while in some instances the physical conformation of Asiatic countries had the effect of making individual communities larger and more numerous than in the West; and it is a known social law, that the larger the space over which a particular set of institutions is diffused, the greater is its tenacity and vitality. From whatever cause, the codes obtained by Eastern societies were obtained relatively much later than by Western, and wore a very different character. . . . The fate of the Hindu law is, in fact, the measure of the value of the Roman code. Ethnology shows us that the Romans and the Hindus sprang from the same original stock, and there is, indeed, a striking resemblance between what appear to have been their original customs. Even now, Hindu jurisprudence has a substratum of forethought and sound judgment; but irrational imitation has engrafted in it an immense apparatus of cruel absurdities. From these corruptions the Romans were protected by their code. It was compiled while usage was still wholesome, and a hundred years afterwards it might have been too late. . . . We are not, of course, entitled to say that, if the twelve tables had not been published, the Romans would have been condemned to a civilization as feeble and perverted as that of the Hindus; but thus much at least is certain: that with their code they were exempt from the very chance of so unhappy a destiny."*

So momentous may be the adoption of an administrative reform at a crisis in a nation's history. Not less striking is the shaping power of forms of government upon social progress—a force which, I need scarcely say, is recognized in nearly every page of Mr. Mill's political writings. In the opening chapters of his work on Representative Government, he refers to the phenomenon now under consideration—the contrast presented by progressive and stationary nations,—and makes upon it the following striking remarks:—

"A people of savages should be taught obedience, but not in such a manner as to convert them into a people of slaves. And (to give the observation a higher generality) the form of government which is most effectual for carrying a people through the next stage of progress will still be very improper for them, if it does this in such a manner as to obstruct, or positively unfit them for, the step next beyond. Such cases are frequent, and are among the most melancholy facts in history. The Egyptian hierarchy, the paternal despotism of China, were very fit instruments for carrying these nations up to the point of civilization which they attained. But having reached that point, they were brought to a permanent halt, for want of mental liberty and individuality,—requisites of improvement which the institutions, that had carried them thus far, entirely incapacitated them from acquiring; and, as the institutions did not break down and give place to others, further improvement stopped. In contrast with these nations, let us consider the example of an opposite character afforded by another and a comparatively insignificant Oriental people—the Jews. They too had an absolute monarchy and a hierarchy, and their organized institutions were as obviously of sacerdotal origin as those of the Hindus. These did for them what was done for other Oriental races by their institutions—subdued them to industry and order, and gave them a national life. But neither their kings nor their priests ever obtained, as in those other countries, the exclusive moulding of their character. Their religion, which enabled persons of genius and a high religious tone to be regarded, and to regard themselves, as inspired from heaven, gave existence to an inestimably precious unorganized institution—the order (if it may be so termed) of prophets. Under the protection, generally, though not always, effectual, of their sacred character, the prophets were a power in the nation, often more than a match for kings and priests; and kept up, in that little corner of the earth, the antagonism of influences which is the only real security for continued progress. Religion, consequently, was not there what it has been in so many other places,—a consecration of all that was once established, and a barrier against further improvement. The remark of a distinguished Hebrew, M. Salvador, that the prophets were, in Church and State, the equivalent of the modern liberty of the press, gives a just but not an adequate conception of the part fulfilled in national and universal history by this great element of Jewish life; by means of which, the canon of inspiration never being complete, the persons most eminent in genius and moral feeling could not only denounce and reprobate with the direct authority of the Almighty, whatever appeared to them deserving of such treatment, but could give forth better and higher interpretations of the national religion, which thenceforth became part of the religion."†

So much as to the diversity of the agencies by which the fortunes of various nations and races have been affected, and the consequent differences in their modes of evolution. I turn now to that other remarkable phenomenon—the arrest of progress amongst the progressive portions of mankind, and its conversion, over a period of some seven or eight centuries, into a course of positive retrogression—what is commonly known as "the decline and fall of the Roman Empire." M. Guizot's explanation of this vast event is well known, and will not lose in authority by the circumstance that it has been fully endorsed by Mr. Mill.

"The causes assigned," says M. Guizot, "are the despotism of the Imperial government, the degradation of the people, the profound apathy which had seized upon all the governed. And this is true; such was really the main cause of so extraordinary an effect. But it is not enough to enunciate in these general terms a cause which existed elsewhere without producing the same effects. We must penetrate deeper into the condition of Roman society, such as despotism had made it. We must examine by what means despotism had so completely stripped society of all coherence and all life. Despotism has various forms and modes of proceeding, which give very various degrees of energy to its action, and of extensiveness to its consequences."

And M. Guizot proceeds to point to the institutions, and in particular to the condition of the municipalities of the empire, as the most immediate and direct of those agencies which helped forward the great catastrophe. The whole responsibility of government, he tells us, without its honors or patronage, and the unshared weight of the taxation of the empire, were concentrated on a single class, the Curiales, or the middle-class, of the towns.

"In their fate," says Mr. Mill in his review of M. Guizot's work, "we see the disease the Roman Empire really died of; and how its destruction had been consummated even before the occupation by the barbarians. The invasions were no new fact, unheard of until the fifth century; such attempts had repeatedly been made, and never succeeded until the powers of resistance were destroyed by inward decay. The empire perished of misgovernment in the form of over-taxation."*

These examples will suffice to show the important part played by political institutions in the drama of social development; played, that is to say, by agencies created by the human will in the deliberate pursuit of public well-being. If, however, we accept Mr. Spencer's theory, such historic facts lose all their interpretative force. According to him, as the reader has seen, all forms of government are alike products of the national character; and, further, as appears from his latest publication,† forms of government are valuable just in so far as they are products of the national character. Now the political institutions of Asia, of Greece, and of Rome fall alike under this comprehensive generalization. They were all equally products of the national character; and by consequence they were all equally good. It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Spencer is bound to maintain one or other of the following positions: either that the political institutions respectively of Asia, of Greece, and of Rome had no effect whatever on the social and political development of these countries; or, that they had an equally favorable effect in each case.

Passing now from the political to the private sphere, we shall here again find the human will no less active in consciously promoting (or thwarting, as the case may be) the course of social development. In their private capacity, also, men work for public objects, and perhaps they have in this way as largely affected the course of human evolution as by what they have done through the instrumentality of the State. But this is a part of the question on which I have no need to enlarge in a controversy with Mr. Spencer, who has himself in more than one essay,‡ where his object is to exhibit the superiority of voluntary over State action, dwelt with great force on this very point, and illustrated it with his usual fullness. What, however, does need to be insisted on is, that all such examples of social progress promoted by the conscious and deliberate efforts of men aiming at the results achieved—whether these efforts take the form of State or voluntary action—are in direct and irreconcilable conflict with the doctrine which tells us that social evolution works itself out spontaneously, and exhibits only the incidental result of conduct inspired by nothing better than private and personal objects. I observe, indeed, that Mr. Spencer, in the essay just mentioned, has described the various voluntary agencies to which he refers—such as religious and educational systems, friendly societies, scientific associations, the press, and the like—as "spontaneously developed agencies"; but this is only another example of the laxity with which Mr. Spencer uses certain quasi-scientific terms. I have no desire to be captious about phrases; and if Mr. Spencer finds it convenient to distinguish voluntary from State-created institutions, by describing the former as "spontaneously developed," he is, of course, at liberty to do so; only it must be remarked that, as thus understood, the phrase becomes, at least in the present controversy, a "question-begging" term, since it assumes the very point to be proved. What is to be maintained is, that institutions created by voluntary agency, with a deliberate view to the ends which they actually serve, are not spontaneously developed institutions in the sense in which language is described by Mr. Spencer as "spontaneously developed." "Men little by little developed speech in absolute unconsciousness that they were doing anything more than pursuing their personal interests." But voluntary churches, educational systems, scientific associations, and the newspaper press have not been so developed; they do not, therefore, conform to Mr. Spencer's typical example of "the workings out of sociological processes." It follows that, in referring to the achievements of individuals or associations, in their private capacity engaged in the pursuit of public objects, as factors in the aggregate of forces which produce social progress, Mr. Spencer has himself furnished evidence that social evolution is not "spontaneous," in the only sense in which it is worth while contesting the point; and, on the other hand, that it is largely influenced by causes to which nothing analogous is to be found in the examples of organic development presented by the lower forms of animal life.

But this is not the only way in which the parallelism, for which Mr. Spencer so strenuously contends, fails of realization. In the primitive steps of human history, while man is yet a savage, it is probable, as has already been said, that the law of the survival of the fittest, working through the struggle for existence, rules as inexorably as in other provinces of organic life, and with analogous results. But it is by no means certain that this is so; indeed I need not hesitate to say that the reverse is very palpably the case, so soon as civilization has reached the stage which it has long since reached and passed in Western Europe and Northern America. The progress of civilization modifies the struggle for existence in two leading particulars; first, by developing sentiments which interfere with the rigorous working out of the law; and secondly, by substituting for the mere physical force by which, in a state of nature,

* Dissertations and Discussions, vol. i., p. 230.

† Study of Sociology, p. 276.

‡ See for example the essay on Specialized Administration, vol. iii., p. 161, etc.

* Ancient Law, pp. 16, 17, 20.

† Representative Government, pp. 41, 42.

the issue is decided, certain moral forces in the form of law and public opinion. The physically weak are rescued by the sympathy of their fellows from the fate which would await them in a state of nature; and the means of subsistence, which in a state of nature are secured to the physically strongest, fall, under a civilized régime, in largest share to those who are most successful in the business of accumulating wealth. The combined effect of these changes is not indeed to get rid of the struggle for existence; that ordeal still awaits the great mass of mankind under all conditions and changes of life; but it does tend very largely to modify the character of the struggle and the result of it. The qualities required for the accumulation of wealth are by no means the highest human qualities—by no means those which qualify most effectually for the task of promoting human improvement; though they are the qualities which, by giving to their possessors the largest command over the necessities and comforts of existence, give them the greatest chance of leaving a numerous posterity, and so of propagating their like. Though, therefore, the struggle for existence still continues, and apparently seems likely to continue even under higher forms of civilization than the world has yet seen, there is no longer the security which existed in primitive times, and which still exists wherever Nature reigns supreme, that it will issue in the "survival of the fittest." I desire, however, merely to indicate here an aspect of the case which has of late received a good deal of attention—to discuss it at any length would carry me far beyond the necessary limits of the present essay—to indicate it as one circumstance amongst others which may bear the evolution of civilized mankind far away from those tracks in which it has moved in ages of barbarism, or in the region of mere animal existence.

Let us now observe the point to which the argument has been carried. In tracing the analogy between the growth of society and that of living beings, whether individual animals or species, Mr. Spencer, while recognizing certain points of difference, has persuaded himself that in all essential conditions the analogy is complete; so truly so, that we are justified in regarding the course of development in the animal kingdom as prefiguring that which ought to be followed, and which will, in fact, be followed in human society. Accordingly, not content with employing the phenomena of animal life as a metaphor with which to elucidate the arrangements of our social condition, he exhibits them as a type or exemplar, according to their conformity or disconformity with which these arrangements are to be approved or condemned; and further announces it as a law of social science that human evolution, as it has in the past followed certain lines of development corresponding to those realized in organic nature, so in the future is destined to continue along the same lines. Now I have endeavored to show that, amongst the points in which, by Mr. Spencer's own confession, the analogy between the social and animal organisms fails, there is one of so vital a kind as in effect to invalidate the whole argument, since it involves the fact that the ends for which the two organisms exist are essentially different—to be contrasted rather than to be likened; and secondly, I have shown that, having regard to the broad generalizations of history, no such well-defined lines of evolution in human affairs are to be found as Mr. Spencer's teaching takes for granted; and that, in fact, great and notable deviations from any course that could easily be considered predetermined or normal have occurred. Lastly, I have shown that the most remarkable of these deviations are traceable, and have in fact been traced by writers on the philosophy of history, to political causes, or to causes allied to political; to influences, at all events, created by, and working through, individual human wills, deliberately—whether wisely or foolishly—aiming at public objects; influences nothing comparable to which has operated in the examples of development presented by the animal kingdom, and which it is a leading characteristic of Mr. Spencer's philosophy to ignore.

Such is the point to which the argument has been carried; and now I must ask the reader to observe the practical tendencies of the two philosophies which have in this examination been brought into opposition. On the one hand there is the philosophy of Mr. Spencer, such as I have just described it, contemplating the career of humanity as fixed with regard to its main direction, as predetermined to move along certain defined, or at least definable, lines of progress; constantly shaping itself under the influence of causes which produce their effects "spontaneously"—the human will, indeed, coöperating towards the result, but only as the corresponding faculty in the lower animals coöperates towards the improvement of their race, by taking part in the struggle for existence, and in propagating their kind;* inevitably gathering up, in the slow process of things, whether men trouble themselves or not, large gains in human welfare. Can we have any doubt as to the tendency of such teachings? As to its paralyzing effect on laborers in the field of human improvement? Wherefore, indeed, should we trouble ourselves if the result is already certain; if the gain is inevitable; nay, if the most probable effect of our interference will be "to disturb," "to distort," and "to repress"; if the best we can do is "to let social progress go on unhindered"? Contrast with this the teaching of that other philosophy with which Mr. Spencer's has been confronted in this discussion—the philosophy of Mr. Mill, every line of whose writings is instinct with the belief that there is nothing fixed in human fortunes; that it rests with the individual men and women of each generation as they pass, each within the range of his or her influence, to make or to mar them; whose creed it is that social progress is largely dependent on political institutions, which do not "grow" while men sleep, but "are the work of men—owe their origin and their whole existence to human will"; and which, according as in different countries they have been suited or unsuited to the requirements of the time, have in fact helped or hindered human advance; and, lastly, who is so far from sharing Mr. Spencer's optimistic faith in the inevitability of good to come that he warns us against it as a calamitous delusion in words which, it may be hoped, mankind will not willingly let die:—

"Though we no longer hold this opinion [the opinion held by the ancients that the natural tendency of men and their work is to degenerate]; though most men in the present age profess the contrary creed, believing that the tendency of things, on the whole, is towards improvement—we ought not to forget that there is an incessant and ever-flowing current of human affairs towards the worse, consisting of all the follies, all the vices, all the negligences, indolences, and supinenesses of mankind; which is only controlled, and kept from sweeping all before it, by the exertions which some persons constantly, and others by fits, put forth in the direction of good and worthy objects. It gives a very insufficient idea of the importance of the strivings which take place to improve and elevate human nature and life, to suppose that their chief value consists in the amount of actual improvement realized by their means, and that the consequence of their cessation would merely be that we should remain as we are. A very small diminution of those exertions would not only put a stop to improvement, but would turn the general tendency of things towards deterioration, which, once begun, would proceed with increasing rapidity, and become more and more difficult to check, until it reached a state often seen in history, and in which many large portions of mankind even now grovel; when hardly anything short of superhuman power seems sufficient to turn the tide, and give a fresh commencement to the upward movement."†

Thus, according to Mr. Mill, all is contingent—

"Man is man, and master of his fate."

Evolution is, indeed, a law of social existence; but as to its direction—whether upwards or downwards, towards improvement or towards deterioration,—that will be as our characters and wills shall make it. All depends upon the efforts put forth by those who are concerned in the issue. What stronger incentive, what more inspiring motive, can be imagined, for exertion in the cause of human progress?

And here let me remark, that, in the foregoing argument, the great question of the freedom of the human will is not implicated. The conclusions which I have opposed to Mr. Spencer's are the conclusions of Mr. Mill, or plain deductions from his philosophy; and, I need scarcely say, that Mr. Mill held the doctrine of the determination of the will by motives as decidedly as Mr. Spencer himself. The question really at issue is, not whether the will is, or is not, determined by motives, but whether the existence of a certain order of motives acting on the will is not an essential condition in order that evolution should take the direction of social progress. According to Mr. Spencer, the future of the human race may be safely trusted to the action of motives of a private and personal kind—to motives such as operate in the production and distribution of wealth, or in the development of language; left to such influences society cannot but evolve spontaneously, and we have only to wish it "bon voyage." According to Mr. Mill, this is not so; social progress needs the support of other and higher aims to keep it in its path; so truly so that if mankind, or some moderate proportion of them, do not rise to the level of such higher aims, and will not by strenuous and persistent efforts labor for social good, "scorning delights and living laborious days," retrogression is certain and inevitable. That is the nature of the issue which has now been raised, and on which students of social science are called upon to exercise their judgments.

But though the argument we have been pursuing does not necessarily involve the question of the freedom of the will, it cannot be denied that it comes into dangerous proximity to that quicksand of philosophic speculation—so much so, indeed, that one needs to guide his steps warily if he would avoid its perils. I call the question of the freedom of the will a "quicksand," because it is one in which, I frankly own, I have never myself been able to find solid footing. Mr. Mill, as is well known, tried to explore it, and believed that he had reached firm standing ground.† He persuaded himself that he could reconcile the power of individuals, by an effort of will, to improve their own characters—to make them other than they would be but for the effort—with the fact that their conduct is determined in every act by the relation of the motives presented at the time to their characters as formed by all the influences which had acted upon them from birth to the moment of action. These two positions Mr. Mill believed he could reconcile. For my part, I must acknowledge my inability to follow him through his demonstration. Both propositions are, to my apprehension, as true as the strongest testimony of consciousness can make anything; and I, therefore, accept them both, though I am unable to bring them into harmony. The position is, no doubt, unsatisfactory, but it seems to be the only one open under the circumstances; for I fail to see the reasonableness of rejecting a truth supported by the strongest evidence vouchsafed to man, because I am unable to reconcile it with another which rests upon no better foundation. Mr. Spencer apparently holds the latter only of the two positions just indicated; he accepts the doctrine of the determination of the will by motives; but, if I correctly understand him, refuses to admit that an individual has the power, by an effort of will, to make his character other than it must inevitably be. He thus, no doubt, escapes a difficulty; but only, as it seems to me, to encounter another still more formidable. For, on the supposition that self-improvement is impossible, and that, consequently, the whole course of human affairs is predetermined, to what purpose devote ourselves to the study of sociology? To what purpose warn mankind against the dangers of over-legislation? or preach the duty of letting social evolution go on unhindered? Is Mr. Spencer prepared to accept the conclusion that these too—his own words and actions—are but links in the chain of destiny, and that he himself is but a "conscious automaton"?

[FOR THE INDEX.]

SETTING SAILS TO THE BREEZE.

BY DAVID H. CLARK.

It is curious, even verging at times in some slight degree upon the amusing, to notice the facility with which political and religious parties, and their representatives of one kind or another, shift their tactics, and veer from a course which to the eye of others they have been pursuing with unbounded self-satisfaction, whenever the pressure of popular tendencies seems to render it expedient.

There is a strong play of cross-interests and attractions in this world, and not unfrequently it happens that solicitude in respect to consequences and to leadership exceeds the love of truth and sincerity. There is also no little amount of stubbornness and conceit, now and then, even under the guise of amiable and humble qualities. It is very hard for those who have aspired to be leaders of thought and popular sentiment, and may have been such in some good degree, to be convinced they have not reached the outermost limit of possible wisdom, or to contemplate the prospect of some new-born competitor, whose name is yet to be earned, superseding them. It is thus, when society is stirred by a new idea, by some broader view of humanity, of religion, of civil or social relations, or by a clearer perception of truth or justice that, instead of the cordial reception it deserves, it is at first treated with cool indifference by the possessors of prestige and authority, then receives a contemptuous recognition, then is vigorously assailed, and at last wins an espousal (sometimes a quite precipitate one) from these same opponents, of scarcely less ardor and devotion. "It is but a puff of wind," it is said, "or a superficial turmoil that will soon have spent its force and passed away." But, as this puff of wind, or turmoil, increases in volume, depth, intensity, it is pronounced a monster of the deep, or the brewing of a horrid whirlwind, pregnant with calamity, and threatening to engulf all on board; and the old crafts of conservatism make taut their rigging, and crowd on their canvas in proud and exultant assurance that they are on the only path of success and safety.

There are some who thus go forward, in obstinate disregard of all remonstrating voices, to destruction; while others are sufficiently and seasonably wise to perceive that wind and tide are against them, and to adjust themselves to the new conditions. The modus operandi differs somewhat in these last instances. Sometimes it is a gradual and wary movement, very cautiously graded to the exigencies of the time. It consists of a short tack in one direction, and then in the other; a slight reef in this piece of canvas, and an additional letting out of that; considerable effort in making sure which way the wind blows. Sometimes an adroit and sudden turn constitutes all that is witnessed, and then a speeding away in the line of the popular currents, as though nothing had happened. The dexterity, self-complacency, and apparent unconsciousness of inconsistency with which these manœuvres are effected, in view of the antecedents, past professions, and protestations of those who perform them, are exceedingly bewildering to ingenuous and simple-minded people. It does not seem strange that one whose convictions have never been especially pronounced should succeed to those of one extreme or the other. But for those of a more positive character to become the allies of opinions and principles toward which they have been, and, until comparatively recently (it may be), in direct and hostile opposition, is somewhat incomprehensible, to say the least. It would seem, for example, very puzzling, if Dr. Miner and the party of prohibition, in the sphere of temperance agitation, should some day become the advocates of moderate drinking, supposing the latter principle at length obtains the ascendancy; or if the American Tract Society, or Unitarian Association even, should eventually become the propagandists of the gospel of pure and simple rationalism. And yet scarcely less marvellous changes have been in the world of ideas and parties.

A very striking peculiarity in respect to these strange conversions is the pretension with which

* Representative Government, pp. 26, 27.

† System of Logic, book vi., chap. ii.

* "When it is said," says Mr. Morley in his work on Compromise, "that the various successive changes in thought and institution present and consummate themselves spontaneously, no one means by spontaneity that they come to pass independently of human effort and volition." This is true, but leaves the vital point at large; as may be seen by considering that precisely as much might be said of the development of a species. It is as true of a species as of human society, that the changes which take place in it are brought about through the action of that faculty in the animal which corresponds to the human will. The difference lies in the fact that the animal does not aim at its own improvement, which may, therefore, properly be called "spontaneous"; it comes without being sought; whereas, to quote again Mr. Morley's words, "the world only grows better, even in the moderate degree in which it does grow better, because people wish that it should, and take the right steps to make it better." To call progress so achieved "spontaneous" seems to me, I own, a strange use of words, nor can I see my way to reconciling Mr. Morley's position with Mr. Spencer's.

they are usually associated, of their strict accord with the course hitherto pursued, and disposition to appropriate all the glory and emoluments accruing.

Among those who predicted from afar the issue, here and there one of commanding name and fame receives at length the grudging award of an honored remembrance; but the many of obscurer note, who bore alike in their day the accusation and penalty of mutineers and insubordinates, but with less encouragement and stimulus, or were thrust overboard to perish because of their vision of what those are now entering upon at whose hands they suffered, or because of their fearless and faithful proclamation of the truth now accepted, are forgotten. Such is the common course of progress,—the common history of parties,—not political alone, but religious also.

Their action with reference to new truths and movements of society is always much determined by the seeming prospect they present in respect to popularity and power. It is recorded that the great Nazarene made himself of no reputation; but his disciples are very sensitive to being numbered among such at present, or to being included among the poor and despised.

The American Church, in other days, was almost as a solid body on the side of slavery; but, when emancipation was accomplished, it was suddenly found to be—the Southern portion, of course, excepted—fervidly jubilant on the side of abolition; and the good result was very widely and generally celebrated as the triumph of Christian intercessions and principles. Frederick Douglass having referred to this, somewhat pointedly, in a public address in Philadelphia two or three years since, and maintained that the great iniquity was brought to an end through natural rather than supernatural means, and in spite of, rather than through the aid of, the Christian Church, was taken to task for what were pronounced his "dangerous sentiments"; when he reminded his Christian critics that, if their prayers had been answered, slavery would probably be still in existence.

The manifest tendency to unification that is witnessed at the present time among the different sects of Christendom; the dropping of their peculiar distinctions, and slurring or ignoring of objectionable dogmas; their concessions to science, and efforts to demonstrate its harmony with religion in order to cope with what is called the scepticism and infidelity of the age; the competition of operatic choirs with the attractive power of the preacher (sometimes quite overwhelming it) in the Sunday services, and the substitution of declamation and pantomimic performances, or ritualistic ceremonies and scenic effects, for the direct and sober inculcation of the doctrines of the creed, with the lavish expenditures upon architecture and other æsthetic associations, betray something more than results of progress or the transformations of faith which come of intelligent conviction. They indicate the consciousness of lessening power, and the struggle to regain it; the consciousness of adverse currents, and the effort to counteract their influence; in a word, the setting of sails to the breeze.

The same tendency may be seen in the new tactics and policy which have sprung up in the conduct of Young Men's Christian Associations. These institutions are primarily intended as recruiting offices for the Orthodox army of the Lord, or Orthodox churches. They advertise and present certain inducements and attractions to the class they desire to draw to themselves, for which the expectation is indulged that they will become pious young men. But it is discovered, such is the perversity of human nature, that many young men, not yet made pious, have a fondness for more cheerful and intellectual recreations than prayers and telling religious experiences, and that they may be found elsewhere. The Association under consideration has, therefore, shown a considerable degree of worldly sagacity of late, by a marked departure from the more rigid Christian temper and manners, in correspondent provisions for these youthful tastes, such as popular games,—once classed among the diversions only of the unregenerate and impenitent,—instructive lectures, concerts, social gatherings, and the like. As for ourselves, not happening to possess the felicity of being a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, we have nothing but commendation and praise for these innovations; but, if we were one, it seems to us that we should consider them as tending to lose sight of or relinquish its original purpose.

In speaking of setting sails to the breeze, something might be said, perhaps, of ingratiating and wily politicians who overflow with Christian enthusiasm and eloquence at Sunday-school and other church conventions, and the invitation to, and presence of, civil dignitaries at recent Roman Catholic ceremonies.

Nor is there occasion wholly for censure, admitting even these intimations. Did not the founder of Christianity himself charge his followers to be "wise as serpents (the serpent being recognized as the type of the devil, and particularly distinguished for his craftiness), and harmless as doves?" The former part of the injunction has been more fully complied with, as humanity too often has had sorrowful occasion to feel, than the latter.

There has been a very perceptible indication in some of the leading Orthodox journals of the country, of late, of the effort of setting sails to the breeze. The time was when Universalism was pronounced by Orthodoxy the doctrine with which the serpent tempted Eve in the Garden of Eden; and when its adherents were declared to be in close league with his Satanic Excellency, to lure the doubting and disbelieving to destruction. But the Independent condemned the rejection of Universalist delegates by the Evangelical Alliance; and, in reply to animadversions of an eminent divine, with much coolness and complacency maintained (rather illogically, we think) that belief in a future hell is not a fundamental tenet of the Orthodox system. In the columns of the same paper, it has been declared, on the authority of Professor Schaff, and as a reconsideration of views which he had previously put forth, that it is not impossible that those of the heathen world who never hear of Christ may be saved.

The siding of the New York Observer, and other Presbyterian papers (not to mention a preponderating number of the clergy of the same fellowship), with Professor Swing in his trial for heresy, notwithstanding the admission of his rationalistic predilections and palpable departure from the Orthodox confession, was also a sign in the same direction; as was that of the decision of a Presbyterian Assembly in St. Louis a few months since, that a preacher has the right to form his own conclusions in respect to the inspiration of a text of Scripture; and, if inconsistent with a rational judgment, to disregard its authority.

There have been some rather notable indications among Unitarians, of late, of the tendency to which our metaphor applies. When we remember how strenuously opposed the ruling temper and conduct of Unitarianism have been, up to very recent time, to outright rationalism, and how firmly set against all entangling alliances with it; when we remember the efforts to commit it to "statements of belief," and voting down of resolutions looking toward greater intellectual freedom in its national conventions; when we remember its refusal, not two years since, to send a fraternal greeting to the Free Religious Association, at one of these national gatherings,—it seems a little strange to pick up among the editorials of a paper presided over by one who has been the trumpeter of the alarm of "suspense of faith," and the foremost chief of a stationary and exclusive policy, such straws as these: "It would be a wise and safe measure, we think, to invite now all who desire to find the religion of freedom, and the freedom of religion, to stand together, work together, and so possess the land." "The most effective proclamation of our real strength and vital force would be the announcement of a policy of inclusion, of a determination to do all that such an organization might properly do to help men to a solution of the problem how to unite a sweet and strong religious sentiment with absolute intellectual freedom." "It would be an immense gain if we could, once for all, abolish names and tests, and, inviting all in every communion who accept religion as the struggle for nobler knowledge and nobler life, unite in practical endeavor to lay the foundation of the true Catholic Church." These straws show the way the wind blows, and a disposition to set sails accordingly.

More remarkable still were the resolutions brought before the Western Unitarian Conference, and passed without a dissenting vote, and with the special prompting and countenance of one who has been counted among the most Orthodox and uncompromising anti-radicals of the whole Unitarian body, of sympathy with the Free Religious Association, read at its annual meeting in Boston, a few weeks since.

We rejoice in these signs of the times. They are full of cheer and inspiration for radicals. And though, like the person of slow habits who was told that he would be late for the first resurrection, but might be in time for the second, conservatism may miss the ennobling satisfaction of those who earliest descry and announce the truth, and the heroic virtue which is born of the accompanying self-abnegation and suffering, it will be sure to follow in the wake of their more adventurous course at last, and come, sooner or later, to the results of their broader and finer perceptions.

At the ordination of a young man for the ministry in the West, two or three years since, of a family whose name has been brought into unhappy publicity of late, it was reported that the father of the young man who took part in the exercises of the occasion addressed him as follows: "I charge you not to forget that you are the son of your father, the nephew of your uncle, and the grandson of your grandfather." A newspaper, commenting upon these words, said: "We would respectfully advise the young man to forget altogether his family connections, and resolve to build up a reputation of his own, through his own merits and ability." And so in respect to truth and progress, and more especially religion, it is of the highest importance that we should forget wholly our party affiliations and attachments. It is of the first importance that we should put clear out of sight and thought the relation we may chance to sustain to this or that ism or organization, or even Christianity itself. Let us comprehend that sincerity is more than consistency; the attainment of pure and simple truth more than leadership, party success, or power; uncalculating disinterestedness more than fat livings, or a larger share of the loaves and fishes.

NEW MILFORD, Pa.

AN ADROIT ANSWER.—A well-known clergyman made a visit to a well-known banker, and asked to see him in a private room. "I have come to you with a message from dear Jesus. I am in a financial trouble, and I have been looking around for somebody to help me out. I went to dear Jesus and asked him to send me some one who would help me. He named you." "Are you sure," said the banker, "he mentioned my name?" "Oh! I cannot be mistaken about it." "I recollect," said the banker, "that when the Lord sent Peter to Cornelius, he told Cornelius that Peter was coming. I think if the Lord had sent you to me to get money he would have intimated to me that he had done so. As he has not said anything to me on the matter, I must wait till I hear from him."

CONVERSATION OF THE TIME:

OF BEECHER-TILTON.

REPORTED BY S. H. M.

Two friends meet. After exhausting all other topics, one says to the other:—

"Well, what is your opinion of the Beecher-Tilton disagreement?"

"Oh, fie, don't! I haven't—"

"Oh, yes you have some idea, one way or the other!"

"No, I haven't; I have some idea, or no idea, both ways."

"Well?"

"Well, then; I am profoundly sorry all around: for Beecher, for Tilton, for Moulton, and Mrs. Moulton, and last, but by no means least, for poor Mrs. Tilton. I wish I could turn a river of crystal water through that city of Brooklyn, and wash away all its sorrows. There they are, all those people, once friends, now estranged, and the world's talk. The publicity of the thing is damnable. The condonement should have been perpetual."

"You blame Tilton, then."

"No; nobody."

"But there was some fault, somewhere. If Beecher's word stands good, Tilton and the Moultons are villains. If their word is to be taken, he is one, sure. Which is it?"

"You are too scientific for me. I can't deal with people in such an absolute way. There is no villain."

"But some people come mighty near it."

"Oh, I know. But you mustn't say it, for it isn't true."

"Your philosophy blinks facts."

"Then don't press me to use it."

"Well, if Tilton is right, Beecher is in error; contrariwise, contrariwise. How's that?"

"I don't discuss it. Briefly, if you must have it, as between the parties, I think thus: I think Beecher failed to explain his letters. I don't see how to set Moulton's testimony—leaving Tilton out—aside, backed as it was by Mrs. Moulton. The jury say they had great respect for her. How did they show it? By voting 9 to 3 that she lied. It's more of a mystery to me that Mrs. Moulton, judging from all I hear concerning her, could make so direct and circumstantial a charge against Beecher, than it is that he, desperately defending himself, should so defiantly deny it. How those nine jurymen escaped Mrs. Moulton, I don't see."

"I see. They kept their eyes on Beecher. Too bad to pull such a man down. The evidence must be overwhelming to do it."

"Ah! then you do forsake your pure-villain theory. Aside from 'adultery,' as they call it, from 'lying,' as they say, there's a great deal left of Beecher that's worth keeping afloat. Even so it is with all concerned. I've seen boys, losing temper, get off the dry road into the mire, and splatter themselves with mud. But they washed the dirt off, and went on again."

"But this is too serious a matter to be put off with boys' play."

"It was a serious matter with the boys at the time."

"Then I judge that you think Beecher guilty, but you would wipe the whole affair out, and go on as though nothing had happened."

"Words are strange things. We shall probably never quite understand each other until we can do without them. But I will try once more. We can't go on as if nothing had happened. But it is the prerogative of man to act so that nothing that happens shall destroy him. Beecher's Friday-night talk, as you remember, was full of this: only, it was all about himself. It was to be a victory over or in spite of the rest of the world. Now, that is good and bad both. Good—if it must be a fight: good for Beecher; good for Tilton; good all around. But it was bad in that it is a fight. It ought to be by general consent. People talk of the parties to this affair, and speculate as to their future; according to their prejudices, they consign one or the other side to everlasting infamy; or they think they do. Now, society can't afford that."

"What would you do?"

"I would draw a line, beyond which I would carry no 'infamy.' Now, over that we will go on together—Beecher, Tilton, the Moultons, and all. That is, I would credit each and all with what virtue shows itself henceforth."

"Suppose virtue didn't show itself, but there was another mud fight."

"Draw another line, and move on."

"That's a pretty dream; but human nature is made of a coarser material. Why, you would set a premium on villany."

"Tush, my man; you are too easily frightened. Human nature isn't any such poor stuff as you think. While you insist on keeping your 'villany,' you decline salvation. It is the race that is to be saved; not you and me."

"But I can't wink villany out as fact, to suit my theory."

"You can cease to emphasize it as though it were absolute, and overshadowed all else. Put it behind you, and move on."

"And let it steal up with a blow?"

"Roll your life in your napkin, and forget it. Cowardice is more treacherous than villany."

"Tilton might have taken that advice at the start."

"Certainly. It was a lack of all spiritual discernment that opened his mouth."

"But he didn't until Beecher and Bacon fairly forced him to do so. Few men have greater provocation. It's hard to blame him."

"Nor do I. But oh! what a blessing to themselves, and all the world, could they have kept the privacy that pertained to their own affair! I say it was a lack of spiritual discernment that opened the mouth of Tilton. It was a gross act."

"Bacon called him a 'dog.'"

"He ought not to have barked, if he was not."

"That's too bad."

"Well, I don't mean it absolutely. Bacon was not worth noticing. No man is; nor woman, either. At least, not when their speech or action is a challenge to drive you from your own spiritual purpose."

"What is a spiritual purpose?"

"A purpose not to do things grossly."

"Would you never defend yourself?"

"It would be contrary to my idea to accuse others. I would say 'yea,' or 'nay,' if accused."

"Then Beecher's inactivity and silence was all right."

"If he was innocent, his simple 'nay' was sufficient."

"Then you would not appeal to the law?"

"Appeal to the law! What, my man, after the illustration we have just had? Heaven forbid!"

"What will become of one's character, if he can't appeal to an impartial jury?"

"What becomes of it, if he does? Where's Beecher, Tilton, Moulton? Why, there they are, riddled through and through."

"Then you would simply say 'nay,' and let people think what they please."

"I could not help their thinking. But I could mind my own affairs. A man's character, if he have any, is not so flimsy a thing that even a great number of people can blow it away. It is absolute, and will stand by him, you may be assured, though all else forsake him."

"Well, his reputation, then?"

"Oh, that; well that may come and go. Let him keep to his task and wist not. To look after that is like putting out to sea compassless and rudderless."

"Well, then, what is your estimate of Beecher, and Tilton, and Moulton, and all the rest now?"

"I dare say they are all estimable people. That is, they all have their friends who esteem them, and esteem them, too, for their good qualities. See Beecher and his host of friends. Tilton has his friends; Moulton his. Those who know each of them best esteem each of them accordingly. Beecher is more magnetic and flowing in his nature, and wins more to him. Tilton has admirable qualities. And, to-day, he is a wiser and better man than ever; fitter for the world's esteem. Why should there not be a future for him? So far as what the world is disposed to do for him, I am not sure but his chances are better than Beecher's. I mean, if the world treats him with the indifference some think probable. If the tide turns toward Beecher to his (Tilton's) neglect, both will suffer from extreme handling. Beecher with his $100,000 salary and 'thunders of applause' will have occasion for much 'prayer and fasting.' He's in a scorching sun. Tilton may even be thankful for his comparative shade."

"The papers report that Tilton is in great demand for lecturing this fall."

"Well, I have great faith in him; more than ever. He certainly bore himself like a true man during the trial. I doubt not he will win many friends. But we have talked enough of 'scandal' now. Let us quit, and never do so more."

"Well—I—"

"I have been thinking of a verse or two I wrote some time since, before this bad disturbance came up. If you don't object, I'll try and recall them."

"Do so."

"I called them, I believe,

"TRANSPANTED.

"From heavens afar transplant the God
To our divinest earth;
The seed, the life to quicken all
That hath, or shall have, birth.

"No more apart in regal state
He keepeth his high throne;
Henceforth the servant of our race
Is he, a God we own.

"He worketh now as hitherto;
And evermore will he
His faithful work of love repeat,
The race of man to free.

"The servant of the humblest soul,
Yet none the less a God;
He ruleth in the mind of man,—
The devils fly the rod.

"Howbeit he be sacrificed,
To outward seeming plain;
He keepeth well his task in hand:
The slayers are the slain.

"He is our World-Humanity;
The Nature of us all.
Apart from him no soul is saved—
The Race, or none at all.

"Self-Righteousness, abusing him,
Straight hies for heaven alone;
Back falling soon—unerring fate—
To depth of burning zone.

"There—"

"I forget—there were a few more verses—"

"In process of the ages thus
Is wrought a life divine.
We fall, we rise, we fall again,
Yet still our star doth shine."

"I forget. Well, that is enough, I guess."

"I am sorry you do not remember it all. But I should want to study it a little."

"Well, study away at your leisure. I must be off."

"No more 'scandal'?"

"Not if we can help it."

"REVEREND."

The right of Mr. Keet, the Wesleyan minister, to put the word "Rev." before his name on his daughter's tombstone in the church-yard of Owston Ferry, in England, has been solemnly argued by counsel before the Chancellor of the Diocese of Lincoln, who is a young man and the bishop's son. The facts in the case are already familiar to our readers, and the report of the proceedings in court reads very much like a caricature by some satirist who hated the clergy. The chancellor has solemnly delivered judgment in the case, refusing the citation asked for directing the vicar to allow the obnoxious inscription to be made. It is difficult to read the decision with a grave face. It holds that, if the use of the term "Reverend" implies that the person bearing it is entitled to administer the sacraments, it would be against the laws of the Church to apply it to a Wesleyan minister; moreover, the use of the title was forbidden by the teachings of John Wesley, and the rules of the Wesleyan Conference, which it appears, on a pinch, the chancellor thinks himself bound to enforce. If, on the other hand, it was admitted, as had been contended at the bar, that the epithet "Reverend" was a title of courtesy, and might be given to all persons "worthy of reverence," it must still be denied to Mr. Keet; because, though he might be a very estimable person in private life, and though there might be some strong excuse for his being so bad a thing as a Wesleyan, yet the Church could not admit that a Wesleyan minister was, as such, "worthy of reverence," because he was a schismatic. Besides this, if he was allowed to call himself "Reverend" on his daughter's tombstone, "it might be the means of disseminating doctrines inconsistent with those of the Church." After turning the matter over thoroughly, the chancellor could see no way of granting the application unless the inscription were so worded that it would show that it was only "an asserted title"; or in other words, we suppose, unless Mr. Keet would make it "The so-called Rev. Henry Keet," or the "soi-disant Rev. Henry Keet," or the "alleged," or the "self-styled Rev. Henry Keet," which he is hardly likely to do. He has given notice of an appeal from the chancellor's decision, and the case will probably go to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; but no doubt is entertained as to the final result. He will certainly be allowed to call himself "Rev." on his daughter's tombstone if he pleases. The decision of the chancellor, who is a rather light-headed young man, who holds the place as his father's son, is commented on in the Times in terms of not unmerited severity, as it is only prevented from being exasperating and insulting to dissenters by being very absurd.—Nation.

IT IS ANNOUNCED that a Philadelphia inventor has discovered a new mechanical force, which, named for its discoverer, is called the "Keeley Motor." An instrument of moderate dimensions, called a "multiplier," is fed with a small quantity of water; and from this water and the air there is developed a force of wonderful power, whose nature would seem to resemble the expansive power exerted by a condensed gas, and whose energy is measured by tons per square inch. If one-tenth of what is claimed for this motor be true, we are on the brink of a revolution equal to that which was brought about by the introduction of the steam-engine. Steam and water-power will become valueless, coal will be in demand only for domestic and metallurgical purposes; and waterfalls will be left in their native wildness, where the lover of Nature can enjoy their beauty unscarred by the workshops of men. It is not yet time to pass on the merit of this invention, the sight of which has as yet been accorded only to a privileged few; but there is one thing which we may be certain of—it does not develop a remarkable mechanical energy without the expenditure of an equivalent amount of fuel of some kind, and the success or failure of the motor, assuming it to be an honest invention, will depend upon the cheapness of this fuel. The conservation of forces is as much a physical fact as the inertia of matter; neither force nor matter can be created or destroyed—the most that can be done is to make an exchange of equivalents. The fuel consumed chemically in cells of the battery is as essential to the telegraph or the electric engine as is the fuel consumed by the fire in a locomotive fire-box; and, in the same way, the "Keeley Motor" is either an ingenious mechanical fraud, or a device by which some new method of consuming fuel is applied to produce mechanical results.—Nation.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 24.

J. Russ, Jr., 75 cents; A. Forbes, $1.45; W. D. LeSueur, $3.50; Roberts Bros., $3; D. M. Bennett, 50 cents; Lewis Whitcover, $2; A. Bate, $1.80; E. Rees, 85 cents; A. A. Hedge, $3.50; Maest & Ross, $4.65; H. L. Higginson, $3; H. S. Mason, $1.20; Geo. B. Wheeler, 30 cents; N. B. Guernsey, $1; M. A. Kirschmidt, $4.40; D. C. White, 35 cents; C. D. Childs, $3.20; H. H. Everts, $1.85; E. Towle, $1.50; M. F. Whitehead, $3.20; W. B. Gray, $1.75; John Bentley, $3.20; J. D. White, $3; E. Crosby, $3.20; J. C. Fargo, $1.60; R. G. Titcomb, $3.20; Jacob Reedy, $3.20; N. T. Allen, $3.20; M. Houghton, $3.20; Fred. Miller, $3.20; Samuel Townsend, $3.20; R. L. Houghton, $4.40; Chas. Hamilton, $3; E. D. Burleigh, $3.20; M. L. Cummings, $3.20; D. E. Ware, $3.20; H. S. Thomas, $1.62; Lucius Snow, 50 cents; J. C. Delano, $3.20; Werner Boecklin, $3.20; H. L. B. Bostwick, $3.15; D. Dunton, $3.20; J. W. Steward, 25 cents; J. J. Hoopes, $1.60; M. Curtis, $3.20; W. H. Kent, $3.20; Dr. Haegle, $3.20; W. P. Rogers, $1.60; S. J. Matthews, 75 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WHAT ARE YOU THINKING?

A POOR MAN'S POOR OPINION OF OUR MONEY SYSTEM.

What are you thinking, neighbor,
Who were so clear to see
A good chance, and to go for't,
Ahead of such as me?
You allus could make money,
And used to put things through;
You scarce stopped to be civil,
You had so much to do.

But now you're looking dreamy;
Your hands are by your side;
You stop—and turn—and saunter,—
You're waiting for the tide?
The tide flows in its season,
And it's what I want to know,
If you can give a reason
Why trade should ebb and flow?

The months are many as ever,
And keep increasin', too;
And hands are willin', neighbor,
But there's scarce a turn to do.
The cobbler can't buy clothing,
The tailor can't buy shoes;
And trade, you see, is dying
Of so many Nothing-to-dos.

And all for want of money,
That men can't eat nor wear!
I'll tell you what I'm thinkin'—
Excuse, sir, if I swear,—
I wish the damned invention
Sunk a thousand leagues at sea,
So trade would be unburdened,
And common sense set free.

D'y'e s'pose the honest people
Wouldn't find the honest way,
And the cobbler get his clothing,
And the tailor have his pay?
D'y'e s'pose that trade would suffer
'Cause the usurer didn't thrive—
Him that's sucked the blood of labor
Till its skercely left alive?

You cannot see my point, sir?
'Cause you're looking t'other way!
I wish you would look fairly
At what I try to say.
If 'money makes the mare go,'—
The thing we want to do,—
And by the self-same virtue,
It stops the critter too;

If your money-breeding money
So very ill behaves,
As to lift the few to luxury,
The many sink to slaves;
Till men, like wares, are measured
In dollars, cents, and dimes,
And the priest believes his Bible
To hide usury's worst of crimes,—

Then there's suthin' wrong with money,
Suthin' devilish, you may say;
And it's no particular wonder
There's just the devil to pay!
Say—mustn't a money system
That offers fortune's lure,
Fewer and richer make the wealthy,
More and poorer make the poor?

Yet it's said in all the papers,
If speculation starts,
'Twill move the hands of labor
In all our mills and marts.
'There'll be prosperous times next season,'
Says one, 'or I'm no seer;
And some will make their thousands;
Course, the people'll get a sheer.'

Not much. Some cunning schemers
May, like enough, get rich,
And want new silks and carpets,
And hats and boots and sitch;
And trade be set a-going—
Till the hats and boots are made;
And then—"the market's glutted!"
There's dearth of work and trade.

So speculation's see-saw
Keeps up its idle play
Over the back of labor,—
That's the "business" of to-day!
Paying Paul by robbing Peter
Is all it's ever done;
Poor labor bears the burden,
But never shares the fun.

Keep the people's pockets empty,
Count the toilers but as brutes,
And of course the market's glutted
With a few snobs' hats and boots.
Why not pay 'em, so that they, too,
Can buy your goods like men?
Make the buying thousands millions,
You won't glut the market then;

'Cause, when the working people
Get their sheer of what is done,
There'll be no sight for fortunes,
And men don't work for fun.
Don't think—the thought is impious!—
That, when Justice takes the lead,
There'll be shirking more than working—
Tyrant Waste for tyrant Greed.

Be the love of gold uprooted,
There'll be left the love of praise,
And this will bring the people
Into self-respecting ways.
The working day'll be shorter,
The worker's meed be more,
And joyful labor's chorus
Will charm both sea and shore.

But of such good times the chances
Are surely not right smart
While we're taught "the root of evil"
Springs nat'rally from the heart!
And if heaven threatened to tumble,
Or such a thing might be,
The usurer'd not knock under;
He'd rather wait and see!

I'll tell you what I'm thinking:
The nation's stultified!
Like a corpse, this cussed system
To its culprit back is tied;
In its dream of "making money,"
Its delirium of "per cent.,"
It drives like an idiot,
And seems on ruin bent.

O heavens! can't our wise ones
Unscale their eyes in time
To stay the fearful increase
Of poverty and crime,
Ere 'cumulated evils'
Come on us like a flood,
And the fiend of revolution
Is shrieking, "Bread or Blood"?

I. G. BLANCHARD.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 29, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
COIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

COL. HIGGINSON has handsomely withdrawn his charge that we made "an absolutely false statement" respecting his attitude towards "the anti-church-urruption agitation" [see THE INDEX of June 3], and has honorably expressed his regret for the misapprehension of our language which led to it. Reciprocally, we desire to express our own regret for having supposed that he intended his stricture for editorial notice on our part, which he says was not the case at all, and for having in consequence made public a little difference which would better have been settled privately, as it now has been. It was a case of misunderstanding on both sides, which, we rejoice to say, is now satisfactorily removed.

THIS very kind notice of THE INDEX is from the Newville (Pa.) Enterprise: "We have a warm friendship for the Boston INDEX, because every one of its articles (and it has a host of contributors and correspondents), though representing nearly every shade of opinion, betoken culture in every sentence, and because it furnishes a fund of information obtainable through few other sources. Its topics are: Religion in various phases, from Christian, extra-Christian, and anti-Christian standpoints; politics in its higher sense; science, as applied to the problem of man's existence and in its application to social life; and other matters connected therewith. We recommend it to the attention of religionists generally, and orthodox ministers particularly, not necessarily that they may adopt its views, but that they may understand and appreciate the aims and claims of Free Thought. Further information is given in an advertisement elsewhere."

CALL FOR THE SEPTEMBER CONVENTION.

We have just received the following communication from the Secretary of the Philadelphia Liberal League, respecting the preliminary Convention to be held in that city next September for the purpose of making arrangements for a general Convention of Liberals at the Centennial Exhibition of 1876. The following persons have been elected delegates to this preliminary Convention by the Philadelphia League: Isaac Rhen (President), John S. Dye (Secretary), Carrie S. Burnham, Damon Y. Kilgore, Jesse B. Beam. It will be recollected that delegates were appointed by the Boston Liberal League, at their meeting of May 7, as follows: F. E. Abbot (President), George A. Bacon (Secretary), A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee. The subjoined call is commended to the attention of all who favor such a movement:—

The Liberal Leagues throughout the country are cordially invited to send five delegates each to a Convention to be held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next, for the purpose of disseminating our principles and of making arrangements for a general Congress of Liberals to convene next year during the Centennial exhibition. It is very desirable that every Liberal League in America should be fully represented at the September Convention. Now is the time to work. The enemies of religious freedom are busy in preparing to utilize human ignorance and superstition for the strengthening and perpetuating of an organized system of mental repression, hostile alike to science, reason, and the right of private judgment in all matters of faith and conscience.

Let us endeavor to overcome ignorance by intelligence,—superstition by reason. Let each League send a full representation of men and women, so that from the combined wisdom of both sexes and all our societies we may be able to inaugurate a new era of impartial justice, perfect freedom, and scientific religion.

As soon as delegates are elected, Leagues are requested to notify the undersigned, and also THE INDEX.

JOHN S. DYE,

Sec'y Phila. Liberal League,

2527 Brown Street, Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22, 1875.

THE QUENCHED STAR.

The press has treated Mr. Beecher, from the first attack of Mrs. Woodhull down to the present time, with extraordinary tenderness. It forbore almost universally to take any notice of the original indictment; with rare exceptions, it gave him the benefit of the doubt all through the feverish and bitter outbreak of last summer; it gave him every advantage during the progress of the six months' trial which has lately ended in a disagreement of the jury, nine in his favor to three against him. No other man would have received treatment which was, on the whole, so lenient; and this fact is due to the just influence of a reputation which had stood second to none among the great names of the last twenty years. Who wished to believe evil of a man whose name was one of the treasures of the generation? There was no right-minded man in the country who did not hope sincerely to see Henry Ward Beecher shake off the toils that seemed gathered about him, and come forth with the added splendor of an absolute and indisputable vindication of his spotlessness. Such, at least, was the earnest desire of THE INDEX, as its columns prove.

Pending the trial—indeed, so long as there appeared to be any probability of fresh light being thrown on the facts,—we refrained from making any comments on this miserable "scandal." It was an unsavory mess to meddle with; the certainty that there were lying and perjury of the most desperate description on one side or the other, and apparently on both, rendered all comment of ours useless and perhaps unfair; the delicacy, perplexity, and unspeakable sadness of the whole case made patient waiting the plain duty of all who were possessed of no accurate knowledge of the facts or persons concerned. But it now seems unlikely that any further data will be given to the public for the present, though it will not surprise us in the least if unexpected and important revelations shall be made at some future time. That both parties have preserved silence as to very important facts (e. g., the nature and grounds of Henry C. Bowen's charges) is clear enough, and they may yet prove morally conclusive to all minds. As the case now stands, however, we feel called upon to give our own opinion here on the main issue.

Briefly, it is this: that the evidence, while not sufficient to convict Mr. Beecher legally, is yet sufficient to produce moral conviction in an unprejudiced mind that he is guilty of adultery. This is a conclusion which we have wished and hoped not to form; but it has been forced upon us despite all prepossessions in his favor. Many considerations have contributed to it, but none more than these:—

1. Three witnesses—Theodore Tilton, Francis D. Moulton, Mrs. Moulton,—have sworn that Mr. Beecher explicitly confessed adultery to them. Judge Neilson, in his charge, dismissed the theory of "conspiracy" and "black-mail" as untenable and utterly unworthy of notice. Against the concurrent testimony of three witnesses, therefore, we have only the defendant's word. What is it worth?

2. If throughout this wretched business Mr. Beecher had shown a high and strict regard for truth, we should have been inclined to accept his unsupported statement as conclusive. But he has not.

In the first place, he had confessedly made himself for years a party to "devices" which were in fact nothing but a series of tricks, frauds, and lies to deceive the public, and for which he must bear the responsibility just as much as the other parties to them.

In the next place, on the outbreak of last summer, Mr. Beecher made in his "card" of July 22 this astounding declaration, to which we called attention in THE INDEX of August 6, 1874: "My published correspondence on this subject comprises but two elements,—the expression of my grief and that of my desire to shield the honor of a pure and innocent woman." This was the bold-faced denial of a third element which the whole world saw at a glance in his then "published correspondence": namely, a profound, acute, and agonizing REMORSE. It was an attempt, to which desperation alone could possibly have prompted him, to cover up a fact as patent as the sun at noonday, and to induce the public to interpret his letters as containing no remorse at all. But in his "statement" to the Investigating Committee dated August 13, 1874, he was compelled, by the loud and universal demand for an explanation of this denied but obtrusively evident remorse, to admit it and assign a cause for it (utterly lame and inadequate, at the best), as follows: "I felt convicted of slander in its meanest form. . . . While I rejected this memorandum [the Apology or Contrition letter] as my work or an accurate condensation of my statement, it does undoubtedly correctly represent that I was in profound sorrow, and that I blamed myself with great severity for the disasters of the Tilton family. . . . There was much there that weighed heavily on my heart and CONSCIENCE which now weighs only on my heart. . . . No mother who has lost a child but will understand the wild accusations," etc., etc. Similarly, Mr. Beecher confessed on the witness stand and elaborately strove to account for the penitence, contrition, and remorse which he at first had precipitately hastened to deny.

Again, his statements as to his health have been hopelessly clashing. In the paper above quoted, he says: "In my letter to Mrs. Tilton, I alluded to the fact that I did not expect, when I saw her last, to be alive many days. This statement stands connected with a series of symptoms, which I first experienced in 1856. . . . I very seriously thought I was going to have apoplexy or paralysis, or something of the kind. On two or three occasions, while preaching, I should have fallen in the pulpit if I had not held to the table; very often I came near falling in the streets. During the last fifteen years I have gone into the pulpit, I suppose a hundred times, with a very strong impression that I should never come out of it alive. . . . In December, 1870, the sudden shock of these troubles brought on again those symptoms in a more violent form. . . . During the last four years these symptoms had been repeatedly brought on by my intense work, carried forward on the underlying basis of so much sorrow and trouble. My friends will bear witness that in the pulpit I have very frequently alluded to my expectation of sudden death. I feel that I have been more than once already near a stroke that would have killed or paralyzed me, and I carry with me now, as I have so often carried, in years before this trouble began, the daily thought of death as a door which might open for me, at any moment, out of all cares and labors into a more welcome rest. . . . There are intimations at the beginning and end of this letter [to Moulton] that I felt the approach of death. With regard to that I merely refer to my previous statement concerning my bodily symptoms, and that on this day I felt the symptoms upon me." Now these statements were written on August 13, 1874, and affirm the fact of physical symptoms, such as almost falling in the pulpit and on the streets, as the ground of his apprehensions; and at that date he expressed the belief that he had actually been more than once near a fatal "stroke." Yet on March 17, 1874, about five months previously, he had indorsed and signed a physician's report of an examination of his physical condition, appended to an application for a life insurance policy, in which these questions were asked: "Are the functions of the brain and nervous system in a healthy state? Yes. Has the party any predisposition, either hereditary or acquired, to any constitutional disease? No." When interrogated on the witness stand, April 21, respecting this denial of all disease in his application for insurance and his inconsistent declarations of five months later, Mr. Beecher tried to explain away the physical symptoms he had recounted, as being mere groundless impressions: "You actually at the time had impressions that your life was precarious, and would come to an end, had you not? Very strong. Now did you ascertain that those impressions were the symptoms and came from nervous exhaustion, and were not supported by any facts concerning your health? I did, sir, most thoroughly." From all which it appears that on March 17, 1874, when Mr. Beecher desired to obtain a life insurance policy, he concluded that his fears of sudden death were utterly groundless, mere mental hallucinations not worth even mentioning to his medical examiner; but that on August 13, 1874, when he desired to explain away apparently suspicious references to contemplated suicide, he could still assert that he had had dangerous physical symptoms of apoplexy continuing during fifteen years down to that date, and therefore covering the period when he had sworn to a contrary state of facts.

It is unnecessary to cite other instances of a melancholy tampering with truth which destroys the right of Mr. Beecher's word to that absolute confidence which alone could make it outweigh the explicit and uncontradicted testimony of three witnesses as to his own confessions of adultery. No adequate motive for this testimony, if false, on the part of the Moultons, has been alleged. It must not be overlooked that Judge Neilson, in his charge to the jury, ruled out the supposition of "conspiracy" on their part as wholly baseless in the evidence, and that he said of Mrs. Moulton in particular: "Her manner on the stand, and the opinion which the defendant himself had of her moral character and worth, as stated in his letters, commend her to your respect." Mr. Beecher's word, therefore, is in one scale of the balance, and the word of three non-conspiring witnesses in the other; and we are sorry to say that the former has not the weight which his enthusiastic partisans attribute to it, and which is absolutely necessary to his vindication.

The review of the whole trial by the New York Times of July 3 fully deserves, in our opinion, the commendation thus bestowed upon it by the Nation of July 8: "The case has been reviewed, evidently by a master-hand, in the New York Times of Saturday last, and nowhere else adequately that we know of. We strongly advise any one who wishes to get a clear view of the evidence and its bearings to read that able statement. It leaves nothing worth saying to be said, and its conclusions, as far as they go, are those which we believe will be those of every careful and intelligent man a month hence. Nowhere else have the important points been extracted and set out in a clear light." The chief conclusions arrived at in this article of the Times are briefly these:—

1. That the real accusers of Mr. Beecher are not Theodore Tilton and the Moultons, but Mrs. Tilton and Mr. Beecher himself. "It is these two persons who have supplied the evidence which has produced the deepest impression upon the public mind."

2. That the original charge was adultery, which was met by Mr. Beecher in a manner exactly the reverse of that in which an innocent man must have met it, and that his conduct all through was a practical confession of guilt.

3. That there have been eight different replies to the charge made by the defence; but that all the eight are disproved by the evidence, and disprove each other.

On the main question, therefore, we are constrained to believe Henry Ward Beecher guilty of adultery; and we believe that this opinion will spread and prevail at last, unless new evidence of a most extraordinary kind is introduced at some future time. It is a conclusion that brings less pain than would be the case, if a contrary conclusion would suffice to maintain our old respect for Mr. Beecher. But, alas, on no hypothesis does his conduct seem upright, truthful, brave, manly, or decent; and no hypothesis now can save his character with the discerning part of mankind. The dust and clamor of those who are interested to sustain him will not avail to cloud the vision of the great outside world. Despite all temporary seeming, Henry Ward Beecher is dead.

Next week we shall republish the article of the New York Times above referred to, and state editorially some conclusions we have arrived at respecting the general influence of the "Scandal."

AMERICAN DEMOCRACY.

In reading the account of the Centennial celebration at Cambridge, one could hardly help being struck by the reactionary and hopeless feeling in regard to free institutions, expressed by the orator of the day and the President of the college, in contrast with the hopeful and manly utterances of the city orator on the Fourth of July.

Is it the influence of classical studies to lead men to glorify the past at the expense of the present, or does this tendency come from a mediæval disposition to doubt of all good in human nature?

The "awful experiment" in government which we are trying, according to President Eliot, and the doubt of Dr. Peabody whether such a man as Washington could now be elected President, are notes of the same tune; and it is one well fitted to depress and dishearten true patriotism, whose root is faith in human nature and human progress.

I can see nothing "awful" in the experiment which we are trying of a universal enlightened democracy. It is a grand experiment, and liable to fail of immediate success from the very largeness and completeness of the problem to be worked out. President Eliot says: "Our country is a Paradise under the shadow of swords." Will he point out a century of history under any other than a free government with less of bloodshed than ours? And the darkest spot in our century's life, the terrible civil war, came from that other experiment, which might truly be called "awful," of trying to compromise right and wrong, and maintain slavery in the midst of a free people. Was it Harvard College, or men who stood in Congress, who were foremost in the protest for the right which conquered in that struggle?

It is a curious question for an American to ask:

"Could Washington be now elected to the Presidency?" when within fifteen years a man like Abraham Lincoln, having the integrity and patriotism of Washington, but with far less of his personal advantages, was elected to the Presidency for two terms, though he had to run counter to the most excited prejudices of the people.

It seems to us this wholesale belittling of our own times and country is paralyzing to the moral energies. The contempt thrown upon public officials tends to perpetuate corruption in office. What we especially need is a high standard of moral truth and purity, and the demand upon our young men to come up to it.

I lately heard a discussion before a Social Science Association, in which gentlemen indulged in the same train of remark, that it was impossible for a man to succeed in politics by a noble and manly course. Nobility and manliness never have smooth sailing all the way through; they could not show their quality if they did, any more than a pilot could get a reputation for bringing in his vessels in clear weather with a favorable wind. But the history of American politics shows, as plainly as all other records of God's Providence, "that he who loveth his life shall lose it, and he who hateth it for the sake of the right shall save it." When John F. Hale, in the State of New Hampshire, then trodden under foot by the worst form of Democratic party tyranny, dared to take his stand against party, he seemed to throw away every chance of political success; but there was virtue enough in New Hampshire to send him to the Senate. When he was taunted that he "stood alone," he made the grand reply which will be remembered when all party triumphs are forgotten: "I came here to stand alone." But soon Sumner stood beside him, who had also "ruined himself" into the Senate.

Our history shows, as all history shows, that cunning, time-serving, selfishness, adherence to party right or wrong, will get its reward in immediate payment of very small coin; but that here, as everywhere under God's moral government, integrity, devotion to right, and unselfish labor for great ends will have sacrifices to make and hardships to endure, but will have the constant encouragement of self-respect, and the ultimate triumph of recognition and true success. The poor boy who determines to have Jim Fiske's millions will be very apt to try his methods; but he will also be likely to have his final end. But he may, like Amos Lawrence, achieve pecuniary success by honest means, and use it for noble purposes. Hypocrisy, which professes to be better than it is, is contemptible enough; but it at least has the merit of acknowledging virtue and paying her tribute, though in false coin. But the present fashionable bravado of holding up vice and crime as popular and desirable things is a far more poisonous and dangerous tendency. To expect good things of the young is the first stimulus towards their performance, and he who holds out the idea that the virtues of integrity, patriotism, chastity, and truth are buried in the graves of the fathers is not likely to assist at their resurrection.

It was hoped that the choice of a young man for President of Harvard College would check its reactive spirit, and give it a new impulse towards liberal thought and heroic life. All must recognize the impetus which has been given to its material prosperity and the elevation of its standard of scholarship. But we yet look in vain to see in it that evidence of new faith and hope in humanity which shall make it the leader of the vigorous young life and thought of our country.

E. D. C.

PRISON DISCIPLINE.

Two or three weeks ago, some remarks were made by me in these columns on "Crime and Criminals." It was there stated that the problem before society for solution is to find some method of prison discipline which shall restrain the actual criminal, deter the probable criminal, and reform the prisoner; and it was added that the true solution of the problem of criminality would accomplish all these objects harmoniously and effectually. Nothing was said in this statement about punishment as such for the criminal; though to many minds this covers the whole extent of the problem.

But this omission was designed. For what is called punishment, so far as it may be legitimately applied at all, must come within one of the purposes named. It must be of the nature of discipline looking towards the reformation of the criminal, or calculated for actually deterring him and others from similar crime. But punishment in the sense of inflicting retribution for a past offence, punishment that does not embrace the future good both of the individual trespasser and of society, punishment that consists merely in paying back suffering to the offender for his offence, on the principle of stripe for stripe, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth,—all this is of the nature of barbarism, and should have become obsolete before now in civilized society. It has its source in the principle of vengeance. With the great processes of Nature, every transgression of law brings by natural consequence some kind of retribution; but there is no infliction of suffering merely as an arbitrary penalty. The laws of retribution are laws also of healing and redemption. So man is made by Nature to suffer for his errors, not so much for the sake of appeasing a law already broken, as that he, and others through him, may learn to keep the law. If society, in dealing with its offenders, will keep close to these principles of Nature, it will find the true path. On these principles it may restrain offenders; it may lock them up in prison as a measure of self-protection; it may use methods of compulsion on prisoners so far as they may be necessary for preserving order and discipline; but these measures must all be justified on the ground of their use in protecting society and of reforming the criminal. The line that separates these objects from motives of vengeance must not be passed by civilized society.

If we compare the common methods of treating criminals with these requirements, which seem to be demanded alike by reason, justice, and humanity, we cannot fail to see that the established modes of prison discipline fall very short of the purpose. In truth, in the present administration of the prison system, very little is done that aims at the reformation of the criminal at all; and very little that aims, except in a very indirect and ineffective way, even at the protection of society. Penalty, apportioned in a very loose way to the measure of past offence, is rather the principle on which prison discipline is administered. These penalties having been inflicted, the prisoners go loose again without any thought on the part of society whether they are more fit for liberty than before, or any care to prevent their falling again into criminal ways. As to reforming the criminal, a good many people are ready to say that it is all chimerical, and deprecate the adoption of means for such an end, as only the product of a weak and vicious sentimentalism. But in fact, this question of reformation has not yet been fairly tested. The system of criminal treatment, even where it is best, needs much remodelling before it can be said to aim earnestly at the two objects of reforming the criminal and protecting society.

In the United States, as well as in most countries of the world, the penal system is at present in a particularly unsatisfactory condition, because it is neither the one thing nor the other. Public opinion is in a state of transition on the subject, passing from the view that the penalty is for vengeance, or at least for the sole purpose of striking terror to the wrong-doer, to the view that it is for the good of the offender and of society. A wiser and humaner sentiment is coming in; yet the laws and the prison establishments are generally based on the old sentiment, and the two do not work well together. The new sentiment must bring new modes and institutions. It cannot work successfully through the old. It cannot, for instance, keep the death-penalty for murder on the statute book, and then save the murderer from the gallows by some flimsy plea of insanity or imbecility. It cannot commit a forger or swindler to hard labor in prison, and then out of compassion, in view of his previous position in society, mitigate his sentence by giving him an easy place, or pardon him out and restore him to the opportunities and privileges of an upright citizen. It is not thus that true humanity will work. It must aim at real reformation of character, and not primarily at restoration to society. Restoration to society should be made dependent on clear evidences of moral reformation, and not on the fact that certain penalties have been borne or remitted by executive pardon.

It is probable, indeed, that under the solution of the problem of dealing with crime which a wise humanity will bring, great criminals will be kept more in confinement than now, and all criminals more than now under the supervision of society. By the principle of indeterminate sentences, and by the establishment of transition institutions for those who show signs of reformation, where they can earn a living and be gradually prepared for restoration to full liberty,—by these methods, combined with education both to letters and labor, under the care of wise and humane superintendence, society may both lift up its criminal class and protect itself from their violence.

W. J. P.

TWO SUNDAY VISITS.

Quite recently, kind fortune has permitted me to vary the monotony of city life and office drudgery, by flying visits to two of the loveliest villages in New England. She has further augmented my pleasure by bringing me into the society of exceedingly pleasant people in both places, and face to face with two Sunday meetings of cordial and intelligent liberals.

The first of these places was South Manchester, Connecticut. This village was founded and builded by the enterprise and industry of the Cheney Brothers, who carry on there the largest silk manufactory in the United States. Theirs is one of the old families of Connecticut. Both their father and grandfather before them were men of noted character, distinguished for sound judgment and remarkable liberality, for those days, of religious opinion. When all the rest of their neighbors were Orthodox to the core, these two men, with great bravery and fidelity, stood in succession for breadth and toleration in religion. The consequence is that their descendants are even more liberal, and that they have organized on the spot where their fathers lived a community founded on liberal and enlightened principles; containing many prosperous and happy families, and a degree of neatness, good order, thrift, and elegance which are rarely to be seen in any manufacturing village.

Among other means of amusement and instruction, which the Messrs. Cheney have liberally provided for themselves and the people in their employ, is a large, substantial, and elegant Hall which contains, besides other rooms, a commodious auditorium and a stage fitted up with all the necessary appointments for a theatre. Here, during the week, are held all those meetings of a literary, benevolent, reformatory, and diverting character, such as a community of that kind would naturally desire and undertake. Here, too, on Sundays, is held a religious meeting which is free to all who will attend; and which is quite largely attended by those whose wants are not met either at the Methodist or Catholic church, both of which the liberality of the Messrs. Cheney has assisted to build in their village. This Sunday meeting at the Hall is free in more than the pecuniary sense. It enlists the interest of one class of believers only. The audience which assembles there ranges through all phases of belief from Orthodox to Radical. And the same variety is found in the speakers who are invited to occupy the platform. The Sunday previous to that on which it was my pleasure to address the meeting, Rev. Dr. Peabody of Cambridge was the speaker,—and the good doctor represents the very essence of Christian conservatism. Strange to say, the Orthodox deacon who conducts the Sunday-school, which holds its session directly after the morning meeting, found much in both discourses to approve. He was seen also nodding his head with evident approbation of the remarks which he himself invited me subsequently to make to the Sunday-school,—albeit I spoke to the boys and girls simply of natural religion, as indeed I had spoken to their elders. But in both cases the religion inculcated was so natural, that the worthy deacon could not discover its heterodoxy. May he never learn to be less unsuspicious and sensible, or find that the naturalism to which he gave willing ear shall ever lead him from the true salvation!

I confess that it gave me unusual pleasure to speak to such an audience of various believers, and to know that they all were ready to listen respectfully to any doctrine which might be honestly and reverently taught. It must be in the spirit of truth that such an audience abides; and to have the spirit of truth is, perhaps, better than to have the truth itself: certainly it is better than to be complacent in the thought that the truth is alone in our possession. I was glad, moreover, to see that this diversity of belief did not prevent all these people from working together in the Sunday-school, where, as I understood, life more than doctrine is the subject generally treated upon. It is the liberality of the Cheney Brothers, I believe, which chiefly if not solely supports these meetings; at any rate they would not be sustained, if these large-hearted gentlemen did not lend their indispensable assistance. In my judgment, they show their greater wisdom by exhibiting such breadth and toleration in inviting men of various phases of belief to occupy their platform, than they would if they sedulously sought each Sunday to impose either radicalism or conservatism upon the people whom they as freely welcome to their hospitable Hall. Free religion does not mean any one's religion in particular, but every one's in order; it means the right of each to hold his religion in freedom, and to compare it as often as he wishes with that of his neighbor.

A few score of miles directly north of this village of South Manchester, right up the charming valley of the Connecticut River, is another village equally lovely and remarkable in many similar respects. This is the village of Florence, in Massachusetts. Here, too, we find silk manufacturing on a large scale, though in this case it is the silk thread instead of the cloth. Here, also, the spirit of liberalism has found a sure abode, and is again the foundation and promotion of remarkable prosperity and happiness. Florence, so far as the course of progress and reform is concerned, is indeed historic ground. Contemporaneously with the establishment of the Brook-Farm Community in this immediate vicinity, a similar community was established in Florence, which flourished for about five years, and was then given up solely for lack of capital to keep it going. But it continued long enough to plant some fine seed of liberalism, which since has borne fruit in another form.

Mr. S. L. Hill was one of the originators in Florence of the Community of which I have made mention. He is an enlightened, liberal, and wealthy gentleman; and he—in connection with Mr. A. T. Lilly, equally broad in his views, and also blessed and blessing with generous means, beside a few other earnest coöperators—was chiefly instrumental in forming the "Free Congregational Society of Florence." This society has recently erected a building for its uses, to which has been given the felicitous and significant name of "Cosmian Hall." Like the Hall erected by the Messrs. Cheney, this is an honor to its builders and an ornament to the village. From its noble and lofty tower is to be seen a country as broad and fair in its every feature as are the sentiments and ideas which from week to week are inculcated under its ample roof. In this Hall, two Sundays after I had been in South Manchester, it was my privilege to speak; and I felt that on no two Sundays of my life had my privilege been greater,—inasmuch as in both cases the audience was composed of as untrammelled people as could well be brought together, who listened and judged with rare impartiality.

In the morning, at Cosmian Hall, the Sunday-school meets, and holds an eminently interesting and sensible service. First, a song; which is usually chosen from J. Vila Blake's excellent little song-book entitled The Morning Stars. Then the superintendent (who is a lady) reads any selection which she may have prepared. Another song follows; after which the class lessons are in order. Each class retires to the place allotted to it, which is some private room, or quiet nook in the general Sunday-school apartment. There is an adult class which discusses every Sunday some subject of its own adoption. There is also a class in book-keeping, another in drawing, another in German; also various other classes engaged in such studies as they may severally select. After the class lessons, the whole school reunites in the large room, where miscellaneous exercises are gone through with for about an hour. The boys and girls "speak pieces," read selections, and sing songs. Then the adults try their hand, or their head, at making short addresses. One excellent man, on the day in question, devoted his neat little speech to a condemnation of the practice of chewing gum,—an extremity of reform which somewhat surprised and not a little amused me. But these Florentines are extremely discriminating as to what they both chew and swallow, and nothing goes down with them that they are not sure is good for the system—physical, intellectual, or moral.

In the afternoon, the regular Sunday Meeting is held in the upper hall, which seats about four hundred and fifty, and which is usually well filled. The Cosmians, also, are hospitable to a great variety of speakers; welcoming, so far as theology and sociology are concerned, black, white, and speckled. But they hold together, nevertheless; their unity of spirit in their diversity of belief being a tie which is sufficiently strong to unite them. They, too, have a large stage adapted to theatrical purposes, and every convenience throughout the building for combining amusement with instruction. They are, indeed, a happy family, and dwell together in the beauty of harmony and peace. They have engaged Mr. D. H.

Clark, of New Milford, Pa., to come and live among them—not as a pastor, but as a friend and co-worker; to assist in taking care of their Sunday-school, to look after their general interests, and occasionally to occupy their platform. We found the memory of Rowland Connor, their former speaker for two years, cherished warmly and tenderly among them; as also that of his wife. Mr. Charles C. Burleigh, the veteran and eloquent anti-slavery reformer, who for years has honored Florence by making it his home, still lives among his Cosmian friends, hale and hearty. Long may they all live; and long may these two lone citadels of the broadest liberalism stand in the Connecticut Valley, to cheer and encourage the hearts of all true liberals throughout the land!

In this connection, I am glad of the opportunity to say, that the Florence Society have recently listened with great interest to Mr. S. P. Putnam, and that they cordially recommend him as a worthy fellow and efficient speaker to every other liberal organization.

A. W. S.

Communications.

"TURNING THE OTHER CHEEK."

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Although a "stranger in the camp," I desire to say a few words on your article of July 8, on "Turning the Other Cheek," and consequently of the letter of F. B. Perkins accompanying it.

Because your criticisms of the Sermon on the Mount go deeper than Christianity as a doctrine, and because the result of Mr. Beecher's attempts to practise the Sermon's ethics, as reported by Mr. Perkins, is a slander on the human sense, and hence the divine knowledge of Jesus, I wish to be heard. I cannot think you would have us believe that you adopt the present status of Mr. Beecher as the legitimate result of trying to practise Christ's teachings. Nor can you in justice to yourself condemn those grand principles of "ethical wisdom," because Christ said, "Love your enemies."

Free religion, as I understand it, is absolute religion; and, if it mean anything, it means the purpose of being and doing right, because it is right. The spirit of the Sermon on the Mount is just that one principle of absolute right. "If ye love them that love you, what do ye more than others?" There is a prudential motive in that. The Orthodox do as much! You must do more. You who lean on the Absolute; you who have learned God direct, who see the "beauty of holiness," must not only love those who love you, but you must love all mankind. You must hate no one; must be as loath to wrong your enemy as your friend. Why? Because ye are God's, and "he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good." God can wrong no one; nor can you if you be his children. Because 'tis right. And yet, the reverse side of your creed—judging from your strictures on such principles as "hate not your enemies"—would seem to be, simply, the law of give-and-take; a bundle of prudence—so far "do right as it pays. More than that would make you a 'milkop.'"

No! Jesus was the most manly of men.

Furthermore, it would be manifestly unjust to condemn Christ's morals, taking a single sentence or discourse as the basis; for you forget his fiery indignation against the spoilers of the Temple, and his scathing denunciations of pharisees and hypocrites.

Now of Mr. Perkins' letter: Did Mr. Beecher practice the Sermon's ethics? When charged with a revolting crime of which he was innocent, did the command "love your enemies" induce him to skulk away in mortal terror, without even the manly word, "I am innocent"? And when appealed to by Mrs. Bradshaw, a parishioner and a loving friend, as to whether she should believe the "awful story" told her by Mr. Tilton, did Christ's "do good to them that hate you" keep him from disabusing her mind and relieving her heart of the awful weight of doubt and suspicion that was resting upon it? Or, when Dr. Storrs made an earnest and innocent defence of Mr. Beecher, and denounced his accusers and the plotters against his character, did the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount inspire him to write to Moulton, "That speech ought to damn Storrs"?

In short, does his whole course of action, as proven in the trial, agree or harmonize at all with the most transcendental construction of Jesus' most extravagant utterances?

And doesn't it accord perfectly with guilty human nature,—confessing, resisting, appealing, denying, following naturally simple human emotions?

And now, Mr. Abbot, with all deference and respect, doesn't your anti-Christian leaning lead you to adopt Mr. Beecher's case as the natural result of trying to practise Christ's teachings, and thereby strike at more than Christianity,—even at the foundation of all virtue and religion?

Theodore Parker says: "There are many ways in which Christ may be denied: one is that of the bold blasphemer, who, out of a base and haughty heart, mocks, scoffing at that manly man, and spits upon the nobleness of Christ. There are few such deniers; my heart mourns for them. But they do little harm. Religion is so dear to men, no scoffing word can silence that. And the brave soul of this young Nazarene has made itself so deeply felt, that scorn and mockery of him are but an icicle held up against the summer's sun. There is another way to deny him; and that is, to call him Lord, and never do his bidding; to stifle free minds with his words; and, with the authority of his name, to cloak, to mantle, screen, and consecrate the follies, errors, sins, of men. From this we have much to fear." 'Tis of this last denial that I write; 'tis against THE INDEX lending itself to godless Christians, helping them deny their Christ, that I protest.

With all good wishes,

I am most respectfully yours,

WM. S. PARKER.

WASHINGTON, Pa., July 12, 1875.

[Mr. Parker has misapprehended us. On the hypothesis of entire innocence of adultery, Mr. Beecher's course has been weak, unmanly, and false in the extreme; and our point was that, if this course was the result of following the "Christian theory" (as Mr. Perkins, and not we, originally claimed), then the "Christian theory" stands condemned by it, as productive of weakness, unmanliness, and falsehood. Further, the Sermon on the Mount, we held, could not be obeyed without the destruction of character; for to change it before obeying it (as all men do practically) is to disobey it, while obeying it without change would involve the same melancholy cowardice and meanness into which Mr. Beecher, even if innocent of adultery, has fallen. His silence to Mrs. Bradshaw was part and parcel of that same "policy of silence" which Mr. Perkins attributes to his fidelity in following the "Christian theory." If Mr. Beecher had denounced and defied Tilton at the start, he would have acted like an honest heathen, instead of "turning the other cheek" as the Sermon on the Mount prescribes. It was a case for a little judicious heathenism, and nothing else.—ED.]

NON-RESISTANCE.

NEW BEDFORD, July 11, 1875.

MR. EDITOR:—

Communications for your small-sized journal ought to be pithy, to the point, and as full of sense as an "egg is of meat." So I have boiled down to a concentrated statement this one.

1. You say (July 8), criticising F. B. Perkins' communication to the Boston Daily Advertiser: "If Mr. Perkins is right, then H. W. Beecher's natural character as a manly man has rotted absolutely away." And you say this, because Mr. Beecher is represented as being governed by the rule, "Bless and curse not"; "resist not evil, but requite evil with good"; and you make yourself understood as standing thus:—

If an insult, wrong, or false accusation is made against a person, it is the duty of that person to follow up the same by attack on the perpetrator, instead of "living down" the vile scandal.

What I want to know is, are you misunderstood?

2. By the way, if, as you say, the "terrible and withering severity" against Christianity, in what Mr. Perkins says, "turks unperceived," how did you find it out? Very respectfully,

W. HATCH.

[1. We wish to be understood as distinctly disavowing the principle of non-resistance, moral and physical, but have said nothing to justify the supposition that we favor "attack" on anybody. The right of self-defence we hold to be absolutely precious, though unrecognized by Christianity.

2. "Unperceived" by Mr. Perkins, of course.—ED.]

NOTES ON EVOLUTION.

The philosophy of evolution, as its name implies, is itself evolving with time, and by numerous and various thinkers is being brought from a highly probable hypothesis to an impregnable position as certain truth.

Evolution may be traced as resting partially on three simple laws; namely, aggregation, concentration, and permutation.

Firstly, as to aggregation; the economy of social union finds its primary, abstract statement in Euclid, where he says that like solids increase in mass as the cube of like dimensions, and in surface only as the square.

The largest ships and engines are, therefore, most economical, as presenting less resisting surface proportionately to capacity than small ones; very large cities can be best managed municipally, as London and Paris. A vast empire costs less in government than several small ones aggregating the same territory and population.

Accordingly those tribes in the past, wherein sociality was strongest and fullest, were, other things equal, fittest to survive.

And the present loss and discomfort of keeping up small, isolated homes, with separate market-goings, cooking, warming, &c., shall disappear when people can trust each other more, and agree better than now.

Secondly, concentration favors development. Twenty pendulums without resistance might vibrate forever, and never show other than that motion in an arc; but a concentration of the motion of three of them may cause one to gradually increase its amplitude of vibration until it rotates in a circle,—a new and distinct motion, illustrating how a difference in degree may by insensible increments become a difference in kind.

On the same principle, in the physiological division of labor, organisms have progressed by concentrating separate functions at particular points, instead of performing all, everywhere, as a polyp does.

A specialist, devoting his life to a single science, achieves a success impossible in a social state of generally averaged culture and employment; and his results become common property for general good.

Thirdly, the laws of permutation show why, as types advance, the gap ever widens between the highest individual and the next.

The numbers 1 to 6, inclusive, yield $1 \times 2 \times 3 \times 4 \times 5 \times 6 = 720$ permutations; the addition of another integer, 7, increases them to $720 \times 7 = 5,040$; and with the addition of every successive integer the permutations are multiplied by the total number of integers.

Two individuals, with nineteen and twenty faculties respectively, may thus differ in possible variety of thought, and therefore in mental power, as one and twenty; hence we can understand the immense difference in primates, between ape and man; and in mankind between Newton and Shakspeare and the next below them.

In arts, the invention of a new one multiplies applications by the total number of arts; and hence the scientific progress of the past hundred years exceeds that of the previous thousand, and we may reasonably expect it to continue in the same ratio.

Some ardent evolutionists believe that progress is absolute; but this can scarcely be, for it would be unequal in Nature to disproporportion the relation between wants and satisfaction, in races or in ages; observation finds no such inequality, and the discrepancy between what may be imagined and what may be realized seems constant.

Uncommon progress in an individual is paid for very decidedly in the discordance and strife between inherited biases and acquired convictions and tastes.

The philosopher may still be uneasy in the dark, though ashamed of it; and, when in mortal danger, transmitted superstition and individually developed intellectual assurances may struggle severely for the mastery.

So excessive animal passions may be active in a mind fully aware of the dreadful results of indulgence; but it is one man fighting all his ancestors at once, and the contest often ends ingloriously.

Many ruptures of friendship in the family, and out of it, come of this unusual growth, and pay for it; parent and child, husband and wife, may have less and less in common as years elapse; for one may be fixed in thought and practice, and the other responsive to every onward impulse.

As a general rule, the better a thinker grows, the more does his circle of enjoyable acquaintance become narrowed.

Mr. W. R. Greg, in his Enigmas of Life, has expressed the fear that, as reproduction becomes more difficult and scanty as organisms increase in complexity, there is danger of the few best men being swamped by the many mediocre.

This fear deserves consideration; for while, within certain limits, superiority gives decided value to an individual, still, when the limits have been exceeded, evolution has very probably been retarded.

A key, in metaphor, is always something unlocking or unfolding the hidden; but this refers to only half the business of a key; it is also used to bind, lock up, and secrete.

So men exceptionally gifted in mind, and capable of unfolding the difficulties of Nature, when surrounded by masses of people too ignorant to appreciate their worth, have lent their talents to farther mystification, and hurt their fellows instead of helping them.

There is reason to believe that many eminent philosophers and churchmen have belonged to this sad category; and I have been led to think the same of some acute, intellectual men, whom I have seen in procession following the Host, with uncovered heads, on a hot summer day in Montreal.

Races and societies of men rise pretty much together, and the voice of Nature is not "Be your best," but "Be fit."

The limit to recognizable and efficient superiority becomes evident if we imagine Kepler suddenly to be found among the Sioux. We can believe that the world may not know some of its greatest men, for greatness is known only when allied with the talent or circumstances of publicity, and truths and theories beyond the comprehension of contemporaries have doubtless many times been spoken and recorded in vain.

Wycliffe and Huss came too soon to bring about a Reformation, though better and purer spirits than Luther.

Huyghens, the great Dutch philosopher, clearly propounded the undulatory theory of light; yet it was unnoticed in his times, and was re-discovered a century afterward, when the minds of scientific men had been graded up to receive it.

J. G. H.

MONTREAL, Canada.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS VERSUS THE GALLOWS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is a suggestive commentary on the claims set up for the power and efficacy of Christianity in correcting the morals of those within the sphere of its influence, that nearly all of the recent peculiarly diabolical murders that have been perpetrated in this vicinity were committed by men who were constant attendants at the "sanctuary." A favorite appeal of Christians to parents to send their children to Sunday-school is on the ground that, by not doing so, they are making their children subjects for the gallows. They would have us believe that the catechism is a sure antidote to depravity. But the cases of Pemberton, Piper, Sturtevant, Gordon, and Costley, must be discouraging samples. Pemberton attended the ministrations of Dr. Lorimer. On the Sunday of the week in which the community were shocked by the news of his fearful crime, Pemberton listened to the screaming of one of the doctor's most powerful sermons, the subject being the superiority of Protestantism over all other isms. Now a church that defended and approved the profligacies of Kalloch will tolerate no man in its pulpit who does not make sectarianism the major, and morality the minor, matter of his discourses; and consequently murder is now added to the list of crimes against which many will deem this church a frail defence. Piper, saturated with "Christian influences," a sub-actor in the sanctuary, who had heard "the only revelation of God's will" read through and through, and could explain to one's entire satisfaction how Jesus, though born without having a father, was, nevertheless, the son of David through Joseph his mother's husband, and probably verily believes, as every good Christian should, that Jesus arose from the grave after lying there two days in fulfilment of his promise to stay there three days. Nevertheless, while experiencing the exquisite enjoyment which the contemplation of these elevating and impressive truths afford, and with the hum of "God's word" and the catechism ringing in his ears, snatches a little girl from her guardian, and kills her; yet it is said that Mr. Pentecost thinks Piper sane! If he is sane, what do "Christian" privileges amount to?

Sturtevant, Gordon, and Costley were also graduates of the Sunday-school. Really, Mr. Editor, the objections to being known as a Christian are getting serious.

How can it be expected that Christianity will check crime, when it meets every natural aspiration to good endeavor with the jeer and taunt of being but "filthy rags," unless accompanied with the acceptance of the shocking absurdities of Christian dogmas? When Pemberton heard Dr. Lorimer scream that to abstain from murder would not be set down to one's credit, unless one simultaneously believed that Jesus could and would, in any suitable emergency, change water to wine, what wonder that his already feeble moral sense became still more confused.

Z.

RELIGION.

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, July 1, 1875.

There is nothing so much talked of, quarrelled over, and fought about, as religion. But notwithstanding all this, we hear it constantly sung,—

"'Tis religion that can give Sweetest pleasures while we live;
'Tis religion must supply
Solid comfort when we die;
And after death its joys shall be Lasting as eternity."

No wonder, then, that the man—I should say bigot—who believes this should fight for his religion; and no wonder that each tries to force his neighbor to accept his religion, for no other has such virtues in the opinion of each religionist. Here lies the great mistake and pity.

The answer to the question, What is religion? has often been attempted, but I think never yet given, to any thing like universal satisfaction. Will you let me try?

Religion is founded on facts and fancies. The first fact is the individual himself; other facts follow. The individual enjoys pleasures, and suffers pains; and I shall put as another fact, there is a God. By this, I mean there is a power which rules and governs all things according to law; this any one may call a fancy, if he pleases. All living persons have a future; it may be short, but it is certain.

Religion, in its germ, is the sensation of the individual which induces and compels him to believe, to feel, and act in the present, in such manner as will (in his opinion) draw blessings or happiness upon his head from the God I have named, or his God, in the future, no matter how long or short that future may be.

The fancies to which I refer are such as men entertain as to the nature of God; his manner of government; as to what they shall believe and do to please God, and draw blessing on themselves in the future; the length and nature of the future, etc., etc. I suppose all will admit that each individual might do in the present what would make him happy or miserable in the future. Religion having started from the sensation I have named, seeks to find and do such things as please God—his God,—and, as a consequence, bring pleasure to himself. Mr. Abbot defines religion to be an "effort of man to perfect himself"; as if he should have no regard to results of such perfection on himself. This is quite too transcendental for me. I would define religion to be an effort of man to protect himself by perfecting himself; that is, by learning all the laws of that power by which he is surrounded, and by rendering obedience thereto; or, rather, by living in such relation thereto, as will secure to him happiness.

Self is the centre of my system. Let a man certainly learn what is best for himself and do it; and he will do the best possible for all others. The converse of this is also true.

To conclude, then; true religion is founded on facts, and is universal in all. A false religion is founded on fancies which are substituted for facts. All religions will harmonize as soon as all its fancies are got rid of, leaving nothing but facts for a foundation; for the germ—self-preservation—is the same.

E. L. CRANE.

ON THE OUTSIDE cover of a Bible lying on the cabin-table of a Hudson River steamer, are written the following lines:—

"This holy book neglected lies,
No soul with it communes;
While scores of souls sit round about,
With Heralds and Tribunes."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. WASSON on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. WASSON on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. CHENEY on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. WASSON.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzenska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe, 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Kenilworth.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	2.50
Songs of Seven.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.25
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy. A Story.....	.60
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	4.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Annals of the Biglow Family.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	.75
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.....	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Science of Language. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of our Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	1.75
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	4.25
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy. A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pennennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the new title, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	3.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Staff. Vols. I and II, each.....	3.00
Vol. III, IV, and V, each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance. Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 3 per cent. till money is invested. The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance. On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass!

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,

BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.,

SPIRITUALISTS' AND LIBER-

ALISTS'

SECOND ANNUAL

Camp-Meeting and Picnic,

AT LAKE PLEASANT, MONTAGUE, MASS.,

August 4 to August 30, 1875.

TENTS will be ready on the 4th. Prices, $10 for four weeks, $8 for three weeks. Advance payments.

PUBLIC EXERCISES begin on Sunday, the 8th. Address each week-day, at 11.30 P.M. Conference, Mondays. Two addresses Sundays, and a Sacred Concert of Music by the band.

PICNIC DAYS will be Thursdays. DANCING afternoons and evenings (Sundays excepted). Music by Russell's Orchestra.

MUSIC.—The Fitchburg Band and Russell's Orchestra of 20 pieces will arrive on the 12th, and will remain till August 30th. A choir of singers will give vocal music assisted by J. Frank Baxter, of Plymouth.

RAILROAD FARES.—Call for Lake Pleasant Camp-meeting tickets, to which are attached free return tickets.

EXCURSION TRAINS will run on Sundays, 15th, 22d, 29th, from Springfield, Hoosac Tunnel, and Fitchburg. Special train from Boston on the 15th.

BOARDING.—Mr. Dunklee, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Austin, of Springfield, will furnish table-board for $6.00 per week.

THE NEWEST AND THE BEST

MUSIC BOOKS!

Song Monarch. The BEST book for Singing-Schools, for which it is specially designed, and filled with cheerful glees and songs for practice, by H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. Emerson. Price 75 cents.

Chorus Choir. The NEWEST book of Choruses, Anthems, Motets, etc., for Choirs and Societies. Highly recommended. Compiled by Dr. Eben Tourjee. $18 per doz.

The following three books are in press, and nearly ready. Wait for them!

High School Choir. The BEST NEW book for High Schools, successor to that universal favorite, the "Hour of Singing," which it resembles in general arrangement, and is by the same authors, L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Price $1.00.

The Shining River. A new Sabbath-school Song Book of startling beauty. Price 35 cents.

Living Waters. Choice devotional music, hymns and tunes. For Prayer-meetings, etc. Price 30 cents.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT C. INGERSOLL,

OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heresies and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE

IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHI-

LOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion. Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K ,

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1875.

WHOLE No. 293.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in public prisons and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the general administration of the same no preference or advantage shall be conferred by discriminatory or any other special privilege, that no religious political system shall be fostered and maintained on a party sectarian basis, and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in:—
Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular and thorough, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

- SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or restricting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.
- SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or restricting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification of suffrage, it is a qualification to any office or to the trust, in any State, and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or immunities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity on consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.
- SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

GEORGE ELIOT is said to have another novel in preparation, not inferior to Middlemarch. She is the first living novelist of Great Britain, and women may well be proud of her.

A NEW paper, called Both Sides, with a "Christian Department" and a "Free Thought Department," has been started at Aylmer, Ontario, by J. C. Pankhurst. Price, $1.50 a year.

MRS. CELIA BURLEIGH, the well-known lecturer and reformer, died at Syracuse on July 26, lamented by a wide circle of admirers and friends.

D. LOTHROP & Co., 38 and 40 Cornhill, Boston, have commenced the publication of a new periodical for children, and they, being the best judges, vote it a great success. The name is Wide Awake, and the price is $2.00 a year.

A COMBINED effort is making among the scientific men of the country, especially among architects and engineers, to secure the popular adoption of the Metric System of weights and measures from July 4, 1876. It ought to succeed, and probably will.

MR. W. F. SCHROEDER'S combination of air-ship and balloon is exciting considerable curiosity. Is it possible that he has really solved the problem how to navigate the air? Some degree of incredulity may be pardoned; but "nothing succeeds like success."

SOME of the criticisms which THE INDEX receives (we forbear to particularize) are such absolute nonsense that the only possible answer is this quotation from the little boy's composition on toads: "The warts wich todes is noted for cant be cured, for they is croneik; but if I couldnt git wel Ide stay in the house."

THE Nation writes on "Class Morals and Government Morals." We are glad to be assured on good authority that the government has some morals, after all. Some of its doings might suggest a doubt on that point. But it would not be fair to require the government to be more moral than the people, and the latter will find the government a pretty good mirror of itself.

ACCORDING to the Cleveland Leader, the town of Bethlehem, Ohio, has church property valued at $350,000, which is more than ten per cent. of the whole property valuation of the place. There are 1,200 heads of families, and therefore $295 of church property to each. The clergy are paid an aggregate salary of $25,000, which is ten per cent. of the net earnings of the 1,200 heads of families.

PROFESSOR MARSH is entitled to the moral support of the entire country in his effort to break up the systematic impositions which continually goad the Indians to desperation and war. "He has undertaken a very thankless task," says the Nation, "having against him the whole force of the Indian 'machine,' with all the money involved in the Indian contract system, and on his side only a strong sense of duty."

REV. DR. BELLOWS is reported in the New York Times as having recently said that, "in the Romanist attacks recently made upon the public schools, at one time he favored the idea of the exclusion of the Bible, but a better knowledge of the purpose of the enemy convinced him of his folly." We suspect this report is inaccurate. Formerly Dr. Bellows favored the retention of the Bible in the schools, but afterwards he came out in favor of its exclusion. It would be strange indeed if he should have gone back to the unintelligent opinion.

THE PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL has resolved itself into the "Alliance of Reformed Churches throughout the World," and adopted a constitution which includes all churches holding to the Presbyterian system and creed. The preamble recites the objects of the Alliance, which are "to demonstrate unity of belief among Protestants, organize mission work, promote educational and social reforms, and oppose infidelity and religious intolerance." That is, to fight Rome on one hand and Reason on the other, which is the everlasting tight-rope dancing of all such unions.

THE MOUNTAIN MEADOW massacre of 1857, now under investigation in Utah, was one of the most horrible tragedies ever enacted. About one hundred and forty emigrants were attacked by the Mormons and Indians, and all murdered except sixteen very young children. Brigham Young and several of his bishops were implicated in this sickening affair, the atrocities of which almost pass the bounds of belief. It is feared that the jury, being Mormons, will convict nobody. When religion is made the pretext for such fiendishness, it can claim no more mercy than a wild beast.

MR. VOYSEY kindly transmits the following item from a New Zealand reader of THE INDEX: "It seems the Lord has been giving everybody the measles in Melbourne. At least the discerning Presbytery there say they 'recognize his hand' in the late epidemic of that complaint. A member proposed a thanksgiving for the abatement of the plague; but, another member having pointed out that it had by no means ceased, the thanksgiving was postponed." It is pretty clear that "the Lord's" credit is not good in Melbourne, and that he cannot get his pay in advance.

MR. R. E. LADD, of Springfield, Massachusetts, whose refusal to pay his taxes because church property is untaxed was recently noted here, has issued handbills announcing a "series of addresses" by himself on the Bible. On the back of one of these handbills he writes as follows in pencil, presumably for publication: "I only refused to pay the church tax, which in Springfield is 47¹¹/₁₀₀ cents on a thousand dollars. The rest I offered to pay, but it was refused; and I refused the 47¹¹/₁₀₀ cents because I believe the church worships a false god. Read Article Second in the Declaration of Rights in the Constitution of the State of Massachusetts." No matter what his reason, Mr. Ladd has a right not to be taxed for the support of the church to the extent of a penny; and we hope he will not allow the case to drop here.

MOODY AND SANKEY wound up their crusade in England with a grand testimonial meeting, in which the clergy were invited to declare what the Lord had done for English sinners through these harlequin gossellers. The London Times of July 16 says: "Mr. Moody having come to revive religion in England, wished to know how he had succeeded. It will be observed that only those ministers who could give evidence in favor of the revival were invited. The gathering, however, was significant both as a summing up of results, and as showing with what tact Mr. Moody can drive the nail home. Some men would have considered their work finished with the meetings which came to an end last week. Mr. Moody has a keener insight into the fitness of things. He must not only himself be satisfied of his success; he must leave it on the record of the churches, and from the mouths of their ministers, that his satisfaction was no chimera, but an attested fact. His shrewdness, or foresight, or whatever we may call it, was fully justified by the meeting. The hall was crowded in every part, and the audience (about 1500 in all) comprised, perhaps, about 300 ministers of religion, who in the main seemed friends, and many of whom were demonstrative admirers of the revivalists. Mr. Moody himself was altogether quiet and undemonstrative. He opened the meeting by stating that during four months of incessant work in London they had not had one accident, nor had any of the workers in the revival suffered in health. For this great mercy and for all other mercies, let the glory, he said, be given to God. He begged the speakers who followed him to remember this, and say as little as possible of human agency."

The Beecher Trial.

The jury are unable to agree upon a verdict in the Beecher case. The division of opinion which prevails among twelve men who have had the advantage of hearing all the witnesses examined and cross-examined is shared by the public at large. But as we pass beyond the reach of those potent local influences which necessarily pressed heavily on the jury—for a man was under trial who in Brooklyn has been treated almost as a god,—the divisions of opinion will be more strongly marked. There are many who will always hold that the plaintiff's case was fully proved. A second class will continue to believe Mr. Beecher innocent; while a third will consider that the Scotch verdict of "not proven" would have been the only just conclusion to reach. And sensible men throughout the country will, in their hearts, be compelled to acknowledge that Mr. Beecher's management of his private friendships and affairs has been entirely unworthy of his name, position, and sacred calling.

The evidence in the case has been so voluminous that we should ill discharge our duty if, before taking leave of the trial, we neglected to review it with some little care. The case naturally divides itself into four parts. There is first the charge itself, and the train of circumstances surrounding it. This must be considered, secondly, in connection with Mr. Beecher's acknowledged relations toward all the parties. Thirdly, it will be necessary to recall the manner in which Mr. Beecher met the charge. Lastly, we shall have to examine the answers to the charge. We shall endeavor to present a connected narrative of the case, observing strictly the order of events—and in doing this we propose to confine ourselves exclusively to the documents or evidence produced on the trial, and to disregard all outside narratives or statements.

I.—THE ORIGIN OF THE CHARGE.

The defence reposed in a great degree upon the theory that the charge of adultery was never brought against Mr. Beecher throughout the negotiations and correspondence which preceded the trial. In order to maintain this, it is necessary to assume that all the witnesses for the plaintiff committed perjury, and that Mr. Beecher was ignorant of what went on in the internal government of his own church. For Tilton swears, and Mr. and Mrs. Moulton swear, that Mr. Beecher explicitly confessed the adultery to them—confessed it with tears and anguish, and with passionate entreaties for forgiveness or pity. And the "Examining Committee of Plymouth Church" called Tilton to account, in October, 1873—a year before the great public disclosures,—for having, in August, 1870, accused Mr. Beecher of adultery in the presence of Mrs. Bradshaw. It is scarcely possible to assume that Mr. Beecher was ignorant of this fact. It is upon record in the books of his own church.

The direct testimony of the plaintiff and his witnesses cannot, however, be totally shut out from consideration. To take it for granted that all the witnesses on one side are perjurers would, no doubt, be an easy method of settling the case; but to accept that view without question would settle something else besides—it would practically abolish the system of trial by jury. The duty of weighing evidence would no longer be deemed necessary. The wealthy or the popular would be able to commit any offences they pleased, and afterward escape responsibility by saying that their accusers were perjurers. The maintenance of justice, blind to all distinctions of wealth, intellect, or position, is of much greater importance to a nation than the preservation of any individual reputation, however valuable that reputation may be. In this case, then, as in any other, the evidence on both sides must be fairly collated and examined, and the direct testimony of witnesses, where it is conflicting, must be considered in close connection with the indirect and circumstantial evidence. We must see how far the admissions, the letters, and the general conduct of the chief personages involved tend to support or refute their own personal statements. The defence trusts much to a particular set of probabilities which they place before the public. Is it likely, they ask, that a man in Mr. Beecher's position would have committed this crime? It might be deemed sufficient to ask, in answer to that, Is it likely that Mr. Beecher, being innocent, would have written the letters which he did write, and would have pursued the general line of conduct, after a monstrous and unjust charge had been brought against him, which he unquestionably did pursue? The construction of different sets of hypotheses cannot enable us to form a judgment on an issue of this kind. It is the actual conduct of the persons involved in the case, the evidence of their own acts and admissions, which must guide us to a decision.

The counsel on the part of Mr. Beecher have treated the charge as one which originated entirely with Tilton and the Moultons. They apparently overlooked the fact that the real accusers are not Theodore Tilton and the Moultons, but Mrs. Tilton and Henry Ward Beecher. It is these two persons who have supplied the evidence which has produced the deepest impression upon the public mind.

Mrs. Tilton made the first written confession of her guilt on the 3d of July, 1870. The original of this paper was afterward destroyed—but Mrs. Tilton admitted that it once existed. The paper signed by Mrs. Tilton on the 29th of December, 1870, was a partial repetition of her original confession, and it is alleged that this—the only "confession" acknowledged by the defendant's counsel—was extorted from Mrs. Tilton by her husband. The improbabilities which surround the coercion theory are overwhelming. As a general rule, a husband would find it no easy task to compel his wife to take any course which would bring the slightest discredit on herself or her household. But that the mother of several children, a deeply religious and pious woman (as she is represented by Mr. Beecher to be), should be coerced into writing a charge against her pastor that he had "solicited her to be a wife to him, together with all that this implied," there not being the slightest ground for such an accusation—such a story will seem to every woman in the world to be unnatural and monstrous. But, apart from theories or conjectures, it is clear that, if any undue influence was brought to bear upon Mrs. Tilton, it was when she was made to retract her confession. This statement we have from the woman herself, in a document which has never been challenged. It incidentally admits that the original confession was made, not in December, 1870, but in the previous July. The statement is so important that we must print it entire. It is dated Dec. 16, 1872:—

In July, 1870, prompted by my duty, I informed my husband that H. W. Beecher, my friend and pastor, had solicited me to be a wife to him, together with all that this implied. Six months afterward my husband felt impelled by the circumstances of a conspiracy against him, in which Mrs. Beecher had taken part, to have an interview with Mr. Beecher.

In order that Mr. B. might know exactly what I had said to my husband, I wrote a brief statement (I have forgotten in what form) which my husband showed to Mr. Beecher. Late the same evening, Mr. B. came to me (lying very sick at the time) and filled me with distress, saying I had ruined him—and wanting to know if I meant to appear against him. This I certainly did not mean to do, and the thought was agonizing to me. I then signed a paper which he wrote, to clear him in case of trial. In this instance, as in most others, when absorbed by one great interest or feeling, the harmony of my mind is entirely disturbed, and I found on reflection that this paper was so drawn as to place me most unjustly against my husband, and on the side of Mr. Beecher. So, in order to repair so cruel a blow to my long-suffering husband, I wrote an explanation of the first paper and my signature. Mr. Moulton procured from Mr. B. the statement which I gave to him in my agitation and excitement, and now holds it.

This ends my connection with the case.
(Signed) ELIZABETH R. TILTON.

This remarkable statement seems, in itself, sufficient to settle three things: first, that the woman retracted her confession unwillingly, and then not because it was untrue, but because Mr. Beecher had worked upon her feelings; secondly, that Mr. Beecher taxed her with having ruined him, which it is scarcely supposable he could or would have done had he been an innocent man; thirdly, that even at this late date Mrs. Tilton regarded her husband as "long-suffering," and repented of a "cruel blow" she had dealt him. Would it have been a cruel blow to have withdrawn a wholly unjust charge against her pastor, which had been extorted from her? Or would a wife, who had been the victim of her husband's cruelties and base conspiracies, be likely to describe him as a "long-suffering" man?

That the retraction which she gave to Mr. Beecher was actually dictated by him is proved by another highly important document. It is a letter from Mrs. Tilton to her husband, dated December 30, 1870—the night of the day on which Mr. Beecher obtained her retraction of the original charge:—

MIDNIGHT.
MY DEAR HUSBAND,—I desire to leave with you before going to sleep a statement that Mr. Henry Ward Beecher called upon me this evening and asked me if I would defend him against any accusations in a council of ministers, and I replied solemnly that I would, in case the accuser was any other than my husband. He dictated the letter, which I copied as my own, to be used by him against any other accuser than my husband.

This letter was designed to vindicate Mr. Beecher against all other persons save only my husband. I was ready to give him this letter because he said that upon that matter, the letter in your hands addressed to him, dated December 29, had struck him dead, and ended his usefulness. You and I both are pledged to do our best to avoid publicity. God send a speedy end to all further anxieties.

Affectionately, ELIZABETH.

Mrs. Tilton not only made the charge against Mr. Beecher, but she invariably adopted a tone of penitence for her own crime and sympathy for her husband, in the letters written to that husband when he was at a distance from home. In one of these letters she says of Mr. Beecher: "He has been the guide of our youth, and until the three last dreadful years, when our confidence was shaken in him, we trusted him as no other human being." A letter which makes a still more unmistakable reference to some terrible event in her life, known and admitted by herself and her husband, is that dated from Marietta, Ohio, November, 1870. It is impossible for any person to read it carefully without seeing that it involves an admission of her own grave misconduct in every line. She is writing to her husband:—

When, by your threats, my mother cried out in agony to me, "Why, what have you done, Elizabeth, my child?" her worst suspicions were aroused, and I laid bare my heart then, that from my lips, and not yours, she might receive the dagger into her heart.

Could such language as this apply to an ordinary domestic quarrel; or to any transaction such as Mr. Beecher now says alone marked his intercourse with the Tiltons? What sense or meaning could there be in a woman using it who had merely been the victim of her husband's neglect or brutality? The letter goes on:—

When you say to my beloved brother, "Mr. B." preaches to forty of his mistresses every Sunday, then follow with the remark that after my death you have a dreadful secret to reveal, need he be told any more ere the sword pass into his soul?

There is no pretence here that the "secret" was merely a false charge—no complaint of injustice, no defence of herself, even when she had been accused to her own mother and brother. Nor is it denied that Tilton really had a "dreadful secret" to reveal. The ground assumed is that the husband was ungenerous in disclosing the secret, not that he was guilty of falsehood; for Mrs. Tilton says that she herself elected to tell the secret to her mother; and, taken in connection with the allusion to the forty mistresses, it is difficult to conjecture what she could mean except one thing. Again, when, on July 4, 1871, she wrote a letter in which she said that she had been "misled by a good man," we see no other explanation of the passage than that she had been misled—though to what extent the letter itself does not say. Read in connection with the woman's other letters and "confessions," it seems scarcely possible to ascribe two meanings to it.

The charge itself, then, unquestionably originated with Mrs. Tilton, in a confession made voluntarily to her husband, and repeated, as she tells us, to her mother. Her own letters, down to a certain date, substantially repeat her confession over and over again.

II.—MR. BEECHER'S RELATIONS TO THE PARTIES.

The knowledge that such letters were in existence, as those from which we have just quoted, early convinced Mr. Beecher's friends that it would be indispensable to admit the existence of some peculiar or unusual intimacy between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton. It could not be pretended that they were all written under coercion, because, in every instance save one, they were written to the husband when he was at a distance from the wife. The explanation which was offered in this dilemma was that Mrs. Tilton really had been in love with Mr. Beecher, but that he never returned her affection, and was shocked when he discovered its existence.

Mr. Beecher's admissions in his evidence proved that he was on terms of extreme intimacy with Mrs. Tilton—an intimacy which cannot be usual between pastors and the female members of their congregations, or husbands would hesitate to admit ministers to their households. It rather resembles the position once taken up by the Romish priesthood toward the family, and which led to the scandals that did so much to bring about the Reformation. One incident connected with this long intimacy was related by a man who could have no motive for seeking to injure either Mr. Beecher or Mrs. Tilton. Mr. Richards, the brother of Mrs. Tilton (who gave his evidence with manifest pain and reluctance), testified that on a certain occasion, when he visited his sister's, he was the witness of a strange scene. He thus describes it:—

I called at the house, and was in the upper story—the second story, I think. I descended to the parlor floor, and opened the door of the parlor, which was closed, and I saw Mr. Beecher seated in the front room, and Mrs. Tilton making a very hasty motion, and with a highly-flushed face, away from the position that Mr. Beecher occupied. It was such a situation as left an indelible impression on my mind.

It is hard to believe that a brother would perjure himself in order to make such a statement about an only sister.

Mr. Beecher himself tells us that, prior to the close of 1870, he had been in the habit of making the Tilton dwelling a sort of second home. "I was glad to resort to it," he said; "it was where people could not find me." He admits, too, that he brought the powerful art of flattery to bear upon Mrs. Tilton: "I spoke to her in great admiration of some letters which she showed me which she had written, one in particular, and a variety of such things; it was entering into her life, and, in some sense, giving her an interest in my own." He describes in these words a relationship which a man usually reserves for his own wife, and which he can seldom transfer to another man's wife without danger. Mr. Beecher also stated in his evidence (April 13) that he was in the habit of kissing Mrs. Tilton. Whereupon Mr. Fullerton asked him, "Were you in the habit of kissing her when you went to her house in the absence of her husband?" and Mr. Beecher replied, "Sometimes I did, and sometimes I did not." Again, in his letter to Plymouth Church (July 15, 1874), he admits that there had been indiscretions on his part which caused him the "sharpest pangs of sorrow," while he denied that there was actual guilt. Those, therefore, who say that there never was anything unusual in the intimacy between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton go far beyond Mr. Beecher himself. They set up a defence (as in other material parts of the case) which the defendant has emphatically contradicted. There was love—but it was unrequited love. In Mr. Beecher's own version of his conversation with Mrs. Moulton on the subject, given in evidence on the 12th of April, he said he had then admitted having "wrought in that good little woman a smouldering fire; that it had burned unknown to me within her, and finally it broke out with such infinite mischief." He also said (April 3) that when Moulton made the statement to him that Mrs. Tilton loved "his [Beecher's] little finger better than Theodore Tilton's whole body," "I accepted it; I had no means of contradicting it." Yet it must seem to the ordinary observer that an innocent man, placed in such a position, would naturally have received such a statement with infinite surprise. Mr. Beecher further admitted that Mrs. Tilton had "allowed the tendrils of her affection to grow up upon him." Whether Mrs. Tilton did indeed act in the way which is alleged on the part of Mr. Beecher—whether she immodestly forced a love upon him which he did not want, and could not return—may be doubted from the evidence; but it is the imputation which the defendant has deliberately fastened upon her. Supposing it to be well-founded, it then becomes hard to understand how Mrs. Tilton can be called the stainless saint and the model of purity which Mr. Beecher himself has described her at various subsequent periods.

There were other parties to the case besides Mrs. Tilton with whom Mr. Beecher was on remarkable terms of friendship. It is true that they are now denounced as conspirators and perjurers—but not by Mr. Beecher himself, as we shall see further on. That Mr. and Mrs. Moulton were frequently consulted by Mr. Beecher throughout these troubled years, concerning some great and difficult trouble, cannot be questioned, seeing that it rests upon evidence supplied by Mr. Beecher's own hand and from his own mouth.

In his letter to Moulton of June 1, 1873, he wrote: "Your noble wife, too, has been to me one of God's comforters. It is such as she that renews a waning faith in womanhood." And he went on in a strain which it is difficult to make applicable to any of the ordinary relationships or intercourse of life:—

For a thousand encouragements—for service that no one can appreciate who has not been as sore-hearted as I have been, for your honorable delicacy, for confidence and affection,—I owe you so much that I can neither express nor pay it. Not the least has been the great-hearted kindness and trust which your noble wife has shown, and which have lifted me out of despondencies often, though sometimes her clear truthfulness has laid me pretty flat.

These ardent acknowledgments of "services" to a "sore heart" accord, it must be admitted, rather with Mrs. Moulton's version of Mr. Beecher's confidences in her than with the theory of Mr. Beecher's counsel, that she is a low and degraded conspirator and perjurer. In explanation of the above letter, Mr. Beecher himself said, in his evidence, "My whole intercourse with Mrs. Moulton was one which inspired in me a sense of affectionate respect and of gratitude." And again he said (April 12), "Mrs. Moulton was a lady—thoroughbred to my apprehension; and I never heard her say a word that jarred upon my sense of the delicacy and propriety of a lady's tongue." In the same day's evidence, he declared that Mrs. Moulton "was like a bank of spring flowers" to him. And yet all this time, according to the present theory of the defence, she was planning with others a deep-laid and devilish plot against his honor.

Another person with whom he was on curious terms, and whom he permitted to address him in a tone which most men would never have tolerated for a moment, was the mother of Mrs. Tilton—Mrs. Morse. She constantly assumed the position toward him of a woman who had some strong hold and claim upon him through her knowledge of a damning secret. She wrote a letter to Mr. Beecher (dated October 14, no year, cited in evidence April 14), in which she uses this remarkable language: "Do come and see me. I will promise that the 'secret of her life,' as she calls it, shall not be mentioned. I know it's hard to bring it up, as you must have suffered intensely, and we all will, I fear, till released by death." Here, again, is an allusion to a "secret" which could not possibly have been unknown to Mr. Beecher, because Mrs. Morse says she knows he has "suffered intensely" on account of it. What was this secret thus referred to by mother and daughter? Mr. Beecher had asked Mrs. Morse to call him her son, and she writes: "When I have told darling, I felt if you could, in safety to yourself and all concerned, you would be to me all this endearing name. Am I mistaken?" There is a still more startling letter from Mrs. Morse to Mr. Beecher, produced in evidence January 14. The testimony shows that it was written in the first week of November, 1870, and its authenticity has never been questioned.

It begins by reproaching Mr. Beecher for not having "attended to the request I [Mrs. Morse] left at your house over two weeks since;" and then proceeds to berate him for not having done anything for "Elizabeth." Presently she goes on thus: "You say, keep quiet. I have all through her married life done so, and we now see our error (sic). . . . The publicity he has given to this recent and most crushing of all trouble is what's taken the life out of her. I know of twelve persons whom he has told, and they in turn have told others." Told what? At this period—November, 1870—Mr. Beecher says he had no idea that even a suspicion was entertained in reference to him and Mrs. Tilton. And yet, here is Mrs. Tilton's own mother writing to him in reference to a secret which was manifestly known to him and to her. But mark the extraordinary language which she proceeds to use: "Do you know, when I hear of you cracking your jokes from Sunday to Sunday, and think of the misery you have brought upon us, I think with the Psalmist, 'There is no God.'" She goes on to say that, admitting it all to be the "invention of his [Tilton's] half-drunken brain, the effect is the same, for everybody believes it." She complains of him for not getting her brother into the Custom House, and says "Elizabeth was as disappointed" as herself. And then, referring to Tilton, she says: "He swears as soon as her breath leaves her body, he will make this whole thing public; and this prospect, I think, is one thing which keeps her living."

Now, no specific charge is made in this letter; but the whole tone of it is clearly that of a woman who knows that a man has done her daughter a great injury, and feels that she has a claim upon that man. If we ask, "Is it likely that a mother would thus assume her daughter's guilt?" we are met by another inquiry, "Is it likely that a minister of the Gospel would allow a woman to address him in this threatening and insolent strain if he did not, in some way or other, feel that he was at her mercy?" Mr. Beecher handed this letter over to Moulton. Mr. Fullerton asked him why he had done so? He answered (April 19) that Mr. Moulton was "the depositor of all the papers that related in any way, directly or indirectly, to the case." He thus admitted that the letter did relate to the case. His answer to the letter was cautious, but by no means that which any one might have supposed such a man would have returned to so impudent a series of demands.

III.—HOW THE CHARGE WAS MET.

We have next to consider the way in which Mr. Beecher met the charge—and this is one of the vital parts of the case. How an entirely innocent man would have acted, when unjustly accused by an intimate friend of attempting to seduce his wife, Mr.

Beecher's chief counsel, Mr. Evarts, took great, and as some will think injudicious, pains to describe. He said:—

Ah! gentlemen, we must look this crime in its face. Why, there is not a sailor in Wapping, with a trumpet on either knee, badgered and beaten in the debauches of long voyages and frequent ports, but that, if a comrade should venture to suggest to him that he had seduced the daughter of an old shipmate, or the wife of a young comrade, he would bury the sheath-knife in the heart of his accuser. There has never been a coarse and vulgar debauchee voluptuary, that would flaunt his wealth and his vices in the face of our citizens here or in New York, and ride the four-in-hand of his riches, packed with courtesans, the fact that one of his boon companions should accuse him of seducing the companion of his daughter, the wife of his friend, who had been trusted to his care, but that would send a bullet through the heart of his accuser.

That, probably, is the kind of impulse, wrong or right, which most men would feel under these trying circumstances. But when Mr. Evarts laid so much stress upon it, he imprudently forgot how different was the course which his client pursued. Mr. Beecher did not in any way resent the insult. He did not even go to any old and trusted member of his church to take counsel on the subject. He went to a comparatively slight acquaintance—Mr. Moulton. He showed no indignation over an accusation which might well have stirred the most sluggish nature. The first thing which happened after he was commanded by Tilton to resign his position and quit Brooklyn was this: he obeyed a peremptory summons to go to Moulton's house to meet Tilton, on the very night of the Plymouth Church prayer-meeting. It was most inconvenient for him to go; his church expected him; but Moulton, who brought the summons, would take no denial. Mr. Beecher sent a message in hot haste, requesting some one else to occupy his place at the Plymouth Church services. The prayer-meeting was neglected in order that the pastor might be led against his will to an interview with a man who had just ordered him to depart from church and home. He then manages to see Mrs. Tilton, and causes her to write the letter of retraction. This he does unknown to the husband. It is from the wife that Tilton afterward hears that the letter had been written—not from Beecher.

What happened next is still more remarkable. We do not hear of any protest from Mr. Beecher—of any consultation with a lawyer, with Mr. Shearman, or the famous Mr. Tracy. On the very next day he parts with the letter of retraction, and on the day following that, he dictated the celebrated "letter of contrition." That he did say substantially what is to-day found written in that document, no one who reads his cross-examination can for a moment doubt. Mr. Fullerton took the letter clause by clause, and asked Mr. Beecher whether he said this and that, or not? After much dexterous and elaborate fencing with the question, Mr. Beecher was in every case obliged at last to answer, "I did." We must quote one or two examples of this kind:—

FIRST INSTANCE.

Mr. Fullerton.—I call your attention now, Mr. Beecher, still further to this document: "He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been." Did you say anything to that effect?

Mr. Beecher.—I did not say that sentence that I recollect, sir; but I said something which I can well understand might have been put down for short in that sentence.

Q.—Did you say anything that conveyed that sentiment? A.—I did.

SECOND INSTANCE.

Mr. Fullerton.—I read another sentence: "I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other hearts that would ache." Did you say anything that conveyed that idea?

Mr. Beecher.—Not in that bold way.

Q.—Well, how did you say it—did you say that in substance? A.—Not in its apothegmatic form, as it stands there.

Q.—Did you express that sentiment, whether you clothed it in that language? A.—I discussed with him.

Q.—Did you express that sentiment? A.—No, not in that close way in which you press me for an answer.

Q.—Well, something akin to it? A.—I can give you almost the very thing.

Q.—Something akin to it—something in that neighborhood? A.—I DID, SIR.

And so on, throughout the cross-examination.

Moreover, Mr. Beecher admits that he wrote with his own hand, at the foot of the letter, "I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence. Henry Ward Beecher." As this fact has been denied, we must once more quote from Mr. Beecher's own evidence:—

Cross-examination of Mr. Beecher, April 15.

Q.—You did not then put your name to that paper for the purpose of authenticating it? A.—I put my name to that.

Q.—I ask you that question, and I want you to answer it. A.—I did not put my name to that paper for the purpose of authenticating the form of its contents.

Q.—You say—"I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence." A.—Yes.

Q.—That is your handwriting, I believe? A.—I think it is, sir.

Q.—Well, have you any doubt about it? A.—No, sir; I have no doubt about it; I think it is.

It is a great tax on ordinary credulity to be asked to believe that Mr. Beecher would have written these words on a letter, and signed his name to them, and then have handed over the letter to a third person for use, without knowing or surmising what were its contents. Moreover, in a note from Mr. Beecher to Moulton, dated June 1, 1873, he thus refers to this document: "The agreement was made after my letter through you was written." Here he distinctly acknowledges it as his own production, and calls it a letter; and he was forced to repeat that acknowledgment in his cross-examination.

And what does this letter say? "I ask, through you, Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and I humble myself before him as I do before my God." Why? Because Tilton had accused him of seducing his wife? It is strange to find an innocent man, writhing under so outrageous a charge as that, talking of "humbling" himself before his accuser. "I will die before any one but myself shall be inculpated." Inculpated through what? It seems, then, that there were two persons liable to be "inculpated." This treatment of the charge is less like a denial of it than an admission. "I will only ask him to remember the other hearts that would ache." Why should a man who had been wrongfully accused of seducing a friend's wife write such a letter as this to the friend within three days of the accusation? Who was the injured man—Beecher or Tilton? Beecher, according to the theory of the defence. And yet here, and everywhere else in the case, we find him "humbling himself before Tilton," and pleading for mercy.

Let us now recapitulate the events of five days—five memorable days. How do Mr. Beecher's actions and conduct on those days accord with the theory of his innocence?

Monday, Dec. 26.—Tilton sends a note to Beecher, demanding his retirement from Plymouth Church and Brooklyn. The following is the document—an extraordinary one for an innocent man to receive without taking instant steps to punish or expose the person who sent it:—

DEC. 26, 1870, Brooklyn.

HENRY WARD BEECHER—Sir: I demand that, for reasons which you explicitly understand, you immediately cease from the ministry of Plymouth Church, and that you quit the city of Brooklyn as a resident.

(Signed)

THEODORE TILTON.

Thursday, Dec. 29.—Mrs. Tilton writes her confession.

Friday, Dec. 30.—Mr. Beecher receives a peremptory summons to go to Moulton's house to meet Tilton. He goes. Mr. Fullerton puts this question to him: "Then you went off at the beck of the man who had insulted you on the 26th to know what he wanted?" Mr. Beecher answered, "I did, sir." He is told of Mrs. Tilton's confession, and charged with the adultery. After leaving Moulton's house, Mr. Beecher goes to Tilton's, and induces Mrs. Tilton to retract her charge.

Saturday, Dec. 31.—Moulton goes to Beecher's house, and tells him he has acted basely in forcing the retraction from Mrs. Tilton. Thereupon, Beecher hands over the retraction to Moulton.

Sunday, Jan. 1, 1871.—Beecher dictates the celebrated letter of contrition, in which he "humbles himself before Theodore Tilton as before his God," and pleads for forgiveness.

But now we are face to face with another extraordinary fact. On the 7th of February, 1871—more than a month after Tilton had accused Beecher of a crime which his counsel says would have justified him in "burying a knife" in Tilton's heart,—he writes to Moulton an urgent request that he will make him and Tilton friends again. And he adds: "Theodore will have the hardest task in such a case, but has he not proved himself capable of the noblest things?" So that we are to understand that to accuse an intimate friend and a pastor of adultery is a "noble thing." And the wrongfully-accused man is to go to his accuser and beg his forgiveness. And the false accuser—traitor, villain, perjurer—is to be conceded to have the hardest part to play in the reconciliation. These are startling propositions to lay down; and yet they are the only deductions to be drawn from the theory of the defence. Another difficult fact to explain is that, whenever Mr. Beecher wrote a letter on this subject, he always referred to Tilton as an ill-used man. Thus, in his letter denouncing Dr. Storrs, he says: "I am in hopes that Theodore, who has borne so much, will be unwilling to be a flail in Storrs' hand to strike at a friend." Always there is the same fear of Tilton, and the same anxiety to induce him to be silent.

On the 20th of May, Mr. Beecher, according to his own evidence (given on the 5th of April), went to Tilton's house—not for the purpose of "burying a knife in his heart," but in order to plead again for forgiveness. He thus describes what took place—we purposely follow Mr. Beecher's own narrative:—

I only know that when I went in Mr. Tilton received me moodily, and that after a little conversation and explanation which took place he became gracious, and that he fell into an easy and unbusiness-like chat; and that in the course of it, sitting there in the old-fashioned way in his house, I went up and argued the matter—sat down on his knee in order to make the appeal closer,—and when I was sitting there Mrs. Tilton came into the room and burst out laughing; I recollect the interview, and I think when she came into the room she came up and kissed me very cordially.

Thus, the victim of a charge which is enough to ruin any man, to say nothing of a great minister, never seeks to clear or defend himself; he merely "appeals" to his accuser, and sits down on his accuser's knee to "make the appeal closer."

We are unable to discover any time at which Mr. Beecher attempted to defend himself until the charge against him had been made public through the newspapers. Then, something had to be said and done. From the 30th December, 1870, down to last summer, he was incessantly engaged in a despairing effort to conceal something which, if made known, he felt sure would ruin him. The Moultons evidently knew the secret; and his piteous appeals to Mr. Moulton to help him are on record in his own letters. In all this correspondence, Mr. Beecher constantly represented himself as the offender. Down to so late a period as June 1, 1873, Mr. Beecher wrote to Moulton a letter in which his own culpability and Tilton's past generosity are assumed as perfectly well understood between all the parties. He says in the course of the letter: "Tilton had condoned his wife's fault." Very strange language, considering that the wife had committed no fault. Of course this fatal passage could not be reconciled with the general theory of the defence—that Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton were both ill-used persons, and perfectly innocent of all wrong. Consequently, Mr. Evarts suggested that the "fault" in Mrs. Tilton, above referred to, was that of having divided her affections between her husband and Mr. Beecher. But in a previous part of his speech Mr. Evarts declared that she had never acted thus; that Mr. Beecher had been "imposed upon" when he was led to believe that she had. One of the most curious features of the defence is the rapidity with which Mr. Beecher's legal advisers have from time to time substituted one theory for another—constructing elaborate chains of explanations, then repudiating them, then returning to them, then discarding them again, and so on ad infinitum. Every theory which Mr. Beecher put forward to account for his conduct before the trial was expressly contradicted by himself or his counsel upon the trial. Every theory advanced by Mr. Beecher during the trial is expressly contradicted by his own former admissions and letters.

Mr. Beecher knew, after the 30th December, 1870, that he was accused of adultery. He must have known, months before, that Tilton accused him of it; but it was not until December that he found out that the charge rested on Mrs. Tilton's own confession. The letters, conversations, and negotiations, which from that time forth passed between all the chief personages in this miserable tragedy, obviously proceeded upon the understanding that Mr. Beecher had committed some grave offence, the consequences of which would be utter destruction to him, so that rather than face them he cried out for death. That was the common ground on which all these persons met. It is the key, and apparently the only key, to the long series of letters, compromises, and interviews. The fact of guilt was taken for granted on all sides. It was acknowledged in all Mr. Beecher's interviews with Moulton and Mrs. Moulton; it had been confessed to Mrs. Tilton's mother by herself (as the Marietta letter conclusively shows); and it was proclaimed by Mr. Beecher in all his letters. On the 7th of February, 1871, he implores Mrs. Tilton to trust implicitly to Mr. Moulton's guidance. "His hand it was," he says, "that tied up the storm that was ready to burst upon our heads." What necessity was there for using language of this sort to a woman who had done no wrong, and could have no reason to fear any storm? In February, 1872—exactly a year later,—Mr. Beecher offers to abandon his church and position altogether if Tilton felt disposed to exact such a penalty. "If my destruction," he wrote, "would place him, Theodore, all right, that shall not stand in the way. I am willing to step down and out. . . . I do not think that anything will be gained by it. I should be destroyed, but he would not be saved. He, Elizabeth, and the children would have their future clouded." The last sentence is full of dreadful meaning. It is a plain admission that something had taken place which, if known, would not only ruin Mr. Beecher, but cloud the future even of Tilton's children. What was there to destroy Mr. Beecher in his having advised Bowen to discharge Tilton, or suggesting a separation between man and wife—even if he had done these things? How many acts can a mother commit which will "cloud the future" of her children? Mr. Beecher goes on in this same letter to protest that he is living "on the sharp and ragged edge of anxiety, remorse, fear, despair." Why remorse? And, above all, why fear? Supposing he advised the wife to leave her husband—which is purely a supposition,—why fear for himself?

Even when Tilton reproached Beecher for forcing Mrs. Tilton to retract her charge, what was the minister's attitude? Did he turn upon his accuser in indignation? No; he simply complained that he thought "an unfair advantage had been taken of him." Tilton rejoined that it was he who had acted unfairly, in extorting the retraction. "I argued the point with him," says Mr. Beecher (evidence, April 15). It is difficult to imagine a man, who had been innocently accused of adultery, condescending to argue such a "point" with the scoundrel who had trumped up the charge. Mr. Beecher had obtained a retraction to which, on his own version of the affair, he was thoroughly entitled. He then apologized for having obtained it, and handed it back to Moulton. The ordinary principles or motives upon which human conduct can be explained utterly fail to reconcile such a course as this with conscious innocence.

It is impossible to feel surprise that all the ingenuity of Mr. Beecher's counsel failed to convince the jury, and has failed to convince the public, that Mr. Beecher's method of meeting this charge was worthy of a Christian minister, or could have been prompted by a "conscience void of offence." Mr. Beecher has told a dozen different stories in explanation of his letters and conduct—and every one of them crushes the other.

IV.—THE ANSWERS TO THE CHARGE.

These are so few, when sifted out from the enormous mass of verbiage under which they have been buried by the lawyers, that they can be brought into a comparatively brief compass. The direct replies to the charge are these:—

1. That no accusation of adultery was ever made. This, as we have shown, is disproved not only by the evidence of Mr. Tilton and Mr. and Mrs. Moulton, but by the letters of the two persons chiefly involved. There is nothing to support this part of the defence but the oath on the trial of the defendant himself, and with that oath his own previous course of conduct and correspondence are disastrously in conflict.

2. That the charge was concocted for black-mailing purposes. Mr. Beecher has disposed of this. He only paid over, from first to last, $7,000 toward business projects in which Tilton was engaged. So far from exacting money from Mr. Beecher, Tilton, on one occasion at least, expressly refused to receive "any pecuniary or other favor" at his hands. (Tilton to Beecher, May 2, 1874.) As for the $7,000, Mr. Beecher swore on the trial that he had paid it willingly. "Not the slightest pressure" was brought to bear upon him. (Beecher's evidence, April 20.)

The reader had better examine Mr. Beecher's own words on this subject:—

From Mr. Beecher's cross-examination, April 20.

Q.—Well, did you think that was obtained from you by Mr. Moulton in any improper way? A.—No; that was not my feeling then, at all.

Q.—You did not regard it as black-mail, then? A.—I did not.

Q.—Can you tell how much was paid prior to the payment of the $5,000? A.—Not accurately, sir; I have an impression that the whole sum amounted to $7,000—over that than under.

Q.—That is including the $5,000? A.—Including the $5,000.

Q.—Was the $2,000 paid before the payment of the $5,000? A.—Yes, sir, I think so.

Q.—Did you pay any after the $5,000? A.—I think not.

Q.—Did you look at any of these payments in the light of black-mail? A.—I did not, sir.

Q.—You felt entirely satisfied with the money you had given? A.—And I rejoiced to be able to give.

Q.—And did it willingly? A.—I did it cheerfully.

Q.—And rejoicingly? A.—And rejoicingly.

Q.—Without finding any fault with anybody? A.—Without finding the slightest fault.

Q.—Or thinking that you had been taken advantage of? A.—I did not dream of it.

Q.—Or imposed upon? A.—Or imposed upon.

In fact, Mr. Beecher admitted that the idea of black-mailing never entered his head until it was put there by those two "smart" lawyers, Tracy and Shearman. Mr. Beecher said it had been "rubbed into him" by these worthy men. Not until October, 1874, did he "give in to them"—that is, not until the Tilton and Moulton charges and papers had been published, and it was necessary to make a public reply to them. It was in that desperate situation, when concealment was all over, and when something must be said to destroy the effect of Tilton's and Moulton's statements, that the black-mailing explanation was first produced. On this point Mr. Beecher's admissions are clear, and they appear to be absolutely destructive of the black-mailing hypothesis. He was asked when he finally surrendered to the Shearman-Tracy tactics:—

A.—Well, I think it was since I returned from the White Mountains.

Q.—Well, when was that? A.—That was about October, 1874.

Q.—Then you gave up, and came to the conclusion that it was black-mail because they told you so? A.—Well, I didn't dare to say in their presence any more that it was not black-mail; I had been so constantly disciplined by them that I did not dare to say it was not black-mail.

Q.—Then they intimidated you, and treated you a great deal worse than Moulton did? A.—Oh, a great deal worse.

Q.—Mr. Beecher, your answer to the question I put to you, whether you now believe that Francis D. Moulton intended to levy black-mail upon you, has not been answered satisfactorily to some of my associates, and I will put it to you again, as to your present belief? A.—Well, sir, if you mean by black-mail he levied contributions for his own advantage on me, I don't think he did.

Q.—Yes? A.—But if you mean that he levied money upon me, using my generous feelings as the instrument, for the benefit of Mr. Tilton, I think he did.

Q.—Well, when did he take the advantage of using your generous feelings? A.—Well, I think he did in regard to the $5,000, though I did not at the time, and though it is entirely an after judgment and an artificial judgment.

Q.—Entirely voluntary that payment was? A.—It was, so far as I was concerned, perfectly so.

And again:—

Q.—It never occurred to you, then, that the payment of this money, which gave you so much joy in it, was black-mail until you had a lawyer tell you of it? A.—I was fought with and actually beaten into the use of the term. I defended Mr. Moulton up and down, and said he had no thought of the kind. I would not believe it of him, and it was in subsequent conferences that they made me. I was made ashamed of my simplicity—that is, they told me I was green.

In most cases of black-mail, it is generally the black-mailed person who first finds out, by bitter experience, that he has been victimized, and then he goes to the lawyers to get advice as to some means of saving himself. In this case the money was paid "with joy," and it required two lawyers to discover that it was really a black-mailing operation.

3. That the charge was the result of a conspiracy. But there must be an animus shown before such a theory can be established, and no successful, or even serious, attempt of the kind has been made. Mr. and Mrs. Moulton had no motive for desiring to injure Mr. Beecher. On the contrary, it is clear that they did their best for three or four years to hush the matter up, and Moulton does not hesitate to avow that he "told lies" to shield Beecher during that period, as perhaps most men would have done to save a friend under similar circumstances. The Moultons refused to stand by Mr. Beecher when he denied his own words to them, and then for the first time they were accused of being conspirators. The reward they have met with for endeavoring to shield Mr. Beecher will probably discourage them from attempting anything of that kind in future.

4. That Tilton makes the charge, knowing it to be false. Here, as throughout the case, it is the evidence of Mr. Beecher which overwhelms the defence set up by Mr. Beecher's lawyers. For he admits that Mrs. Tilton did make the charge. When he went to her room on the 20th of December the following scene took place—described by himself in his recent evidence:—

"Elizabeth, he says that you have told him that I had won your affections from him, and that you had transferred the willful affection to me," and that I think it was, though I will not be certain about that matter; the tears ran down her cheeks, and she made still no response; I went on and said to her, "Elizabeth, Mr. Tilton says that you have declared to him that I have made improper advances toward you," and she was very much agitated; I said, "Elizabeth, have you ever said that to your husband?" and she bowed her head, and then it was that I spoke to her with more emphasis than I had done.

In his cross-examination by Mr. Fullerton, April 15, he was asked why he did not resent the injury which Mr. Tilton had done to him in making the charge. He answered, "If the charge was a correct one he did not injure me." Surely a most remarkable answer. Presently he said, "My conclusion was that Mr. Tilton had reason for making that charge; that he had evidence of it from his wife." Again—we quote question and answer: "Q.—Then you suppose Mr. Tilton was acting in good faith in making these charges against you? A.—I supposed he had reason to think that I had been a wronger of his family."

One more quotation from evidence which Mr. Beecher's own counsel ought to have read before they persisted in this line of defence:—

Q.—Did you regret it simply as a charge made by Mrs. Tilton? A.—Certainly I did.

Q.—And not as a charge by Theodore Tilton? A.—As a charge that he represented he made from her.

Q.—Did you not understand him as making that charge on his own behalf against you? A.—I had no doubt that he supposed the charge to be as she had written it to him at that time.

It is clear from these admissions of Mr. Beecher himself that he never believed either that Tilton had concocted the charge, or that Mrs. Tilton made it under coercion. In short, he upsets all the ingenious theories put forward by his own lawyers.

5. The fifth answer is that Mrs. Tilton never confessed adultery. Several witnesses swear that she did. And the defendant did not venture to call her, although the plaintiff offered in court to consent to her being called. Presumably, she was a hostile witness to the plaintiff, and had he called her he could not have cross-examined her, and of course the other side would have had no motive for doing so. Therefore, when the plaintiff offered to interpose no objection to receiving her as a witness, he did all that he could do.

6. Mr. Beecher swears he is innocent. This must, of course, be taken into consideration with the fact that several witnesses swear that he repeatedly confessed his guilt to them. In all such situations, it cannot be assumed that one person alone tells the truth, unless he is borne out by a powerful sequence of circumstantial evidence and his own general conduct. It is clear that Mr. Beecher is not so sustained. Putting aside for a moment the testimony of Tilton and the Moultons, there is a witness whose entire credibility no one has impeached. We refer to Mrs. Bradshaw. She declares that Mrs. Tilton admitted the adultery to her, and said if the charge was ever made publicly she would "sacrifice her husband and deny everything." Mrs. Bradshaw reported this statement to Mr. Beecher, and he did not deny the adultery, but merely spoke of Mrs. Tilton as the "poor child." In October, 1873, this lady—for twenty years a member of Plymouth Church—wrote to Mr. Beecher, asking him whether she "must accept Theodore's awful story for the truth." Surely Mr. Beecher ought to have said No, if he had been innocent. But he did not say it. He merely advised Mrs. Bradshaw [letter of Oct. 7, 1873] not to interfere, and added, "Whatever differences have arisen have been amicably adjusted by those most deeply concerned." Now, here was a distinct appeal to him, made by a valued member of his congregation, to deny "Theodore's awful story"—and he refused to do it. These witnesses were substantially unshaken during cross-examination, and all the documents in the case go to the verification of their narratives. There is some doubt about a date in Mrs. Moulton's evidence; but Mr. Beecher admits that he had a long interview with her somewhere about the time alleged, and the actual date is, therefore, of no importance.

7. That Mr. Beecher's remorse arose from his having caused Tilton's dismissal by Bowen. But Bowen swears that this advice did not cause the dismissal in question, and the letters in the case evidently refer to some transaction of a totally different kind. Moreover, Tilton was not dismissed by Bowen until long after he had made the charge against Beecher—so that the charge could not possibly have been prompted by motives of revenge for the dismissal in question.

8. That Mr. Beecher merely advised the separation of the Tiltons. It is sufficient to say in answer to this that no reference to the fact appears in any of his letters or conversations. All that he wrote or said manifestly referred to something of a much more serious and ruinous character. But it must also be stated that Mrs. Tilton herself denies ever having even contemplated separation from her husband. "I indignantly deny," she says (letter of Jan. 4, 1871), "that I ever sought separation from my husband." This is one of the numerous letters which Mr. Beecher's counsel found it more convenient to overlook than to explain.

Such appear to us to be the facts in this melancholy case. That they tell heavily against Mr. Beecher will be universally regretted, for it is a mournful sight to see a great preacher of religion resting even under the suspicion of a dark crime. And for the persons on the other side it is impossible to feel pity or respect. That Tilton should have known of his wife's guilt; that he should have gone on living with her; that he should even have consulted with her alleged seducer as to the paternity of one of her children; and that, finally, he should declare on this very trial that she is a "pure, white-souled woman,"—all this puts him a long way outside of the range of public sympathy. As for the woman who has been the immediate cause of these darkened homes and blighted reputations, she may be dismissed to the general contempt of mankind. A city-full of such women would not be worth the trouble and misery which this one has occasioned. She constructed a form of religion to suit her own circumstances and desires, and easily convinced herself that there was nothing wrong in her breaking her marriage vows, and afterward "sacrificing" her husband. She told her husband that Mr. Beecher knew better than he or she did what was wrong or right. "Mr. Beecher seems to have accurately described her ideas on the subject when he says that she held the belief that she, her husband, and Mr. Beecher might form a sort of triple 'friendship,' and 'indulge all their desires without any infringement of the law of God or the law of morality." She calls it herself a "trinity of friendship." Revolving as such an idea must be to every decent mind, the evidence and letters afford a strong presumption that it was for years entertained by this degraded and worthless woman.

There is only one good result which can possibly follow from this exposure and trial. It may lead people in Brooklyn and elsewhere to distrust the new Gospel of Love, and to allow no priests or ministers to come between husband and wife, or to interfere with family ties, or sully family honor. Lastly, it may induce them to return to the older and safer moorings which alone can prevent society from drifting into chaos. If this should be the fruit of the trial, a scandal which has poisoned the air for six months past will not have been dragged to the light in vain.—New York Times, July 3, 1875.

A COMING STRUGGLE.

One century of self-government in this land is nearly ended. It has been settled that ours shall not be a government of caste,—an aristocracy. It has been settled that the national unity shall be maintained. On the threshold of the second century of independence we find ourselves confronted by a third question, which may yet involve the very existence of the republic.

Thus far, it has not been clearly stated by any party organ, or convention. In fact, in three great States—New York, Ohio, and Missouri—it was by some supposed that the question had been finally disposed of within the last five years, by adoption of constitutional amendments prohibiting division of the school-fund. Yet in each of those States the same question still excites sharp controversy, and seems likely to have an important part in the readjustment of party lines. The admission of parochial schools as part of the public-school system is openly demanded. Sooner or later the broad question must be met, "Whether popular education belongs to the State or to the churches."

It is not well to deceive ourselves with the idea that this issue will be disposed of easily. The opposing beliefs on this subject, held with absolute sincerity by multitudes of people on either side, are quite irreconcilable. No compromise between them is possible. With all the fervor of religious faith, many believe that it is a sin to separate religious instruction from popular education. With not less firmness and fervor of conviction, others believe that self-government cannot continue to exist among us unless free, non-sectarian schools are maintained by the State for the education of all its children. By the latter class, it is held that our only safeguard against the evils incident to a broad extension of suffrage, against the growing power of corrupt combinations, and against the increasing tendency towards communism, is the public secular system of education. But the convictions of the opponents of that system are thus plainly stated in the Catholic Telegraph:—

"There could, therefore, hardly be a more impudent falsehood than the assertion that a public secular system of education does not interfere with the religion of Catholics. . . . The present system of public schools brands the Catholic faith as a crime, and the American State punishes it yearly by fines equal in amount to the sum which Catholics are compelled to expend after the payment of the school-tax upon the Catholic education of their children."

In view of this sharp antagonism of opinion upon a question touching the very existence of free institutions according to one belief, and the religious convictions of millions of citizens according to another, what can we say of the honesty of those who pretend that this issue is "manufactured" for party purposes? Yet this is the subterfuge to which a very large number of Democratic partisan journals resort. Even the St. Louis Republican recently said: "The signs of the times all indicate an intention on the part of the managers of the Republican party to institute a general war against the Catholic Church. . . . Some new crusading cry thus becomes a necessity of existence, and it seems to be decided that the cry of 'No popery' is likely to prove most available. . . . No actual issue calculated to excite the desired feeling being in existence, a fictitious one must be manufactured."

Every one can judge of the honesty of these declarations, who reads the declarations of the Catholic Telegraph already quoted, who remembers the demand for the admission of parochial schools as part of the school-system in this State, who recalls the passage of the Geoghan bill by the Ohio Legislature, and the assurances then publicly given that the adherents of the Catholic Church would help the Democratic party of that State in return, or who remembers the incidents of the recent city election in the very city in which the Republican is published. It will do Republican partisans no good to ignore this question. It will do the Democratic partisans no good to pretend that "no actual issue exists," and that "a fictitious one is manufactured" for partisan ends. Between those who believe that secular education is wrong, and those who believe that it is a necessity to the maintenance of free institutions, there is not only "an actual issue," but one of the very gravest character, which admits of no compromise. By honest men it will be met with the manly candor, and the respect for opposing convictions, which such men ever hold it their duty to show. Only those who have no convictions of their own, will fail to recognize the strength of earnest beliefs in others.

The Democratic party, especially, cannot afford to treat this issue as a fictitious one, manufactured by Republican demagogues. It so happens that every emphatic demand for division of public-school funds, recognition of parochial schools, or abolition of the system of secular education, has come from adherents of the Democratic party. It so happens, too, that many of those who have been most prompt and earnest in resisting these demands have acted with the Democratic party as Liberals. The New York Staats Zeitung, the most widely circulated German Democratic paper in the country, translated and copied a recent letter in this paper, pointing out evidences of Democratic hostility to the school-system at the West, and strongly enforced the lesson by its editorial comments. The Staats Zeitung, of Chicago, and the Volksblatt, of Cincinnati, though still supporting the Democratic party, speak very strongly of its tendencies in this respect. The Westliche Post, of St. Louis, constantly assails that party on the same ground. It will be said that German citizens are moved to especial feeling on this subject by events in Europe; but no one will deny that the feeling exists. Nor will it be denied by any candid man that the great body of independent American voters has quite as strong a feeling on this question. If the Democratic party supplies from its ranks every assault upon secular education and non-sectarian government, and yet professes to regard the whole controversy as a fictitious issue manufactured by its opponents, it will be very likely to forfeit whatever confidence in its sincerity independent voters may have learned to feel.

The Democratic party in Ohio has met this question much more frankly than some others treated in its platform, and so creditably that, but for honest apprehensions previously aroused, it would put that issue quite out of the coming contest. But, while other topics engross immediate attention, friends of the public schools well know that the opposition is one which may slumber, but will not die; and that, sooner or later, the question must be met manfully, candidly, and decisively. It will not be settled by harsh words, or appeals to prejudice. The system of public schools will stand, because its necessity, as the basis of a free government, will be calmly, courteously, but conclusively, demonstrated.—N. Y. Tribune, July 8.

WHEN VOLTAIRE bought of the President de Broses the chateau in which he lived, it was found that in the measurement of the land there was comprised a strip belonging to a farmer named John Panissot, who went to Voltaire to claim his property. The latter would have listened favorably to his demand if he had not been warned that, right or wrong, many farmers surrounding his new purchase were prepared to bring a similar request. Desiring to cut short what he believed to be a pretence, Voltaire rejected the claim, and was arraigned at the tribunal of Gex, where, defended by a lawyer doubtless better than his cause, he non-suited the plaintiff, and was pronounced the owner of the disputed land.

But Panissot determined to appeal from an unjust sentence. As he wanted money for the purpose, he conceived the plan to apply to him against whom he was conducting the suit; and accordingly went to Voltaire's residence, and asked for an interview, which was accorded.

"Ah! is it you, Panissot? What brings you here?"

"My confidence in your uprightness; for I come to beg you to lend me money enough to prosecute my appeal to the court of Dijon from the sentence pronounced at Gex."

"What! do you think that I shall consent to furnish you with arms to fight me, with rods to chastise me?"

"Yes, Monsieur Voltaire; a great man like you, whose works are full of generous sentiments, will understand my confidence in him in this case!"

"But, Panissot, you are attacking my property."

"No, sir, I am reclaiming my own. You doubtless prefer justice to a small bit of land which adds nothing to your fortune, but which lessens my property very much."

Voltaire, surprised at a confidence which honored him, as well as at the firm language of the farmer, acceded to his request, and lent him three hundred francs: The case, carried to the tribunal of Dijon, was lost by Voltaire, who was obliged to grant to Panissot the land he claimed. When the latter came to return the sum borrowed, Voltaire said to him, "Keep it; it will serve to pay the expenses of the first trial at Gex, which you unjustly lost."

THE REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY, in a recent letter from London to the Cincinnati Commercial, says: "Mr. Spurgeon is credited with the following, which if not true, is ben trovato. He is said to have been taken to task by some Sabbatarian, since he has found it necessary to employ a brougham to take him to church. 'But,' he urged, 'I only sit in the carriage—I don't work.' 'Ah! yes, sir,' said the other, 'but your coachman—think of him!' 'Oh! he is a Jew, and keeps the seventh day Sabbath.' 'But your horse?' 'Oh!' said Spurgeon, getting a little impatient, 'he is a Jew too.' This reminds me of another little story going the rounds concerning one of our Broad Church clergymen, who, being recently on an excursion in Scotland, was vehemently rebuked by his landlady for taking a walk on Sunday afternoon. The clergyman said that he could not see the harm, and replied, 'You know that our Lord himself walked with his disciples in the field on the Sabbath day.' 'Ay,' said the old lady, 'ay, I ken it; and I ne'er thoct any the better of him for it neither!'"

"DEPEND upon it, trust me, that the revelations of science are not in the least degree calculated to lessen our feelings of astonishment. We are surrounded by wonders and mysteries everywhere. I have sometimes—not sometimes, but often—in the springtide watched the advance of the sprouting leaves, and of the grass, and of the flowers, and observed the general joy of opening life in Nature; and I have asked myself this question: Can it be that there is no being or thing in Nature that knows more about these matters than I do? Do I in my ignorance represent the highest knowledge of these things existing in this universe? Ladies and gentlemen, the man who puts that question to himself, if he be not a shallow man, if he be a man capable of being penetrated by a profound thought, will never answer the question by professing the creed of Atheism, which has been so lightly attributed to me."—Professor Tyndall.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE TROUT.

At the earliest gleam of the morning beam
I glide through the waters cool,
Through every nook of the crystal brook,
And visit the shady pool.

And whenever the blaze of the sun's bright rays
Scorches the glittering lake,
Secluded I sleep in the arms of the deep,
In the shade of the fringing brake.

I watch the crook in the angler's hook,
And the rod with the golden reel;
And smile as I think, on the river's brink
He may sit till he weary feel.

All unaware, on the startled air,
For the passing fly I leap;
And, like a sprite in the darkness night,
Return to my home in the deep.

I silently glide by the angler's side,
And nibble the quivering fly;
And hear him swear in the upper air,
And laugh till I fairly cry.

I chase the foam in my watery home,
As it floats on the rippling stream;
And all the day, through the misty spray,
I watch the sun's bright gleam.

When the threatening cloud like a funeral shroud
Creeps over the summer sky,
The eagle may scream at the lightning's gleam,
But never I utter a cry;

For safe from all harm where the waters are calm,
Down under the angry wave,
I hear the wind howl, and the thunder growl,
Like the lion in gloomy cave.

Wrecked on the jag of the treacherous snag,
The fisherman's boat is lost;
But little I reck as I watch the deck,
As it sinks by the tempest tossed;

For the wave never rose to over me close,
And the gale never blew down here,
And the storm never beat in my safe retreat,
And nothing have I to fear.

When the breakers rise till they meet the skies,
And the tall ships rock and reel,
I float on the sea with a feeling of glee
That only a trout can feel.

Far out of sight in the azure height
The soaring eagle may rise;
But never I long to warble a song,
Or roam in the treacherous skies.

Whenever the shade of night is laid
On the earth and the waters blue,
I sink to rest in my watery nest,
And sleep till the night is through.

And all the night with her silvery light
The moon is bright in the sky;
At the earliest ray of the dawning day
She fades, but never can die.

When the wintry blast sweeps madly past,
Over the mountain and sea,
With ice roofed o'er from shore to shore,
My watery home shall be.

And never I dream, as I float on the stream,
Of a happier home in the sky;
And never I mourn for a day that is gone,
Or care where I go when I die.

W. A. T.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 31.

Gillett & Company, $2; J. D. Therley, 60 cents; Warren Griswold, $10; Joseph R. Brown, $1.25; Charles Willis, $1; Max Bricker, $3.20; Louis Lowenthal, $3.20; Moses Hays, $3.20; B. Rothchild, $3.20; Thomas Tibbets, $1.60; John Whittaker, $3.20; David Throne, 30 cents; Mrs. E. D. Schull, $1.50; J. P. Welch, $1.60; J. B. Davenport, $3; Jas. Mackenzie, $1.60; Scott Stivers, $3.20; Wm. Gainer, 50 cents; A. P. Creque, $3.30; J. M. Harrison, 45 cents; O. L. Ashenfelter, 30 cents; A. Pope, 25 cents; American News Co., $4.35; A. W. Stevens, $10; B. A. Cleveland, 25 cents; C. H. Ipps, 75 cents; Geo. B. Koener, 10 cents; A. Delahaye, $3; Jos. Miel, $3; H. C. G. Montz, $8; E. Guehlich, $11; Jos. Robbins, $6; S. S. Boner, $6; F. M. Tate, $6; T. S. Howland, $6.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 5, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D.
CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

HERE IS another juicy bit of intelligence which our New Zealand friend contributes to THE INDEX through the kindness of Mr. Voysey: "A Congregationalist wrote to one of the Melbourne papers to call attention to the harmony prevailing among the ministers of that sect. This he attributed to the facilities afforded by their system for 'shunting' any minister that did not give satisfaction to the rest. What becomes of the unfortunate members 'shunted,' the writer does not state." Not being familiar with the special slang of the Australian clergy, we must leave our readers in ignorance as to the precise nature of "shunting"; but it is clear that they adopt the method of the great warrior who "made a desolation, and called it peace."

COURAGE and candor are always admirable, and the New York Liberal Christian earned high praise for these qualities, when it said, referring to "God, Duty, and the Immortal Life": "As we believe these three doctrines to be not only in themselves true and beneficent, but also essential parts of Christianity, we are now ready to say without qualification that the function of the Christian minister is inconsistent with absolute freedom. Just in so far as a man denies these doctrines, in so far he is disqualified for an office which implies belief in them." This honorable confession is made editorially in one of the two chief journals of the Unitarian denomination; and it ought to be as frankly and honorably made by the other. Perhaps it will be; we shall see. But meanwhile we must point out that the confession is incomplete. Not only are the three doctrines above named well-recognized limits of freedom among Unitarians, but also the doctrine that Jesus is the Christ is an equally well-recognized limit of it. Why is not this included in the confession? Will the Liberal Christian please explain?

THE FAILURE of Duncan, Sherman, & Co., despite its melancholy aspects, is brilliantly illumined by the sterling integrity and honor of Mr. William Butler Duncan and his partners, to which we would render a heartfelt tribute of admiration. Unexpected and sudden losses led him to examine closely the state of the firm's affairs; and, although he could easily have raised immense sums by using his unshaken credit, he became satisfied that he was really insolvent, and could not do any more business with justice to his creditors. So he firmly and heroically announced his suspension. Mr. S. L. M. Barlow, counsel for the firm, says: "It is probably the first instance within the memory of living man, either in this country or in Europe, that a large house with ample means to pay their current liabilities, and who could have borrowed $10,000,000 on their own unsecured notes, have voluntarily determined not to risk any new engagements, not to issue any more paper, and not to receive any more deposits, because they became satisfied in their own minds of their actual insolvency. In fact, Mr. Duncan said to me just before the failure, 'I am insolvent, and I won't incur another cent's liability.'" Well may the papers declare that "all the leading bankers and brokers unite in praising the action of the firm." The whole country will reëcho their praise of such magnificent integrity, which reflects the noblest glory upon it, and goes far towards obliterating the disgrace of the too frequent contrary conduct of other parties. Let the name of this firm be written with golden letters in the history of American commerce. THE INDEX records their action with exultation and pride, and hopes for unstinted prosperity in the future to these men whose example is a beacon to all that shall come after them.

THE MORAL MISCHIEF OF THE SCANDAL.

There has been so much, loud, and ostentatious lamentation, sometimes apparently for the sake of mere effect, over the "demoralizing tendencies" of the Brooklyn scandal, that the cause of truth may possibly be helped by the expression of some independent views on this subject.

That the scandal has had a demoralizing tendency in some directions, we by no means feel disposed to deny; on the contrary, present indications lead to the opinion that this demoralization is likely to prove greater hereafter than heretofore. But we do not find it exactly where it is found by others.

1. Many have deplored the scandal as tending to lower the tone of public morality, by infringing that silence on certain delicate subjects which is regarded as essential to decency and decorum, by fostering pruriosity of imagination among women and children, and by familiarizing the public with discussions which can have only a harmful moral influence. There have been possibly some slight grounds for such fears as these; but we consider them greatly exaggerated. Very little, comparatively, of the immense outpouring of ink on matters connected with the scandal has been on details of crime or filth. So vast has been the range of the controversy that these details have been quite shoved into the background; and, although the topic has been discussed in general society with a freedom proportioned to the interest it has excited, we believe that it has seldom been accompanied, especially among women, with a more than remote consciousness that a repulsive and ghastly charge lay at the bottom of it. There is no evidence whatever of a lowered tone of public morals; every indication is of a contrary character. The universal pain, horror, and disgust at the thought that so eminent a man as Mr. Beecher should even be charged with so atrocious a crime as adultery,—the evidently universal conclusion that such a crime, if proved, would sink him to infamy just as certainly as it would the obscurest citizen of the land,—the herculean and desperate efforts put forth by the defence to prove him innocent, and the knowledge plainly implied that failure in these efforts would cause the towering reputation of Henry Ward Beecher to snap like a pipe-stem before the resistless rush of public indignation,—all these and similar facts show that public opinion respecting the sanctity of the marriage obligation is in the healthiest possible condition; and, by bringing out this truth with a fresh force so startling and overwhelming, the Brooklyn scandal, instead of weakening, has immensely strengthened the cause of good morals. Adultery may be, and perhaps is, a frequent crime; but nothing is clearer than that the energy of public opinion against it is so terrific that the culprit, however lofty in position or enthroned in fame, has no refuge but in the counterfeiting of innocence. Once more is shown the truth of Rochefoucauld's famous maxim: "Hypocrisy is the homage which vice pays to virtue."

No—we do not in the slightest degree share the feeling of those who wish that the lid of this monstrous scandal had been kept shut forever, with all its concentrated impurity and noisomeness sealed up hermetically in the leaden coffin of secrecy. Such a concealment is impossible. The arts of vice and villainy are not perfect enough to seclude such a corpse. Better, indeed, to endure the uproar and dismay of an exposure which shall end in disinfection than to permit the invisible pestilence to steal forth and smite down without warning those who know not what has poisoned them. The only dangerous evils are the secret ones: out with the truth! Nature is sound and wholesome, and can sweeten anything and everything, if she is only suffered to bring her purifying influences to bear. The deliberate covenanting to pursue a "policy of silence" which was but another name for a conspiracy of lies is enough to damn all concerned; and the sudden explosion of such an infernal-machine in the hands of those who manipulated it, no matter with what temporary damage, is infinitely better than the perpetual peril of the vicinage. The scandal that travels by winks, hints, innuendoes, whispers, stabs in the dark, is more demoralizing than that which is put into plain English, and becomes deodorized by publicity. The dirt being there, it is best to have it openly carted away.

2. Instead, moreover, of deprecating the arraignment and trial of a distinguished clergyman accused of adultery, there is one result of these public proceedings which is especially beneficial at this time, and constitutes cause for mutual congratulation among all friends of good morals. During the last few years the air has been surcharged with a one-sided and deleterious theory of sexual morality which was almost nowhere met with frank consideration, but was allowed to insinuate itself uncontradicted into press, pulpit, and platform utterances to a quite unsuspected extent. We refer to the so-called "free love" theory, which has just been brought to public trial even more conspicuously than Mr. Beecher. The essence of this theory is the assertion of the right of "love" to be absolutely "free" from all restraints, whether considered in its inward nature or its outward manifestations,—consequently, the denial of all obligation of mutual fidelity between husband and wife as such, and the denial both of the duty and the right of society to regulate the marriage relation, as a civil contract which profoundly affects its own most vital interests. It is conveniently forgotten in many quarters that Henry Ward Beecher has the reputation of having been earlier and at least as deeply implicated in the advocacy of this theory as Theodore Tilton ever was, though for politic purposes the defence in the late trial made great capital out of the latter's supposed connection with it. One of its chief apostles, Stephen Pearl Andrews, informed a personal friend of ours (in whose word we have implicit trust) that he himself had advocated this "free love" philosophy in meetings at Mr. Beecher's house some twenty years ago, and that Mr. Beecher had been not only an interested but sympathetic listener. As is well known, the pretext of Mrs. Woodhull's original publication of the scandal was a desire to "compel" Mr. Beecher to come out openly as an advocate of her own cause, of which she claimed him (justly or unjustly) as a secret but timid friend—as, in short, the Nicodemus of the "free love" gospel. How far such statements and claims are based on truth, we do not know; though they harmonize with many other things beyond dispute, which render it by no means improbable that Theodore Tilton, in his earlier intercourse with Mr. Beecher, imbibed opinions which made his mind congenial soil for its subsequent "free love" crop. Be this as it may, however, the Brooklyn scandal was a startling illustration of such results as must necessarily follow from the practical adoption of the "free love" theory; and the Woodhull Weekly accepted it as such, when it declared in its issue of August 8, 1874, that Mrs. Tilton's "tender, loving, womanly concensiveness" to Mr. Beecher was "the best and most beautiful of things, the loveliest and most divine of things which belong to the patrimony of mankind"! When the great oracle of "free love" thus explicitly baptizes adultery as "divine," no adherent of that theory will accuse us of the slightest injustice in treating the scandal as a practical illustration of it. If the world does not share Mrs. Woodhull's admiration of the "beauty" and "divineness" of adultery, it will not be because her theory of it has failed to receive a conspicuous and fair trial, according to her own confession, in the greatest scandal of the century.

Now the general anxiety to see Mr. Beecher clear his skirts of the bare suspicion of having been guilty of this "beautiful" and "divine" crime, and even the extreme readiness of great multitudes to accept as satisfactory his lame and meagre explanations of his own self-inculpatory words, show overwhelmingly how infatuated Mrs. Woodhull was, when she dreamed that Mr. Beecher's open advocacy of her cause, if once secured, would ensure a universal acquiescence in it. No one else, apparently, has been so insane as to suppose that Mr. Beecher, if guilty, could stand for an instant against the torrent of public indignation. His sole escape was the proof of his innocence; and the sole possibility of his self-maintenance in the future lies in the success of the desperate endeavors of himself and friends to persuade the public that the offered proof of his innocence is sound. Even repentance would now avail him nought: the day for that has gone by forever. All this does but show that the "free love" theory, despite the sanguine anticipations of its adherents, has made no appreciable headway; but has rather lost ground. The unveiling of its practical consequences, accepted as such, has destroyed the plausibility of its rhetoric. It has been swamped by its own champions. For the next hundred years, the sufficient reply to it will be the two words—"Brooklyn scandal." So far as this result is concerned, it makes no difference whether Mr. Beecher is innocent or guilty; for in either case the public abhorrence of adultery has been pronounced with an emphasis never to be mistaken or forgotten, while "free love" has justified it as "divine." When Mrs. Woodhull, in flagrant violation of her own principle that the relation of the sexes is solely an individual matter which should never be meddled with by public statute or public opinion, tried to force Mr. Beecher to advocate her cause by dragging his private conduct before this very public opinion which she had always denounced as tyrannous,—when she thereby invoked the aid of tyranny in promoting the cause of “social freedom,” and trampled on her own principle for the sake of policy,—she met the usual fate of those who adopt that course, and precipitated an avalanche of ruin on the gospel she sought to recommend. In all these things are manifold lessons for the world, which the world is not slow to learn. The “free love” theory never met such a Waterloo defeat as the scandal has given it; and into this Waterloo its own champions blindly dragged it.

That there is to-day, then, throughout the community a deeper conviction than ever before that violation of the marriage vow is a crime of the most infamous character, and that the “free love” doctrine which would sanction and divinize this crime is hatefully and horribly false,—for so much ought the Brooklyn scandal to be thanked. In these respects its influence has been anything but “demoralizing,” and has only tended to stiffen the public virtue. But we cannot deny that it tends to work demoralization in other ways, little suspected by those who have been most alarmed by it. Some of these must be briefly mentioned here, because they are not likely to be mentioned elsewhere.

1. The power of great organized interests, of combined monetary, ecclesiastical, social, personal, and other outside influences, to destroy the natural effect of evidence and defeat substantial justice, has scarcely ever been more startlingly illustrated; and its tendency is demoralizing in the extreme. Against such evidence, furnished in its most crushing and withering form by the accused parties themselves, but corroborated and intensified by the unrefuted testimony of three witnesses whom the presiding judge explicitly vindicated from the charge of conspiracy, no other defendant could have stood for a moment. The defendant himself has since boasted, in a manner the reverse of dignified and becoming, that his success (if it can be considered such) is due to the power of his character as an honest and credible man. We do not doubt in the least that a great majority of those who have expressed themselves satisfied of his innocence have done so through sincere conviction, and also that this conviction has been arrived at by other routes than close study of the evidence. A popular preacher like Mr. Beecher elicits from multitudes a blind attachment and confidence, however, which is by no means referable to the genuine influence of character; it is their response to the preacher’s “magnetism” rather than to his known and proved principles of action, and is quite consistent with a total disregard of those tests by which alone character can be determined. The fact that Mr. Beecher’s congregation stand by him unanimously at this crisis is explicable in more ways than one, and will not be allowed to influence the mind which insists on basing its conclusions on the real evidence in the case. We see little to admire in the conduct of a congregation which for four years permits the gravest charges to be made in their midst against their pastor’s moral character, and does not insist on an immediate and thorough investigation; we see in such a policy the predominance of partisanship, of ecclesiastical self-interest, of anything except that spirit which alone could entitle their championship to the respect of high-minded men. Still less weight belongs to the conclusions of the outside multitude whose impressions of Mr. Beecher’s character are derived chiefly from his published sermons. It is what a man does, not what he says, that constitutes the real basis for an intelligent estimate of character; and a careful study of Mr. Beecher’s conduct, as disclosed in the evidence, must so lower the estimate to which his character is justly entitled that no clear-headed man will, merely on account of it, dismiss the accusation as necessarily false. Give character its just weight; but do not confound character with popularity. If Mr. Beecher had acted with self-respect, courage, truthfulness, integrity, honor, all through this unhappy business, no one would be more willing than we to regard this proved character as an impregnable defence against assault; but because the reverse is unfortunately true, we find it impossible to regard the passionate devotion of thousands to his cause as a real triumph of fundamental character over calumny. It is too plainly a triumph of blind personal partisanship, of ecclesiastical and social and business interests, of a thousand mixed motives, some honorable and some dishonorable, over truth and justice; and this fact is discouraging to all who believe that society has no interests so inexpressibly precious and sacred as these. Here lies a fruitful source of real and dangerous demoralization; for nothing so wounds or damages the moral sense of mankind as to see falsehood triumph over truth, and iniquity in high places crowned with laurels.

2. But this is not all. Unpleasant as it has been to write what is already written, something even more unpleasant remains to be written still. Since the trial has ended, there has been an apparent effort to overawe and bully the public mind into the opinion that the obstinate disagreement of the jury has all the moral effect of an instantaneous and unanimous acquittal. An attempt has been made by powerful social pressure to coerce, as it were, many of the chief clergymen of the country into signing a testimonial or indorsement of Mr. Beecher’s innocence,—carried so far as even to publish in advance some of the signatures expected, and thus to place these ministers in the embarrassing position of either signing under a species of compulsion or else being obliged to refuse conspicuously. A salary of $100,000 has been voted to Mr. Beecher for the year by Plymouth Church, with so much parade and so loud a flourish of trumpets as to force the conclusion that this step is another strategical operation. Public ovations have been made, and others are in prospect, as if the whole nation were a unit in the belief of Mr. Beecher’s innocence. Now it is quite time that the parties (we know not who they are) that have devised these things should be informed that the verdict of the technical jury counts for nothing with intelligent men; that the trial has merely laid the evidence in due form before the real jury, the public; that the verdict of this jury is yet to be rendered, and will probably be slowly formed; that all these ostentatious demonstrations are evidently designed, not to express, but to create the public opinion by which Mr. Beecher must at last stand or fall; and that their inevitable effect is to excite suspicion that his friends do not rely on the evidence at all, but rather on these cheap appeals to mere sensationalism, which will be totally disregarded by all who care for justice and truth. If clamor and stage effects are to decide the issue,—if the policy of persistent vilification and quasi-intimidation are adopted towards all who think Mr. Beecher guilty,—if profession of belief in his innocence is to be made a test of respectability,—it is high time that some independent voices should be heard. Let it be distinctly said that Mr. Beecher’s defence on the trial was insufficient, and cannot be made sufficient by claptrap. Nothing could be more demoralizing than the success of a brazen attempt to browbeat the public intelligence, and carry it by storm against the facts. If the force of these facts cannot be broken before the tribunal of reason, it concerns the cause of public morality that a protest should be made.

And that is why we have spoken. It is with profound reluctance that, believing Mr. Beecher to have been proved guilty by the facts, we have felt compelled by a sense of public responsibility to point out the real demoralization threatened by this wretched scandal. The spectacle of permanently triumphant guilt, and the success of the endeavor to overawe public opinion into paying it homage, would do more to lower the tone of public morality than any amount of scandal literature. It would not surprise, though it would certainly grieve us, to find that this article has cost THE INDEX more than one staunch friend; for more than one of its friends are numbered also among the friends of Mr. Beecher. But THE INDEX was started to promote the cause of truth and virtue, and it must make any sacrifice which this cause renders inevitable. What has been said here has not been said in malice or ill-will or levity, but with a deep desire to discharge faithfully the duty of the hour; and to any who may be offended or aggrieved, we can only say: “Do your duty too, and support such influences alone as shall help you to do it.”

EUTHANASIA.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.:

My Dear Sir,—THE INDEX of June 17, yesterday received by me, contains an essay from the honored pen of O. B. Frothingham, in which my name is mentioned by him, probably for honor. Yet I think what he says is inaccurate. I cannot remember that I have more than once given utterance concerning Euthanasia. Mr. Lionel Tollemache elicited from me a private letter, not intended for the public eye. He asked leave to print it, and I assented, knowing no reason to the contrary. I had no copy of it, nor can I find that I anywhere have his printed article which contained it; therefore I cannot now refer to it, and must write from memory; also, from knowing accurately what has long been my fixed opinion.

I hold that in extreme cases the prima facie arguments justifying a merciful extinction of life are very powerful; but to admit this into the code of morals, without full, free, and fair deliberation, does not approve itself to me. The danger of abuse is evident. It does not seem to me at all difficult to guard against abuse; but I would have nothing stealthy, and earnestly claim debate. The cases which I adduced from men in the wilderness had no similarity at all to the monstrous cases which “O. B. F.” quotes concerning Fiji; of which I had not heard. As well should I quote Herodotus’ report of people who eat their parents when they think they have lived long enough, though the parents resist and implore. I believe I said, I am aware that there are persons (thoughtful and well informed) who deplore our extreme and superstitious reverence for human life, when life is worse than death, who yet conceal their judgments from fear of public odium. The only conclusion that I remember to have drawn is, that the matter ought to be freely discussed. For this I have been assailed with an acrimony that quite surprises me. The editor of an Evangelical organ only recently said of me, “F. W. Newman is a most dangerous man; he is a theist, and teaches that it is right to murder sick people.” So much the more do I say, the matter ought to be freely discussed. Until that is done, and we have heard calmly the whole of the other side from men who are not fanatical, I could not act upon my own provisional opinion. We want the collective opinion of the most enlightened men on such a matter.

Yours sincerely,

F. W. NEWMAN.

WESTON SUPER MARE, July 14, 1875.

EDUCATIONAL.

Among the late circulars of the Bureau of Education is a very interesting pamphlet, containing “An Account of the Systems of Public Instruction in Belgium, Russia, Turkey, Servia, and Egypt.”

It is extremely gratifying to see the work thus being done for the education of the people in all these countries, so different in origin, government, and religion. The government of Russia seems to have accepted the idea as fully as ourselves, that universal education is the true method of developing the intellectual and moral as well as physical resources of the country. To meet the wants of the wandering tribes of Russia, a novel institution is established, by which any person opening a school in the Steppes, and obtaining twenty scholars, may draw a salary from the government. He loses his position at the end of three years, if his scholars do not show satisfactory progress; and he receives a small reward for every scholar who passes the examination for a higher division. The system of Norway is also recommended for imitation. Here the schoolmaster goes from one district to another, perhaps remaining three months in a place, and giving such instruction as he is able in that time. As the population are thus nearly all taught to read and write, the mother can supervise the children’s studies; so that they, at least, do not forget everything before the teacher comes round again. Perhaps some such system might meet the needs of the scattered population of our Southern States, where an expensive school-system seems at present to be unattainable.

But the most interesting articles are those from the Revue de deux Mondes on “Education in Turkey,” and one compiled from L’Instruction Publique en Egypte. Here the differences of religion come in to complicate the questions of education; and it is curious to see what a mongrel mixture there is in Turkey. When the French established the Lyceum at Galata Serai, they were obliged to conciliate the differing interests and prejudices of seven differing nationalities and religions among the pupils. The different ablutions and fasts of the Koran, the various kinds of food prohibited by Jew, Mohammedan, and Catholic, the different means of computing time, and the three weekly holidays—Friday for the Turks, Saturday for the Jews, and Sunday for the Christians—must have made school and housekeeping arrangements equally difficult.

Even among the teachers jealousies arose, and the Roman Catholics refused to have their religious rites administered in a Mohammedan country, and the Pope forbade Catholics to send their children to the school under penalty of refusal of the sacrament.

The writer says: "It will be interesting to know what nationalities and creeds furnished the most intelligent and best-behaved children. From this two-fold point of view, the Bulgarians invariably held the first rank; after them, the Armenians; then the Turks, the Jews, and, last of all, I regret to say, the Roman Catholics. The Greeks, with a few honorable exceptions, were badly behaved." A jealousy of the French influence, and its decline after the disastrous Franco-German war, seems to have destroyed the prospects of this school, which still lives, but on a much smaller scale.

All these writers confess that the efforts of missionaries to convert Mohammedans have been entirely fruitless, and that Christians can obtain power with them only by means of education. The Mohammedans show much more tolerance in this respect than the Catholics. Mr. Eaton says: "The armor of the Mohammedans and of other hostile communities was vulnerable only through science. . . . Parents love their children, and wish their advancement. Young men see the way to their success in life through education. They pursue education as a means of power and influence. This light and expansion disenthral the mind from ignorance, from old and dark systems; systems that will not bear the light must go to the wall."

This peaceful propagandism of science will help to bring all nations into truer and more peaceful relations; and so not conversion, but communion, will be brought about, and a sympathy of origin and a unity of aim be detected in all the living religions of the world.

E. D. C.

Communications.

RESTITUTION TO MILTON.

BOSTON, July 17, 1875.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

In your article in THE INDEX of July 15, on "Force and Feebleness," which I like extremely—so much so that I preserve it in my scrap-book,—you attribute to Dr. Maudsley the saying, "To be weak is to be miserable." Milton started this saying in his Paradise Lost, and it belongs to him by "right divine." It is altogether too big thunder to steal—or to attribute to a fourth-rate doctor.

Very truly yours,

F. BECK.

[We remembered that Dr. Maudsley—who, by the way, can only be rated "fourth-rate" in joke—quoted the saying; but we forgot from whom he quoted it, and referred it to him rather than steal it ourself. Our acknowledgments are due to our correspondents who have kindly hastened to supply the defect of our memory; though we are a little ashamed to have forgotten our Milton so effectually.—ED.]

JOURNEYS TO THE MOON.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, July 19, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

When I was a boy, I wished that it were possible to visit the moon; and even to-day I think it is a great pity that we cannot have any sort of communication with or knowledge of our supposed fellow-citizens in the other planets. But, as I cannot devise any means for arriving at that desirable result, it remains in the shape of an unsatisfactory wish.

I am reminded of this chronic mania of mine every time you give expression to your yearnings after "hard-money." That political platforms should have hard money planks inserted, is natural. They are constructed to catch votes; and, considering the imperfect knowledge, confusion, and ignorance among the masses on questions of political economy, the knowing ones use such bait as will catch the most gudgeons. But it becomes somewhat of a puzzle when we attempt to classify THE INDEX, whether among the "knowing ones" or the "gudgeons"; since, as in my travels to the moon, you merely express the desire of arriving at a specie currency, without hinting at the means of getting there. "Let us resume specie payments" is as easily said as "Let us go to the moon;" and just about as easily executed. And yet, like most reasonable people, I stand ready to be convinced; just as I am ready to turn Mohammedan, if that peripatetic prophet could inspire me with any faith,—or become a Spiritualist, were any spirit kind enough to give me a call.

The Iowa platform says: "Gold and silver are the only reliable and permanent legal tender, and we favor the earliest attainment of a currency convertible with coin; and therefore advocate gradual resumption of specie payments by continuous and steady steps in that direction." Your comment on this is that such an utterance from a Western State is especially encouraging. To an unconverted heathen like me, this is buncombe, politically speaking; and in a scientific and practical sense it is bosh and confusion.

We are informed that there are one hundred and seventy millions of gold in the country. To resume specie payment, we must reduce our eight hundred millions of currency to two hundred millions,—a gentle reduction, or "contraction," of seventy-five per cent. Please crack this nut for us, before we can have faith in your voyage to the moon. There are a few more nuts out of the same basket; but let's see you try your teeth on this one first. If you make a success of this, we shall be inclined to make you a present of the lot, basket and all.

Yours drearily, WERNER BOECKLIN.

[Is Mr. Boecklin so extraordinarily "dreamy" as not to know that every nation that ever tried an irredeemable currency was at last forced to come back to specie payments, and that this great Yankee nation has already in the past accomplished this "journey to the moon"? If he is, he had better wake up; after which, he can crack his own nuts at his leisure.—ED.]

A SHORTER ESSAY ON SELFISHNESS.

In THE INDEX of July 15 appeared an "Essay on Selfishness," which might do harm to unformed characters, if not examined and corrected. Its object was to prove that all men are selfish; and its author tried to do this by showing that a great many motives under which we act originate in self-interest. This way would never lead to his conclusion, unless it accounted for all possible motives. So long as one remained not so accounted for, his case would be unproved. His proper course was to state what selfishness is, and then to show that it covers all human motives. Now allow me to show that he by no means does this.

Selfishness is a state of mind in which we think or feel or act in reference to ourselves rather than in reference to others. Consideration of self is not necessarily selfish, but to be so must be accompanied by neglect of or injury to others. Where others are not concerned, there can be no selfishness. To aim at excellence in life and character from a desire to improve one's nature to the very utmost is not of itself selfish; but to think so much about self-culture as to neglect one's neighbors is so. It is selfish to devote time and money to secure my own salvation so long, but only so long, as a poor man remains whom I might by that money and time relieve. The care of health is not selfish until it becomes greater than is necessary, and sacrifices opportunities of helping others. There is nothing selfish in the desire to save one's life, unless doing so involves injury to others. The writer of the article referred to is wrong in saying that eating and drinking are "selfish qualities." There is no element of selfishness in either until the indulgence of the desire is inconsistent with our duty to somebody else. It would be simply an abuse of language to say that John Brown acted selfishly, when he took a glass of water before leaving his prison cell for the gallows. Nor does it improve the matter to say that selfishness is sometimes proper, for selfishness is an undue regard to self, and what is undue can never be proper. We must use words as other people understand them, if we mean to be understood, and we must use them only in one sense at a time. I have adopted the ordinary dictionary meaning, and see nothing but confusion in trying to make the word signify something else. If your writer had taken this course, he never would have said that it was his "conviction that man is at all times and under all conceivable circumstances selfish." It is wrong to human nature to decry it by the use of loose language. Man is by no means selfish. His greatest happiness is not in consulting his own interest. His greatest happiness cannot be reached by selfishness, but can be reached only by renunciation of self. To give one's self away for others is man's greatest art, and to take from others is his degradation. The Golden Rule is a guide in doubtful cases of morals, and has for its object the performance of our duty to others, and has no reference to self. If philanthropy acts from regard to self, it is no longer what it calls itself, but is something else.

As I am only a man, I do not know how mothers love their children as continuations of themselves; but I do know that fathers love their children to the utter sacrifice of everything but the desire of their welfare. That selfishness of mothers and fathers, as between them and their children, may be found is certain; but that it is the rarest of exceptions is no less true. Sympathy, too, your writer says, is selfish. The heart beats quickly at the story of starving families; we weep at the tears of children at the grave; we suffer with the oppressed and neglected prisoner,—and your writer calls this selfishness!

Now, in my view, Mr. Abbot, there is nothing but harm in the publication of such wrong conclusions. Man's nature is your nature and mine, and that of the world about us. Why allow it to be disparaged, and let people think less honorably of themselves than they have a right to do? Has the nobility of the past gained for us no immunity? Have the countless workers toiled away generation after generation for those they loved—have the best and the bravest dotted the course of time with their lives of sacrifice—has the earth been enriched with young blood of patriots and the ashes of martyrs, and have thousands of Calvaries of self-renunciation displayed the dignity of humanity all over the world,—and yet must we be liable to have our nature always vilified, our humanity proved to be "at all times and under all conceivable circumstances selfish," whenever any one thinks proper? I may be wrong, but to me such an article as that I have been criticising seems none the less for its conscientiousness to be positively immoral in tendency.

W. C. R.

ITHACA, N. Y.

[On the general subject discussed, we wholly agree with Professor R., and believe as strongly as he does in the reality and frequency of genuine unselfishness.

But, as usual, we forbear to make our own convictions the test of what should be published; and we gave place to the essay criticised, not at all because we sympathized with it, but because we thought that so bold a presentation of a theory practised by very many would be sure to call out a presentation of the other side from some generous-spirited writer like our correspondent. His article is a fresh proof of the wisdom of free speech, even in defence of theories essentially immoral.—ED.]

THE CONTEMPTIBLE POSITION OF THE FREE-THINKING ELEMENT IN ENGLISH AND AMERICAN SOCIETY.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I have waited to see whether you, or some of the numerous and able contributors of THE INDEX, would notice the letter recently addressed by Hon. W. E. Gladstone to M. Emile de Laveleye, in regard to the controversy now raging mildly in England, and coming on gradually in the United States, between the claims of the Catholic Church and those who protest against such claims. That part of it which interests free-thinkers is as follows:—

"The last-named error [the idea that any security is afforded to European society against the Ultramontane conspiracy by any system of mere 'negations' in religion] is widely prevalent in England. There is an impression that is not worthy to be called a conviction, but which holds the place of one, that the indifference, scepticism, materialism, and pantheism which for the moment are so fashionable afford among them an effectual defence against vaticanism. But one has truly said that the votaries of vaticanism have three elements of real strength; namely, faith, self-sacrifice, and the spirit of continuity. None of the three are to be found in any of the negative systems, and you have justly and forcibly pointed out that these systems, through the feelings of repugnance and alarm they excite in many religious minds, are effectual allies of the Romanism of the day."

Now by the terms indifference, scepticism, etc., we may understand all that sentiment, whether in Europe or America, that is opposed to the claims of the Church, Catholic or Protestant. For, as the Rev. Jesse H. Jones says, in THE INDEX of July 15, "The Church always and every where has rightly been an aggressive, overcoming power, moving with all the energy at its command to supplant every other religion on the globe."

Of this anti-church sentiment Mr. Gladstone says, first, that it is momentary, ephemeral—"for the moment so fashionable." Then, he says that it lacks all of the three elements of real strength; faith, self-sacrifice, and the spirit of continuity. Then, further, Mr. Gladstone alleges that these negative systems, by which he means the anti-church sentiment, through the feelings of repugnance and alarm they excite in many religious minds, are effectual allies of the Romanism of the day.

Now am I not warranted in saying, as I do in the heading of this communication, that the position of the anti-church sentiment is a contemptible one, when such a man as Gladstone speaks of it in the way he does, as inane and powerless except as an ally to the Roman Catholic Church? In a world full of positive truths in all the departments of human inquiry, and when human society is suffering for the application of those truths to its present condition, are not those men contemptible who can satisfy themselves with the utterance of mere negations? The Churchman, armed from head to foot like a soldier, by dint of the positiveness of his creed, backs the poor unarmed sceptic into a corner, where, with the blush of shame, tempered by the pallor of cowardice, he wastes his breath in simply negating, denying the affirmations of his conqueror. Why on earth does he not turn upon the Churchman, and, seizing some positive weapons from the armory of truth, put him to ignominious flight? In the name of God, are there no positive truths in the universe the utterance and practical carrying out of which society needs? Would it not be worth while in our own country to combine for the preservation intact of the provision of the constitution separating the State from the adulterous embrace of the Church, and to cause all the State governments to guide their legislation by this landmark? The equal taxation of church property, the secularization of the common schools, the spreading broadcast among the people of the results of scientific research as they bear upon the subject of religion, the repeal of all Sunday laws,—are not these all grand objects worthy of the combined efforts of Radicals to secure? Was there ever a field whiter for the harvest than that now waving in this country? Was there ever a time when fair and calm discussion through printed speech opened so many blind eyes, and emancipated so many from the galling bonds of superstition? The Church itself is permeated with scepticism which is fearful and discouraged, because it has no home to which it can flee, and where it may grow into positive affirmations of truth full of beneficence.

But Mr. Gladstone says, in withering scorn, that this anti-church, radical sentiment, capable of so much good if it were embodied in the persons and efforts of good men, is only a momentary ebullition, which, although for the nonce fashionable in England, and moderately so in this country, will soon subside. It has no faith, no self-sacrifice, and no spirit of continuity. As it has appeared in every century since the Christian era, so it appears now, only to disappear before the onward march of the Church. It has no cohesiveness. It is a sad heap. It has not the quality of being welded. On account of its excessive individualism it is powerless except to blab and blather, each man in his own way, and on his own account. It throws paper wads on Sunday from the windows of lecture-rooms at the chariot of salvation as it rolls along, while wife and children are at the church and Sunday-school, giving liberally of its earnings to grease the wheels of the ponderous machine! By alarming the fears of the church-bigots with their irreverent babblings, it really aids the cause of Popery, and is an obstacle to the world's progress!

If anything could shame the Radicals of this country out of their negatory and nugatory position, it seems to me this contemptuous treatment of them by Mr. Gladstone would do so. Embracing so much ability, wealth, and moral power, they are able, if they would only combine, to set a-going reformatory measures which would redeem the souls of men from the bondage of superstition, and make their homes the abodes of peace and contentment. The Church sends out her missionaries into the highways and hedges, and, wherever she can make a score of converts, or half the number, she organizes them into a congregation, officered by self-denying teachers, whose grand motive is the craven fear of an angry devil and a burning hell. The Radicals, with the whole field of positive knowledge at their command constantly enlarging in every direction, and with the exaltation of human nature as a motive, are utterly destitute of the missionary spirit, and are isolated, helpless, and the object of scorn to all Christendom. When things are to be done which tax too much the efforts of the individual, men combine their energies for the purpose. But the Radicals, as if smitten by judicial blindness, seem to think that desirable things can be done by the mysterious process of evolution, without any persons in particular doing them!

A. B. B.

[We cannot help seeing and saying that this article does but tell the unpalatable truth. We Radicals are always ready to discuss, to debate, to talk; but when the practical application of our principles is pointed out to us in the complete secularization of the State, and the complete removal of the fetters imposed on it by the Church, we walk off with our hands in our pockets like the policemen in "Humpty Dumpty." We see "no danger yet,"—have a thousand reasons for inaction; but, like Mr. Gladstone, all the Church people see that we do not care enough for our principles to advance them, and despise us all accordingly. We wish we could escape the humiliating consciousness that the contempt is richly deserved.—ED.]

VITALITY OF OLD SUPERSTITIONS.

I think Mr. Voysey's London Letter, published in THE INDEX of June 10, contains some very pertinent suggestions for those who labor to promote the advancement of rational religion. That it is pleasanter to soar to the heights of natural religion, and contemplate the triumphant march of new truths, than to enter the haunts of ignorance and superstition, and attack the old phantoms of error that still lurk in the traditional beliefs of the masses of mankind, all readers of THE INDEX doubtless realize. It would be delightful to forget the old monsters of superstition, if in forgetting them we did not leave others in the thrall of those horrid fears from which we may have escaped. But by ignoring the dogmas of the Church in which we were indoctrinated, we do not check the teaching of these baleful superstitions, nor banish the gloomy shadow which they have cast over hearts that would gladly enjoy the light of a more rational and sunny faith.

The old doctrines of "Total Depravity," "Personal Devil," and "Eternal Hell," do live in the religious beliefs of the majority of our uncultured people, and they exhibit a vitality which does not indicate that they are on the point of extinction. I should like to see some of those radicals who treat these beliefs as though they were extinct, come into Southwest Missouri, and advocate free-thought in religion for a short time. They would not have to hunt for the fossil remains of these old Orthodox tenets in antiquated theological works, but would find them still maintaining the "struggle for existence" with a vigor which would astonish and disconcert them.

I sometimes feel that THE INDEX, though a gospel of comfort and hope to some of the strong, matured disciples of Free Religion, is beyond the wants of many of the younger pupils of the free-thinking school who are not yet fully emancipated from the impressions of an "Orthodox" education. I may be attributing my own weakness to others in this conclusion, for I frankly admit that, having been bred under the constant teaching of the most rigid Orthodoxy, and having taken every step in the direction of free-thought under the "fiery" denunciations of those who claimed to be commissioned to "declare the way of eternal life," I have not yet attained the complete emancipation from the influence of those early impressions which I desire. At times I can rise upward toward the grand, ideal faith of some of THE INDEX writers, and almost forget the religious superstitions that were inculcated by the "ministers of Zion" who used to present the "terms of grace" to my "fallen and depraved nature." But I do not enjoy this lofty and serene faith long before I am again confronted by the old Orthodoxy, and entangled in the perplexities of the inspiration of the Bible, the Christian Atonement, etc.

I am aware that I am not establishing any valid claims to the crown of a philosophical hero in making this confession of weakness; but I decline an unmerited honor. Let those who were born with a vigor of mind, inherited from a free-thinking ancestry, and who have always breathed the bracing atmosphere of intellectual freedom, boast of a mental peace that is never disturbed by perplexing doubts; if the ripper years of thought shall bring that boon to me, I shall be too happy to consider it dearly bought, even at the expense of the mental anguish I have suffered. But until that happy state of mind is attained, I cannot cry, "Peace, peace," when there is "no peace." Not all are philosophers; from their defective hereditary character and education not all could be. Perhaps we who have been forced into a state of religious orphanage, and to whom Free Religion can never become a direct foster-parent, on account of our isolated lives, shall never know the philosophical complaisance which the natural children of free thought enjoy. But if we cannot acquire the hardihood of a Darwin in investigating the problems of our age, we can have our courage strengthened by having the old dogmas that still seek to fetter our minds crushed by the logic of modern science; and this is the assistance that many of the weaker readers of THE INDEX, I believe, need. They need to have, as Mr. Voysey says, the absurdity of the first principles of Orthodoxy exposed, and the rudiments of a more rational religion unfolded.

If from my own exceptional and immature mental state I have made puerile suggestions, the magnanimous INDEX and its generous readers will forgive my weakness by remembering that the fellowship of religious belief that makes us strong and zealous has never come to my support, except through the medium of Free Religious writings.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo.

"ON MIRACLES AND MODERN SPIRITUALISM."

The above heading is the title to Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace's last work.

It will be remembered that the theory of natural selection was given to the world by Darwin and Wallace at the same time. Since then, the question has not unfrequently been asked, how far Mr. Wallace's investigations on the subject of Spiritualism may have modified his former views.

In the preface to the work alluded to above, Mr. Wallace, in a manner which cannot fail to interest Materialists as well as Spiritualists, refers to this; "to the causes which led me to accept Spiritualism," and to a statement made "as to its incompatibility with natural selection."

The entire work should be read by all who have so far confined their criticism of Spiritualism to the frauds perpetrated by mediums here and there; for it is lamentably true that criticism has too often gone no farther than the ridicule of circles made up of weak, excitable minds, whose testimony would leave one in doubt as to whether they kicked the table or the table kicked them.

Surely honest, intelligent criticism can find a broader field in Spiritualism than this for work. The frauds are well watched. A goodly army is enlisted in that service. When will the scientific investigations of this subject, such as Prof. Wm. Crookes has made during the past year, invite attention? Scientific tests have been given at the residence of Prof. Crookes within the past six months, as satisfactory to the scientists, philosophers, professors, and Fellows of the Royal Society who witnessed them, as were the recent tests which demonstrated what is at present called Prof. Crookes' new discovery regarding light and mechanical action.

For this last discovery the world pays the Professor unmeasured homage; but for his patient investigations in Spiritualism scarcely a word of praise or gratitude. The religious journals have been notably silent regarding these investigations, with the exception of a bitter attack now and then, which showed a most superficial examination of the subject. Christians with the most jealous care will protect the Bible miracles of eighteen hundred years ago; but any proofs of like occurrences to-day they regard with the most belligerent attitude.

But to return to Mr. Wallace's new work. The following quotation from the preface, which I find in the Boston Spiritual Scientist of June 10, simply alludes to the points referred to at the commencement of this article. For the treatise on miracles, reference must be made to the book itself:—

"It has been charged upon Mr. Wallace that his divergence from some of the views of Mr. Darwin arises from his belief in Spiritualism. We quote that part of the preface in which Mr. Wallace notices and effectually disposes of this charge:—

"From the age of fourteen I lived with an elder brother, of advanced liberal and philosophical opinions, and I soon lost (and have never since regained) all capacity of being affected in my judgments either by clerical influence or religious prejudice. Up to the time when I first became acquainted with the facts of Spiritualism, I was a confirmed philosophical sceptic, rejoicing in the works of Voltaire, Strauss, and Carl Vogt, and an ardent admirer (as I am still) of Herbert Spencer. I was so thorough and confirmed a materialist that I could not at that time find a place in my mind for the conception of spiritual existence, or for any other agencies in the universe than matter and force. Facts, however, are stubborn things. My curiosity was at first excited by some slight but inexplicable phenomena occurring in a friend's family, and my desire for knowledge and love of truth forced me to continue the inquiry. The facts became more and more assured, more and more varied, more and more removed from anything that modern science taught or modern philosophy speculated on. The facts beat me. They compelled me to accept them, as facts, long before I could accept the spiritual explanation of them; there was at that time 'no place in my fabric of thought into which it could be fitted.' By slow degrees a place was made; but it was made, not by any preconceived or theoretical opinions, but by continuous action of fact after fact, which could not be got rid of in any other way. So much for Mr. Anton Dohrn's theory of the causes that led me to accept Spiritualism. Let us now consider the statement as to its incompatibility with natural selection.

"Having, as above indicated, been led, by a strict induction from facts, to a belief—(1) in the existence of a number of preterhuman intelligences of various grades; and (2) that some of these intelligences, although usually invisible and intangible to us, can and do act on matter, and do influence our minds,—I am truly following a strictly logical and scientific course, in seeing how far this doctrine will allow us to account for some of those residual phenomena which natural selection alone will explain. In the tenth chapter of my Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection, I have pointed out what I consider to be some of these residual phenomena; and I have suggested that they may be due to the action of some of the various intelligences above referred to. This view was, however, put forward with hesitation, and I myself suggested difficulties in the way of its acceptance; but I maintained, and still maintain, that it is one which is logically tenable, and is in no way inconsistent with a thorough acceptance of the grand doctrine of evolution, through natural selection, although implying (as indeed many of the chief supporters of that doctrine admit) that it is not the all-powerful, all-sufficient, and only cause of the development of organic forms."

And yet of such patient, untiring investigators some brother man, with "an air of restrained omniscience," remarks: "These men have surrendered their judgments to foolish dreams, otherwise appearing to be within the bounds of sanity."

How fortunate that the possibilities of the universe are not limited to the feeble vision of such lazy critics!

NEW ORLEANS, July, 1875.

MISSOURI NEWS ITEMS.

OSCEOLA, Mo., July 6, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

A few words in regard to the progress of free thought in this section of the country may be of some interest to you and the numerous readers of THE INDEX. I cannot give a very cheering report. The Liberal League of this place is virtually defunct. That it affected considerable good, while an active organization, there can be no doubt. However, there is some hope of the League being reorganized on a more permanent basis. Some time ago, a number of young ladies and gentlemen formed the Philomathean and Conversational Club. The chief object of this club was, briefly, "the acquisition of rational knowledge." Though not a club devoted to the propagation of free-thought, the probabilities were that it would accomplish some good in this respect. While a majority of the members were Orthodox believers, there were a few free-thinkers also, and there appeared to be a willingness to allow expression of the most advanced thought. Annoying to relate, the willingness was purely phenomenal. At present this club is not in active existence. It adjourned indefinitely. Possibly it may be resurrected. Lack of any interest in intellectual pursuits is very prevalent among the people of this section of the country. But little can be expected of persons who subordinate thought to the trivial and contemptible pleasures and amusements of fashionable life. If Alcott or Emerson were delivering a lecture in this place, and at the same time a tenth-class circus was exhibiting on the common, the philosopher would not have an audience of half a dozen, while the vulgar performances of the showman would be viewed by an immense crowd. It is almost superfluous to remark that the philosopher's audience would not be increased by the absence of the circus. It is to be hoped that the gradual diffusion of ideas will effect a change in the sentiments of the people. Hoping to be able to write a more encouraging letter the next time,

I remain, yours respectfully,
THOS. M. JOHNSON.

PRECEPT AND NOT PRACTICE.—According to a letter in the London Times signed by Mr. J. H. James, the Religious Tract Society needs the instruction to be gathered from some of its tiresome publications. In 1852, Miss Anne Maury, an American lady, published a book called the Memoirs of a Huguenot Family, which proved very successful. The Religious Tract Society thereupon, without communicating with the author, republished under the same name two-thirds of the book, unaltered, and sold it at half price, so killing the demand for the original. Though aware that she had no legal redress, Miss Maury, thinking a religious society would be honest rather than a secular one, asked for compensation, and received a refusal; the secretary alleging, among other excuses, all unfounded, that the practice of American publishers in stealing English copyrights "did not suggest to the society the duty of making terms" with the American author. In other words, the society thinks that its breach of the Christian rule which forbids retaliation justifies or palliates a breach of the eighth commandment. The secretary ought to have his own tracts read to him steadily for a month, keeping awake the while.—London Spectator.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents 2 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. HIGGINSON, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. WASSON on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. WASSON on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. CHENEY on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. HIGGINSON on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. CHANNING on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. POTTER on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. CHADWICK on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. MILLS on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. HIGGINSON, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and HIGGINSON of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. WASSON.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. CHANNING. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. POTTER. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. PARTON. 10 cents, singly; package of ten 60 cents; of one hundred, $5.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 6 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Family.....	1.00
Comic Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	5.00
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by Fyfe, Helmholtz, Maxwell, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Part I. of Miscellaneous. In two parts. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	1.50
Romola.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.50
Felix Holt.....	1.50
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.25
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	1.25
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Positive Aesthetics.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	6.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Town Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Old-Town Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	2.00
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Cooperation of Energy. By Edward Stewart, with an Appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Acromyotia. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English by James and Elizabeth Jowett, with an Appendix containing by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.) What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	.75
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	2.00
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.50
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union. Essays towards the Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truhy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Heged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Penderennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
End of the World and the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 12.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Deeds, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II., IV., and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage up the Nile.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunderings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	5.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF— THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 26 Bromfield St., Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,

BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

SPIRITUALISTS' AND LIBERALISTS'

SECOND ANNUAL

Camp-Meeting and Picnic,

AT LAKE PLEASANT, MONTAGUE, MASS.,

August 4 to August 30, 1875.

TENTS will be ready on the 4th. Prices, $10 for four weeks, $8 for three weeks. Advance payments.

PUBLIC EXERCISES begin on Sunday, the 8th. Address each week-day, at 11.30 P.M. Conference, Mondays. Two addresses Sundays, and a Sacred Concert of Music by the band.

PICNIC DAYS will be Thursdays. DANCING afternoons and evenings (Sundays excepted). Music by Russell's Orchestra.

MUSIC.—The Fitchburg Band and Russell's Orchestra of 20 pieces will arrive on the 12th, and will remain till August 30th. A choir of singers will give vocal music assisted by J. Frank Baxter, of Plymouth.

RAILROAD FARES.—Call for Lake Pleasant Camp-meeting tickets, to which are attached free return tickets.

EXCURSION TRAINS will run on Sundays, 15th, 22d, 29th, from Springfield, Hoosac Tunnel, and Fitchburg. Special train from Boston on the 15th.

BOARDING.—Mr. Dunklee, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Austin, of Springfield, will furnish table-board for $6.00 per week.

THE NEWEST AND THE BEST MUSIC BOOKS!

Song Monarch. The BEST book for Singing-Schools, for which it is specially designed, and filled with cheerful glees and songs for practice, by H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON. Price 75 cents.

Chorus Choir. The NEWEST book of Choruses, Anthems, Motets, etc., for Choirs and Societies. Highly recommended. Compiled by Dr. Eben Tourjée. $18 per doz.

The following three books are in press, and nearly ready. Wait for them!

High School Choir. The BEST NEW book for High Schools, successor to that universal favorite, the "Hour of Singing," which it resembles in general arrangement, and is by the same authors, L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Price $1.00.

The Shining River. A new Sabbath-school Song Book of startling beauty. Price 35 cents.

Living Waters. Choice devotional music, hymns and tunes. For Prayer-meetings, etc. Price 30 cents.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10 A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 12, 1875.

WHOLE No. 294.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, undilatingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

SHOULD NOT the official in charge of a lightning express train be known as a lightning conductor?

"RAG-BABY" is the latest name for the inflation mania, though a great deal too respectable. It ought to be called the rag-mon(k)ey.

IT WILL do the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Commissioner no good to sneer at "a Mr. Marsh." He bids fair to prove a very definite article on their hands, and to become "the Mr. Marsh" before long.

THE TERRIBLE inundations, rains, and tornadoes at the West have inflicted great damage and misery. The sufferers need assistance, and we doubt not will receive it; but at such times sorrows come that no money can alleviate. Kind words may sometimes do what dollars cannot.

THE NEW YORK Commercial Advertiser having remarked: "Population of New York—1,064,272. Boston and Philadelphia, put that in your pipes and smoke it, will you?" the Boston Journal feels called upon to reply: "We find it necessary to put some of it in the Tombs now and then."

FREEMASONRY prospers like a green bay tree under the denunciations of the Pope (an "apostate" from the Order!) and the Bishops. The prominent part taken in the Order by the Prince of Wales also contributes to its spread and growth. Persecution and popularity are twins now-a-days.

GENERAL SPINNER, the late Treasurer of the United States, was the son of a German priest and a nun. Although the civil laws of their native land allowed their marriage, the Church forbade it; and therefore, emigrating to America, they settled in New York State, where the General was born.

PRESIDENT WHITE, of Cornell University, when he heard of the triumph of the Cornell crew at the Saratoga regatta, rushed from the dinner-table to the University chimes, kicked the doors in, and pulled at the ropes so vigorously as to disorder the machinery. If he did not, he must blame Harper's Weekly for making us say that he did.

THE LETTER of Mr. Charles O'Connor to Judge Davis, in which he arraigns the New York Court of Appeals for releasing Tweed from merited punishment, may lead to serious consequences. The editor of Harper's Weekly says of its plain recommendation: "This means impeachment." Mr. O'Connor is a man whose spirited and conscientious conduct with regard to all public affairs will render such a recommendation from him a dangerous one to the Court.

A NEW TRIAL of the Beecher-Tilton case is to be had in September, though not a long one, as before. Such, at least, is the announcement. If there is new evidence of an important nature, it is best for all concerned, including the general public, that the real truth of this matter should be known. We are perfectly ready to reverse the judgment we have lately expressed, provided it turns out to be erroneous. But nothing will take the place of evidence.

A BARREL OF FLOUR was recently sent to a prominent New Hampshire politician, who, as is well known, was illegally deprived of his election a few months ago by a quibble as to the spelling of his name. The barrel was addressed at one end to "General Natt Head," and at the other to "Nathaniel Head." It was returned to the sender with this indorsement on the way-bill: "There is no such person as Nathaniel Head to be found in Hookset, and General Natt Head refuses to pay for one end of a barrel of flour. He wants a whole barrel or none."

THE BETTER CLASS of Democratic organs are disgusted with the cry of inflation which has been raised in the ranks of their own party; as shown in this vigorous snubbing administered by the New York World: "This much is certainly due to the recreant managers of the late Ohio Democratic Convention, that we should explain why it is necessary to suppress their heresy violently as a public nuisance, and send to the almshouse the spurious rag-baby which, after a pretended authentic baptism, they have surreptitiously hung to the door-bell of the Democracy, with an anonymous certificate claiming its legitimacy."

THE O'CONNELL CENTENARY at Dublin was captured by the Ultramontanes. The Mayor invited especially such prelates as are under the ban of the German government, and insulted the loyal sentiment of Great Britain by announcing his intention of toasting the Pope before the Queen. Cardinal Ledochowski, in his response, held up the career of the Liberator as a rebuke to all States which cut themselves loose from dogmatic religion, and was understood to reflect on Germany in particular. Great Britain emancipated the Catholics after O'Connell's agitation of twenty years, and seems to have played the part of the man in the fable who warmed the frozen viper in his bosom.

